Sing and Like It

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

A combination of show production, pseudo-gangsterism which is amusing rather than menacingly serious, and a completely dominating note of comedy offer the exhibitor, in this picture, something of the laugh-getting type for almost any sort of patronage. Zasu Pitts is the focal point of the selling, and as the theatrically ambitious soprano in the company theatrical, whose off-tone squeal melts the heart of a big-shot gangster, should open the way for selling of the laughs in which the picture abounds.

The "Sing and Like It" title may be tied in with the title of the original story from which the film was adapted, "So You Won't Sing, Eh?" by Aben Kandel, the play on that line developing from amplification of the idea that when singers refuse to play opposite Miss Pitts as the lead in a new musical show, the gangster chief of the soft heart puts the pressure on and they sing—or else.

With Miss Pitts are Nat Pendleton as the gangster, Ned Sparks as his chief assistant and translator, Pert Kelton as Pendleton's snappy and vengeful mistress, and Edward Everett Horton as the important producer who is bludgeoned into taking Miss Pitts for the lead through the "persuasion" of Pendleton and his men.

Pendleton and his gang decide to go in for safe-cracking on the side, and aim at a safe located in a building in which is being rehearsed the performance of home talent of the company for which Miss Pitts works. Pendleton, after the safe job, hears Miss Pitts singing and is moved to pouring tears when she sings her "mother" song. Immediately he takes steps to do something for her in the interest of art, and she, for her part, is ready to "give her all" for that art.

Pendleton goes to work. He attacks Horton first, after learning he is the greatest show producer in New York, and gives him the choice of taking Miss Pitts as the new leading lady of the big show that is practically finished, or ——. He takes Miss Pitts to his sumptuous apartment, and puts her under the care of Miss Pelton, who plans dire things, since she sees the off-key soprano usurping her place with Pendleton. Horton, on the verge of hysterics, tries to rehearse Miss Pitts in the leading part, which affords opportunity for considerable amusement in dialogue and situation. A kidnaping is arranged for publicity.

In order to get her rival out of the way, Miss Kelton arranges to have her actually kidnaped on the eve of the big opening, planning to keep her hidden until curtain time, so that she may understudy the "star." Miss Pitts' timid lover, played by John Qualen, is frantic when the double-cross is revealed, as is Pendleton. Qualen works the triple-cross, again kidnaps Miss Pitts, and gets $15,000 ransom from Pendleton. She plays her lead and the gang forces the leading critic of the city to applaud at the opening by tickling his ribs with revolvers. Ready to give her all for her art, Miss Pitts is laughed at by Pendleton, and goes to meet Qualen, who has the $15,000 and his sweetheart.

The triple kidnaping stunt should be salable, with the concentration on Zasu Pitts and comedy.—AARONSON, New York.

Whirlpool

(Columbia)

Dramatic Romance

Premised on an appealing theme, "Whirlpool" follows the current Hollywood trend and places more than usual importance on story value. Essentially dramatic, that quality is one of significant human interest, and contrasting romance and interluding situation comedy accentuate that asset to create understanding of a story that is both sharply realistic and colored by theatrical license. Thus as an atmosphere of tragedy is continually evident, the show evades being grim. Dialogue and action are equal in motivating the film. While the story covers a period of more than a generation, the two phases are so bound together so that the second is logically dependent upon the first.

For general purposes, "Whirlpool" is adult entertainment. The idea is a little too heavy for juvenile comprehension. Sell it to the grown-ups as a well put together story, convincingly presented and portrayed, and on the premise that it is a sincere effort to make serious material entertaining.

Buck and Mac are carnival grifters. Buck, married to Helen, small town girl, sees his dreams of happiness vanish as he accidentally kills a man in a brawl. Jailed for 20 years, he thinks only how his rashness has ruined Helen's life, and despite her anticipation of a child's company to ease the misery of waiting years, Buck fakes a letter to her that he has been killed in an attempted escape.

Helen remarries and Sandy grows up to become a newspaper reporter. Buck, out of jail, is met by the ever waiting Mac and together they embark upon a night-club-gambling career that carries them to affluence. Gang rivalry creates a big news story situation. Helen, assigned to get the inside, notes the resemblance between the gambler Buck and her supposedly dead husband. Establishing his identity, a situation is created for Buck which, if it became known, would bring further tragedy to Helen. There's only one way out—kill Gaige, the menacing lawyer, destroy the connecting evidence and in turn destroy himself.

As is evident this is a story of a man's love twice bitterly sacrificed for the happiness of his wife and child. It contains several fine dramatic scenes of the character that ordinarily get under people's skins. This is particularly true of the father and daughter sequences in the latter part of the picture.

The picture should be sold as serious emotion stirring entertainment, figuring that the tragic climax is the logical ending.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story by Howard Emmett Rogers. Screen play, Dorothy Howell and Ethel Hill. Director, Roy William Neill. Assistant director, Wilbur McGaugh. Cameraman, Joe August, Benjamin Kline. Sound engineer, Glenn Rominger. Film editor, Richard Cahoon.

Love Birds

(Universal)

Comedy

There are laughs and considerable entertainment of a homely sort in this Zasu Pitts-Slim Summerville comedy effort, which is the latest of the group featuring this team. The fact that it is another of that series will suggest immediately to the individual exhibitor what he may expect and what will be the most acceptable manner of selling. His past experience with the pair will give him more than a little indication of his patrons' reaction to the combination, and upon that he should base his selling. Where the pair have proved themselves laugh-provokers and popular, this will stand up well.

Besides Miss Pitts and Summerville there is only young Mickey Rooney for name value, the rest of the supporting cast being quite unknown. With the Pitts-Summerville combination, however, this should prove no selling obstacle. The title, if treated in a "gag" fashion, should be a source of patron attraction, the idea of Miss Pitts and Summerville as a cooing pair of birds of love presenting an amusing picture.

With Miss Pitts an old maid type of school marm who sees no good in men, and Summerville a chicken owner whose ambition is to possess a fine chicken farm, and who is a woman hater with a deep distrust of feminine wiles, the exhibitor should easily develop a selling campaign to strike popular fancy, always concentrating on the laugh angle of the picture.

The timorous Miss Pitts and her saintly little nephew, Rooney are terrorized by her pupils at school, and completely demoralized when one of Summerville's prize chickens flies through the window, Summerville flying after it in pursuit. The uproar results in Miss Pitts' requested resignation as a teacher of the young, and she seeks peace and quiet for herself and the youngster. With her savings she is taken into camp by a real estate crook who sells her a piece of land and a dilapidated shack somewhere on the desert. Summerville, determined to strike out for himself and his beloved chickens, is sold the same property by the same realty fakir. Miss Pitts and Rooney go fearfully to bed, when Summerville and a truckload of chickens arrive.

Next morning the battle rages as to who owns which, with no one the winner. A prospector appears, fights with Summerville, and finds Summerville's gold crown. He starts for town with his "nugget" and the gold rush starts. The realtor arrives on the scene and buys back, at a handsome increase, the property he twice had sold. Suddenly Summerville discovers his gold crown, the angry mob finds the owner of the property, with disastrous results for that owner, and Miss Pitts and Summerville decide that, after all, chickens, whether wearing skirts or feathers, are perhaps not so bad as they had imagined.

Straight comedy is the tack to take in selling, with Miss Pitts and Summerville the biggest assets.—AARONSON, New York.

Doomed To Die

Western

Action-crammed with high theatrically colored entertainment of exciting westerns, "Doomed to Die" is almost a throwback to the silent day screen formula. As a commercial programmer, its entertainment showmanship is that of daring heroics, flamboyant action, wild adventure and contrasting drama, romance and comedy. It has the quality to set the youngsters to cheering the hero and hissing the villains and by the same token catch the fancy of some of the adult men folk.

The story has Ken Masters, accused of murder, returning to the scene of the crime disguised as a sheriff who has been charged with arresting him. As the hero rapidly gets on the trail of the real killer, excitement grows and the theme is given a human interest twist as he finds his long lost mentally ill father, during which incident the seeds of romance are sown between him and Alice Adams. More theatrics move the yarn along until Bob recovers his faculties, which, following a hectic battle against many odds, enables Ken to prove his innocence and of course win the girl.

Considering the competition this picture must meet, there is little reason for any other forms of exploitation other than newspaper, marquee and lobby announcements. Any extra effort should be directed towards the youngsters on the strength of the Ken Maynard pull with them. In any case, the star rather than title or story content should be the peg on which appeal for patron support is hung.—MCCARTHY, HOLLYWOOD.

The picture, actually, is of that type which is a direct outgrowth of the talking pictures, a stage play transferred to the screen, but hardly translated into the terms of the screen, where a certain amount of action and rapidity of movement is apparently necessary to assure a film being classified as entertainment by the screen's audience, taken as a whole. The picture is one rather better suited to the sophisticated type of patron. The picture, by its very nature, is "wordy," relying upon dialogue for its effects.

The fact remains that the dialogue is brimful of smartness. It is clever, sharp and often definitely amusing, but it is apt to be lost on many of the larger body of the motion picture audience. The picture is an adaptation of a stage play, "Love Flies in the Window," by Anne Morrison Chapin, which origin would hardly be of sales importance.

In addition to Miss Dunne, who unquestionably has a popular following among patrons, there are the good selling names of Constance Cummings, in a sirenesque role as the feminine menace; Ralph Bellamy as the careless husband, and Sidney Blackmer as the man about town who unconsciously assists in the restoration of the Dunne family happiness.

It is without question basically a woman's picture, and the showman should make every effort to bring the women into the theatre, relying upon them to bring the men along.

Miss Dunne and Bellamy, married, portray the acme of happy contentment at home until the arrival of Miss Cummings, sister-in-law of Miss Dunne's best friend, and a former flame of Bellamy who left him at the altar, it is understood. She puts in her appearance following a divorce, with Blackmer, to whom she has attached herself, and "goes to work" on Bellamy without loss of time. He falls, hard, and Miss Dunne is faced with the loss of husband and self-respect. Bellamy asks a divorce, and she refuses, planning to go on as they are, in the hope he will come to his senses, and understand Miss Cummings is only playing him for the sake of re-achieving an old conquest.

Miss Dunne alternately breathes defiance of convention, gossip, scandal, and bewails her fate. The philandering Bellamy is in something of a daze, torn between the injury he is doing his wife, and his fascination for the old love. Eventually when both Miss Dunne and Bellamy come upon Miss Cummings in the arms of Blackmer, Bellamy comes to a realization of exactly the sort of chump he has been, and after a bit of sparring, husband and wife are reconciled.

Marital drama of the more sophisticated type, it is adult material.—AARONSON, New York.

The Fighting Ranger
(Columbia)
Western

Buck Jones, whose perennial popularity as a western star has been demonstrated often enough, appears again in a hard-riding, fast-shooting picture of the wild and woolly West. There's action all the way, and a bare fist fight between Jones and a bad man, both stripped to the waist, with no holds barred and no punches pulled.

If it's action they want, the exhibitor may assure the western fans that Mr. Jones of the Texas Rangers gives it to them in this picture. Romance is there, of course, and a measure of comedy, supplied by Ward Bond in the role of Jones' constant companion and chief assistant. Dorothy Revier, as a Mexican senorita, is the heroine and Bradley Page the bad hombre.

There is in this instance little opportunity for other than more or less conventional selling along the lines found most valuable by the individual exhibitor with western material. Jones and action and the Texas Ranger theme are the selling angles, with the youngsters the chief objective of the sales attack, and the best playing position is the week-end spot.

Jones comes riding into the Ranger camp with Bond and his brother, and a local bad man they have effectually pursued. The three are assigned to bring in the Cougar, a bad bandit from Mexico, and go after him and his gang. En route, Jones runs across Miss Revier, an accented Mexican girl, who fascinates him and slaps his face. Jones and Bond leaves Jones' brother in the town while they convoy a stage as far as the border. The Cougar comes in when they go out and in the ensuing melee and running gun fight the Cougar kills Jones' brother. Back at the Ranger headquarters, Jones asks, and gets, a leave of absence to go after the Cougar and his gang across the border into Mexico. Bond, of course, goes with him.

In the cafe south of the Rio Grande, which is the Cougar's headquarters, Jones and Bond, unknown, meet the Cougar, his gang, and Miss Revier, whose father owns the cafe. Jones frames a deal with the Cougar to lure him and the gang back to American soil where the Rangers can get into action. It works, but the romantic angle provides a rough-and-tumble battle between Jones and one of the gang who is in love with Miss Revier. The scheme works, Bond rides in to warn the Rangers, and the Cougar and his gang ride straight into the ambush prepared. The Cougar himself gets away and Jones goes after him, Bond hot on his trail. Back in the cafe, Jones successfully shoots it out with Page, avenging his brother's death.

It's fast western action material, with the weekend the best playing position.—AARONSON, New York.

Jail Birds of Paradise
(MGM)
Entertaining

Nonsensical but entertaining by reason of color, girls and elaborate sets, this MGM musical comedy subject pictures a prison as it has been transformed by the warden's daughter during her father's absence. She has named it Paradise Prison, and the inmates fear only that they will be discharged. Good behavior brings the reward of an additional ten-year stretch. Waited on like kings, dressed in striped evening clothes, the prisoners are regaled with song and dance, most of it tuneful and entertaining. An entertaining subject in color.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Grasshopper and the Ant
(United Artists)
Excellent

The childhood fable with a moral, that of the happy-go-lucky grasshopper, who plays and sings all summer, ridicules the ants who store up food for the winter, and who finally has to beg for aid from the objects of his merriment when the earth is covered with snow, is here told by Walt Disney, in another of the Silly Symphonies. It is of unusual quality, the color excellent, the execution clever. The subject's theme song, "The World Owes Me a Living," the work of Leigh Harline, Disney musical director, bids fair to be hummed, sung and whistled for many a day. The subject is worth extra attention.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Madeira
(Radio)
Travelogue

There is general interest in this subject, a Vagabond Adventure-Van Beuren travel number in which the camera brings to the audience the Island of Madeira. Native life, industry and the geography of the island are pictured in interesting fashion. High spots of sight-seeing value are shown in detail. The accompanying explanatory dialogue is well handled.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Big Meow
Fair Comedy

Tom Howard, of the angular figure and twanging speech, pairs with George Shelton as a team of private investigators, set by a judge to trail the girl of the gangster who has threatened his life. They mistake the judge's wife for the girl, and trail her into hysterics, finally following her to her home. A police raid is staged to end the subject in one grand melee, with the judge hiding under a sofa. It has a few amusing moments but in general Howard has been more entertaining.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Everybody Likes Music
(Radio)
Comedy

A musical comedy yarn in which the story is much less important than the fact that Donald Novis, the radio tenor, renders a popular number in his usually highly effective fashion. Irene Taylor, at a party for the president of Bullvania, attempts to wangle a ministerial appointment for her husband out of the president. He becomes frantic when he finds valuable papers have disappeared, and declares war when he is insulted by the detectives on the case. The papers are found, the war is called off, then the president learns he has been deposed.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Old Maid's Mistake
(Radio)
Comedy

This has its moments, of entertainment and amusement, as Walter Catlett, manager of a down-and-out vaudeville and film house, learns that three clubwomen, Dot Farley, Emma Ray and Katherine Ward, are to view his show, to see if it is sufficiently good for the club's patronage. He puts on the performance with several well known performers. Asking how many he is to expect when the club attends, he is told the three women are the complete club membership.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Busy Bodies
(MGM)
Good Comedy

Laurel and Hardy, in another of their escapades, in which, as usual, the rotund Oliver Hardy takes most of the bumps, casually and "accidentally" administered by the dead-panned Stan Laurel, of the standing hair and precarious derby. In this instance they are carpenters working in a lumber mill, the subject being devoted to the manner in which Hardy is tossed about from one end of the mill to the other, finally going through a long chute and landing in the yard. There are amusing moments of the slapstick variety, and it should be found entertaining by the Laurel-Hardy fans.—Running time, 20 minutes.

INCREASE OF COLOR TO MARK 1934–35 SHORTS

FitzPatrick, Disney, Celebrity Definitely Decide on Color; RKO Convention June 18-20; No United Artists Session

With definite indications from short subject producers that their 1934-35 schedules would call for an appreciable increase in the number of shorts to be done in color, independent distributors and large companies this week continued to announce additional plans for the new season.

The demand for color in shorts next season is expected to be unusually heavy and while several producers currently are utilizing color as an adjunct to regular short production few have yet considered it as an integral part of this field.

Among producers definitely set on color for 1934-35 are James A. FitzPatrick, who will use Technicolor; Walt Disney, employing the same process, who will make all of his 39 subjects in color, including the Mickey Mouses; Celebrity with its Comi-Color cartoons, and several others. Hal Roach is reported to be seriously considering color for his 1934-35 program, while RKO Radio will make a decision on color in short subject production for 1934-35 at its convention in Chicago, tentatively set for June 18-20.

Others Announce Plans

Further production plans for the new season, as they developed during the week, follow.

I. E. Chadwick has contracted with state rights exchanges to distribute five pictures to be produced by him. The first of these will be the Nina Wilcox Putnam story, "Her Excellency, the Governor."

Columbia Pictures will complete its current short subject schedule of 60 from Hollywood and will increase the number to 100 for 1934-35. Columbia is planning two sales sessions late in May, one in Los Angeles and the other in Atlantic City.

DuWorld's first of the Jackie Coogan series of featurettes has been completed and is now ready for release.

After several weeks of inactivity, Educational's Hollywood studio swung into action this week by placing the latest Andy Clyde comedy in work. The title is "Hello Prosperity." Educational has taken up its option on the Ritz Brothers, stage headliners, for six more comedies.

Majestic Signs Darmour

Foy Productions, Ltd., has added three exchanges to its list of 18. They are Salt Lake City, in charge of Allen Gorrell; Des Moines, in charge of Ralph Vranton, and Atlanta, headed by L. Merritt.

Herman B. Freedman has contracted for the distribution of 13 "Newslaughs" and "Shadowlaughs" for state rights exchanges throughout the United States, Boston excepted.

Larry Darmour has been signed by Majestic Pictures as executive producer and Harold Hopper has joined the company as studio manager. Having agreed to complete the balance of this season's program, Mr. Darmour, now in Hollywood, starts work on "Diary of a Bad Woman" within the next week. This will be followed by "Wild Geese." Twelve feature dramas, each with an average negative cost of $100,000, will be produced in 1934-35, titles to be announced later.

Completing the last of his series of eight for the 1933-34 MGM short subject program, produced by Hal Roach, Charley Chase has been retained by the producer for a new series.

Paramount has changed the date of its district managers' meeting at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, from April 21-22 to April 28-29. The annual sales convention will be held at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, June 18-20. Phil Ryan has completed his producing contract with Paramount for 12 two-reel comedies. He plans to make a series of features and currently is in New York negotiating for major releasing arrangements.

RKO Convention June 18-20

Chicago will be the scene of the RKO Radio sales convention, June 18-20. Next season's schedule will call for 50 features and 100 shorts in addition to 104 issues of Pathe newsreel. The shorts will be divided into 52 two-reelers and 52 singles. Meetings are in progress at the RKO home office in New York with division heads on summer operating policies and budget.

World distribution rights to Harry Schenck's "Beyond Bengal," jungle film, have been acquired by Showmen's Pictures.

No general sales convention or regional meetings of the United Artists sales force will be held to discuss new product. The company plans to go into the new selling season on the same policy maintained for the current year. Indications at the present time are that Samuel Goldwyn will have three pictures shooting at one time within the next two months. The three are "Resurrection" with Fredric March and Anna Sten, slated for May 15; the new Eddie Cantor picture, which goes into work between May 15 and June 1, and "Barbary Coast," starring Gary Cooper and Gloria Swanson, to start about June 1.

Two Academy Council Groups Study Phases of Production

More than 1,000 studio cameramen, sound engineers and technicians have received a comprehensive camera questionnaire drawn up by the silent camera subcommittee of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast. Its purpose is a correlation of the ideas of studio technicians working on production. Virgil Miller is chairman of the subcommittee.

The Research Council's subcommittee on economies in sound recording, of which E. H. Hansen is chairman, has begun an industry survey of present studio sound department practice in slating and cueing scenes on the set, and the methods of marking sound film for subsequent sound recording and laboratory developing and printing processes.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Robert Armstrong, Richard Cromwell—A very good action newsreel story that pleased our family trade 100 per cent. They like that boy Cromwell and Armstrong even in this cocky role. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Mar. 27.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamor, Mo. General patronage.

BEFORE MIDNIGHT: June Collyer, Ralph Bellamy—Excellent mystery program picture, gave good satisfaction; also drew good business on Wednesday and Thursday.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—Here is a picture that is slightly different from the average picture. It is a drama with romance and undersea action with wonderful scenic effects. The fight with the giant octopus seemed to attract more attention than other parts of the show. We were late playing tbis one but ran it on bargain day and played to almost capacity business. Very good entertainment. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Apr. 6.—J. J. Medford. Orpheum Theatre, Oxford. N. C. General patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones—A regular Buck Jones entertainment and it was good, as all of this star's pictures are. Great for Saturday.—Bert Silver. Silver Family Tbeatre, Greenville. Mich. General patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—A very good western with plenty of comedy and action. The kids will go for this one in a big way. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Mar 30-31.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook—Not so hot. Too much dark photography and uncalled for noise. Figured one in ten people satisfied.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, Guy Kibbee, Mav Robson—A dandy picture, well produced and acted. Direction perfect and supporting cast good. Why don't the producers make more pictures of this calibre. Business good. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Mar. 19-20-21.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Loretta Young, Spencer Tracy—No good for small towns, lacks entertainment and that's what the people want.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Walter Connolly—Very slow action picture with a hospital locale. People don't go strong for this type. No comments, no walkouts. Running time, seven reels. Played Mar. 6-7.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Bruce Cabot, Mary Brian—When you can't get a good western this one will do for Saturday night. A programmer. No kicks, no comment.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Bruce Cabot, Mary Brian—Was agreeably surprised with this. A nice little picture for your bargain nite. Running time seven reels. Played Mar. 27-28.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

SOCIAL REGISTER: Colleen Moore, Alexander Kirkland—What a pity Columbia released this one. They have had a nice line of small town pictures, too. Too much drunkenness in this one. The scene where the heroine, Colleen Moore, becomes intoxicated and dances, is positively disgusting, as well as her every expression being repulsive. Acting is very weak and unconvincing all the way through. Audience reaction terrible on this one. Played Apr. 7-8.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy—Some parts appear as though made up of newsreel shots and from other pictures of that type. However, it is a good picture. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill. Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy—Just plenty good action picture. Pleased the Saturday night fans like nobody's business. Tim usually pleases.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones—Played on double bill and made good. Buck never made any poor pictures. They are all entertaining.—Bert Silver. Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

First National

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Bette Davis, Charles Farrell—A dandy little picture that's different, an expose of the fake drug racket. Ricardo Cortez as a big shot racketeer is excellent. Davis and Farrell also good. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Mar. 31.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Bette Davis, Charles Farrell—A good action picture. Will get by as a programmer. So many of this type of entertainment made nowadays, it is hard to say what one is good or bad. None of this kind draws expenses for us. The few we got were satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

DARK HAZARD: Edward G. Robinson—Slow and draggy picture of dog racing and just to keep it Hollywood style, this Tobin gal has to crack "I'm going to have a baby!" Why, oh why, do they have to say it even in a dog picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Mar. 30.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

JOURNAL OF A CRIME: Ruth Chatterton—If your patrons go for drama, this is a good one with a brand new twist which everyone will enjoy. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Mar. 25-26-27.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Splendid. Great entertainment and clean, and that means a lot. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 1-2-3.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Fox

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—This combination of talent will do business in the majority of places we believe. Barrymore stole the show. Good for any day and will satisfy all classes. Running time, nine reels. Played Mar. 10-11.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—A honey from any angle. Proof that clean pictures please, satisfy and build the show business. What a relief after the everlasting moronic gangster pictures, beloved of Hollywood. If we had normal human beings making our pictures, we couldn't hold the immense audiences we would play to.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Just fair. No comments.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

DEVIL TIGER: Kane Richmond, Marion Burns—Very unusual picture with many good closeups of animals in mortal combat. If it's the "out of the ordinary" you like, here it is! Running time, six reels. Played Mar 13-14.—C. V. Hunerberg Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—As good a picture as any one could ask for. All of Fox's George O'Brien pictures are good. Played this one on family night and am sure that it pleased one hundred per cent. The sound was the best. If we could get more pictures like this one, prosperity might return in the small community. Played Mar. 28.—Marion F. Bodwell. Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—A snappy entertainment, typical of this pair. The fan dance in this is good. Our people liked it and said so. Running time, eight reels. Played Apr. 3-4.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa General patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—James Dunn did his best to wisecrack through a weak story assisted by Claire Trevor in a very capable manner. It is a shame that Fox does not give Dunn and Trevor decent stories. They are an excellent team and could be built up to box office attractions. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Mar. 29-30.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Perished on the eve of Lent. Personally, I no longer care for pictures glorifying tough mugs, male or female. The whole outfit gives me a pain in the sun parlor.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster—Personally I thought this the bunk, but when a picture like this one will draw them in to very good business, why, who in hell can tell what they want? Not a Sunday school picture, although I played it on a Sunday, Monday and Tuesday and I know hootch dancers. It will make the old men young and the young men weep.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster—Drew good attendance, much better than average. Not quite as good as "Call Her Savage," but a picture that has strong drawing power. Good enough for any theatre. Played Mar. 17.—George Lodge, Green Lantern, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster—Not as hot as we feared it would be. No kicks from the blue noses.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Business a little above average but not near as much as expected considering an Easter Sunday showing. Clara Bow is not near the draw that she used to be in the days gone by. This picture isn't apt to increase her drawing power either. Sound very good. Print only in fair condition. Played Mar. 31, Apr. 1.—Marion F. Donvell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: A good novelty musical. Nothing sexy or said about going to have a baby, thanks to somebody for that.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey, Gene Raymond—Very acceptable entertainment. Puppet show was good, and Miss Harvey good as usual. Played Mar. 18-19—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—A good program picture of the kidnaping racket.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—Some reports say Rogers is slipping but he has not started to slip for us yet. A fine family picture to good business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Mar. 8-9-10.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—What a pleasure to show a picture like "Mr. Skitch." Pleased here better than "State Fair" or "Dr. Bull." Play it any day to anybody—Played Mar. 14-15.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—This is the next best thing to the best show of the season. An excellent story, with comedy and drama, smiles and tears, and a cast that should rate this an all-star picture. Received a lot of compliments and no complaints on this one. Step on the advertising, as you cannot advertise this one too much. It is clean, but holds the interest to the last reel. Scenery good, recording good. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Mar. 7-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—I consider this a splendid picture but it did not draw any business. Tracy did splendid acting. Did not do the business it deserved. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Mar. 26-27-28.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—Step out on this one, boys. It's a honey. Fox comes through with plenty of comedy and action. It should fill any date. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Mar. 28-29.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

MGM

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—I woudln't rate this three stars. Too noisy. Shy on story. It will get by. Played Feb. 23.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Saved this one for Easter, drew rainy weather. A dandy show and will do added business if weather is not against you. It has plenty of good dancing, comedy and a story and just what it takes to make a good show. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Mar. 31-Apr. 1.—W T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Crawford can dance and has a good voice for recording, but that is all I can say for her. Gable did fair. Pleased all who saw it but not a big picture, as Metro would lead you to think. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Mar. 4-5-6.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: All Star—Just fair for a small town. Too much picture. Take Marie Dressler out of it and you would'nt have a picture. In the end, it all winds up into just a lot of nonsense. I lost money on the picture. My advice to a small town is leave it in the can Running time, 113 minutes. Played Mar. 22-23-24.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—Two reels of sportslants would have covered the high points of the picture. Where Mala is handcuffed and cuts his hand off to get away is sickening, and many feet of this scene should have been omitted. Running time, 116 minutes. Played Apr. 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Bing Crosby, Marion Davies—The best picture of Marion Davies since "Marianna." Good supporting cast, and the picture really is a honey with plenty of story. Outstanding are the "Radio Rogues," with their imitations of the different radio stars Kate Smith, etc. Little Patsy Kelly, with her small part, stands out, with Stuart Erwin, as usual, the under dog, but plenty good in his part. Good music and dance sequences with Bing doing his stuff satisfactorily. A good picture in every way.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Walter Huston—A wonderful picture. A little old but worth running. Running time, 10 reels. Played Apr. 6-7.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, John Barrymore—A typical Dressler picture that pleased for me. Had heard it was not so good, but I thought it a good picture and I know my patrons liked it. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Mar. 22-23.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhodo patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler Lionel Barrymore—They don't make any better entertainment than this one. Story great and acting wonderful. Gave great satisfaction to all we got. Played Mar. 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver, Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler—Marie's best. Pleased all who saw it but those were few. Marie doesn't mean a thing on the front of a show here. I let MGM kid me into thinking this one was another big picture. Just a program picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Mar. 29-30-31.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—They came out to see the Baron and stayed to enjoy the fun. It's a fairly good picture. Played Mar. 3.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: All Star—Just fair. A lot of stars and nothing for them to do. Good for one night. MGM sure flopped on this one by trying to make a big picture out of it. Running time, 80 minutes. Mar. 8-9-10—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Myrna Loy—Very good small town picture. Will stand up three days. Play it. The prizefight is worth the price of the film. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Mar. 18-19-20.—C. W. Shattuck Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Myrna Loy—The best show I have had for some time. More comments on how good it was than I have heard for a long time. It would make a dandy Saturday show as it has action, comedy, music and everything. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Mar. 3-4.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—Where Garbo is liked, this will be good for your best days. Played Mar. 25-26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHOULD LADIES BEHAVE?: Alice Brady, Lionel Barrymore—A mighty good entertainment. Interesting story and a great bunch of actors. Lots of comedy. Pleased them all. Played Mar. 23.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—Here is a fast moving comedy full of laughs and will please all classes. Their best feature picture to date. However this is really two-reel material stretched to the breaking point. As usual, they always overdo their part. Charley Chase and Mae Busch add considerably to the entertainment of the picture. Played one day to poor business due to bad weather conditions. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 4.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Very nice entertainment. Good cast and picture liked. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 4-5.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Fair program picture. Lionel came through with the usual good performance. Bainter is much better as a co-star to Lionel than Alice Brady. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Mar. 15-16-17.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Excellent acting and entertainment. I consider it good for your best days. Played Apr. 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—This is just another boost for a splendid picture. It's a natural. Played Apr. 6.—F. E. Sabin Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson, Jean Parker, Lewis Stone—A good picture that did not do any business, whether it was the title or what, I don't know. The picture is an interesting story of a woman money-mad and the alienation of her son. It has been done once before as it is plain to see that it was Hetty Green that was in the minds of the producers, and we ran a picture similar to it a long time ago. Jean Parker is a lovely little actress, though she did not have much of a part, Robson dominating the picture all the way.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Monogram

BATTLING BUCKAROO: Lane Chandler—This is the only picture I have ever seen where nothing absolutely ever happens throughout the picture. It ruined my Saturday business, and I don't care for any more Chandlers. Running time, 45 minutes. Played Mar. 31.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

BLACK BEAUTY: Alexander Kirkland—Well liked by all my folks. Business satisfactory Nice story. Played Mar. 9.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

BROKEN DREAMS: Randolph Scott, Martha Sleeper—Good program picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Mar. 5-6-7.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

SIXTEEN FATHOMS DEEP: Sally O'Neil, Creighton Chaney—Rather rough but well liked by our Friday and Saturday patronage. Westerns preferred. Played Mar. 30-31.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

Paramount

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins—Average business because of March. Splendidly directed picture. It has no moral except for intelligent people, and they are too few to consider. The adv. mats refer to Park Avenue, as is customary among those who write on press books. They are totally unable to visualize the audience that sees pictures, for instance, in Melbourne, Australia—in Clee Elum, Washington—in the Peace River country of Canada. Too bad we haven't yet evolved producers for the screen. It is an unexplored art and a neglected audience.—Herman S. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa Idaho. General patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard, Sally Rand—Very good of its kind and Lombard is fine in this picture, but Raft is not a draw with us and for that reason the picture did not do normal business. It may be that they can build him up into a star that will draw but it will not be as the great lover. He might go over in a he-man role, as he has a virile appearance, and I think that Paramount thinks that he may be another Valentino, but that I doubt.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—This is a very beautiful, heart-touching drama and should be enjoyed by both religious and non-religious. If you can possibly show this in advance to your neighborhood Catholic priest, I have no doubt but that he would highly endorse this, but you can also go after your regular patronage. I used the line, the story of a nun who adopted a daughter. In reality the convent adopts the girl, but Dorothy Wieck is given personal charge of the girl. There is a very pretty romance when years later the girl falls in love. Considering the weather and the Lenten season the drawing power was satisfactory.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

EIGHT GIRLS IN A BOAT: Kay Johnson, Dorothy Wilson—A different type show. The younger people seemed to like it. It is a shame that more pictures cannot have motherhood stories. We could all add more seats to our theatres in a few years if they were true, as the population would be greater. I hope the epidemic is over in pictures. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Mar. 10-11.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa.

GOOD DAME: Fredric March, Sylvia Sidney—It's pictures like this that drive the children and clean-minded adults away from the theatres. A story of crooked carnival gamblers and cooch dancers. If your people like March they will be disappointed in this one. When is Will Hays going to start house cleaning? Running time, 70 minutes. Played Apr. 6.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

HIS DOUBLE LIFE: Lillian Gish, Roland Young—Had it booked for two days. Pulled it the second day. Nothing objectionable, but nothing to it. Cannot see why they brought Miss Gish over from Europe to make it unless they wanted to kill her, which they did. Played Mar. 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—I would say the star in this was Alice Brady. She certainly made and stole the picture. And, sisters and brothers this is one of the best so far of the Paramount group.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck, Alice Brady—This is a great picture, timely and very impressive. It is a drama, a story of kidnaping. If you want good acting, here it is. We did a good business on "Cradle Song," but for some reason they did not come out to see this one. However, if you can get your patrons in the theatre, you can be sure you will please them all. Played one day to very poor business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PICK UP: George Raft, Sylvia Sidney—Very good. Attendance good. Show it. Played Mar. 30.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West, Cary Grant—Mae proved a swell tonic to the older folks and the box office. Very entertaining. I'm for Mae. Played Mar. 16.—F. E Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—Fair. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 4.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie—Too long, too draggy, not up to Paramount's standard for this class of production. But it is not a bad picture. No comments.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—Excellent entertainment. Good for best days in small town. Played Mar. 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert, Ricardo Cortez — A very good picture to rotten business. No drawing power for us. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Mar. 15-16-17.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan—A very good picture of its kind. A bit too bloodthirsty, perhaps. Entertaining and convincing. Good business first night but did not draw second. Merry Land opened again with this picture. Here's hoping. Running time, eight reels. Played Apr. 7-8.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHANCE OF HEAVEN: Joel McCrea, Ginger Rogers—Nothing but praise on this one, so everybody happy. Played Mar. 19-20.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

DELUGE, THE: Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson—A novelty picture and good entertainment, as it is different. A good cast. Different than the rest. Will give satisfaction as a program picture if they don't expect too much. Played on double bill by us.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville Mich. General patronage.

FLYING DEVILS: Arline Judge, Ralph Bellamy—Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction as a flying picture. As good as any of them.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GOODBYE LOVE: Charles Ruggles—A very good program picture. Lots of good comedy and funny story. Gave satisfaction but poor business. (Most of them do).—Bert Silver. Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GOODBYE LOVE: Charles Ruggles—Had many comments on this remarkable comedy drama. Ruggles, in my estimation, did himself proud in this one. With a few more stars as clever as Charlie Ruggles we poor old picture showmen would not have to take to the tall timber so often showing poor pictures. They like this fellow and show it.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston, Frances Dee—Poor. Story very slow and illogical. Pleased about 10 per cent. Should not have been filmed. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Mar. 30-31.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville Ore. Local patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—A natural box office picture that pleased the patrons and pleased the management at the box office. More power to RKO and I hope they make the sequel. Running time, 115 minutes. Played Apr. 2-3-4.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Snowstorm the night we played this picture, yet we had the best crowd for weeks. Fine production, but just a little bit too long. Good old fashioned kind of a show but drew the crowd. Running time, 107 minutes. Played Mar. 24.—George Lodge, Green Lantern, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel—Got by here on Saturday night and Sunday. Nothing big. Better not risk it on Sunday or Family Night.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—We perhaps are a crazy bunch, but this picture failed to get to first base. No one seemed to know what it was about and didn't seem to care. Several left very sore before first show was over, but maybe we are ignorant.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Fine picture. Fair business. Many good comments. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Feb. 22-23-24.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Very good picture if your patrons enjoy hearing them tell about going to have babies. It managed to crowd out low record. Too bad the directors couldn't have a baby; maybe they would stop making such stuff. Here's a picture that could be handled with all of its story without once saying "She's going to have a baby," if the director had any feeling for the sense of refinement of many young couples who favor us with their money. I refuse to play such pictures when I know it, but so many of them slip in, and how unwelcome they are. They are keeping plenty of patrons out of our houses. Played Mar. 12-13.—G. Carey. Strand Theatre Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Many favorable comments on this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—While nothing like "King Kong" for tense excitement, many people liked it better, and Baby Kong is certainly amusing. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Feb. 26-27.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre. Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—A god thriller for Friday and Saturday at bargain prices—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson. Neb. General patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—RKO's offering for the follow-up of their last success, "King Kong." It is as that one was, a synthetic studio picture. The fact that the public knew just what they were going to see again, militated against it at the box-office. The only pictures that I know that can repeat in similarity are the westerns and that is all. Universal made the same mistake after "Frankenstein" in a number of horror pictures until the public was fed up with them, and it is my judgment that it is an error to try to repeat, although I booked it and thought that it would do business but it did not. Robert Armstrong, as usual, gave a top-notch performance. There is too much known about trick photography for a picture like this to go over.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris, Vivvienne Osborne—A very clever picture. Thrills and gobs of comedy. Makes a dandy show. We term it an audience picture.—Ned Pedigo, Le Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

United Artists

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft—A splendid entertaining picture. Star and cast fine, but no business. The crook pictures are out for drawing any business in this burg.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper—They are not particularly interested in the Bowery out here and they heartily dislike New York and everything New York stands for, but this one showed a little profit and they liked it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper, Fay Wray—Personally I liked this picture, but my patrons did not. Comments bad; they said it was too raw and vulgar. Running time, 92 minutes. Played March 22-23-24.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

EMPEROR JONES: Paul Robeson—A very strong picture. Wonderful acting by the star. Story interesting. Satisfied all we got to see it, but did not draw film rental. No fault of the picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor, Lyda Roberti—Here's a grand show, 100 per cent entertainment. Good box office. Pick it up and step on it. Played Feb. 16.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII, THE: Charles Laughton—An outstanding production with hardly a flaw. With Laughton winning such honors for his acting, this ought to go over. We did a good average on this. As costume pictures do not go over very well here, I was rather surprised that it went over as well as it did. More pictures like this and American producers will have real competition.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SAMARANG: Native Cast—Fairly entertaining South Sea stuff. Poor drawing power. Pleased about 50 per cent. Played March 2.—F. E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura—A good picture that did not draw film rental. Sound not good. Running time, 87 minutes. Played March 29-30-31.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Comedy-drama. Not much to recommend. Not a Saturday or your best day picture. Nothing offensive. Played April 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore—A great picture. Story big and acting perfect. One hundred per cent satisfaction to the smallest gross we ever got on a special. They don't want good pictures in these small towns. Hokum and lots of it is what they want. Played April 1-2.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore, Bebe Daniels—Very well produced and acted, but not a small town picture, as this type does not mean anything to the rural trade. However, it's good entertainment. Running time, eight reels. Played March 31-April 1.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson, Onslow Stevens—This one does all right. This picture is 63 minutes long, not the 78 that Universal announced. That threw my whole show out of joint.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, Alice White—Action taking place on an overland bus. It's plenty good. Dialogue is snappy with plenty of action through the entire feature holding close attention. Play it any time and they will like it. Running time, eight reels.—C. V. Hunerberg, Prncess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, Alice White, June Knight—Mighty good program for Saturday or Pal Nights. Played March 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FIDDLIN' BUCKAROO: Ken Maynard, Gloria Shea—This is what I call a real western. Every one pleased. Running time, seven reels. Played March 30-31.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—Very good, but not a musical as Universal advertises. This one has a good story to it and enough singing to make it good. My patrons have sure fallen for this boy, Roger Pryor. His name means more here than a lot of the old-timers. Pleased all. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 25-26-27.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—Not the musical we thought we would get. Not a successor to "Moonlight and Pretzels" by any means. Just a program picture.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—The best picture of its type that Universal has yet produced. I did not advertise the horror angle and I believe it helped at the box-office. People do not care to see a horror picture any more. Musicals and musical comedies seem to be the best bet. Running time, 70 minutes. March 2-3.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart, William Harrigan—Good. Very different from the average run of pictures. I built this one up strong with shorts, but it did not box-office. Running time, 75 minutes. Played March 11-12-13.—C. W. Shattuck, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. General patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris—A good program picture. Morris does a nice job. Pleased the few people who came out to see it, but none of them cared for the sad ending. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 6-7.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY! Summerville-Pitts—Universal again spoils these stars by putting them in a story that is a flop. The people who saw it seemed to get a few laughs out of it, but why can't they make a picture of this type cleaner? Some scenes were positively bad. Every Summerville-Pitts picture is grossing lower each time they are played. If their stories are not improved nobody will come. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 23-24.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Rainstorm all day and evening. Very few turned out, but it was excellent comedy and pleased the few that attended the show. Played March 31.—George Lodge, Green Lantern, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—One of the best pictures of this or any year. You can please your customers with this one and they will tell you so. Running time, 10 reels. Played March 3-4.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—Another high class picture that was a flop at the box office. Do not consider it a small town picture. Too much talk and not enough action. Running time, 77 minutes. Played April 5-6-7.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—This picture drew a fair sized crowd, on one of the worst nights of the year, heavy snow, cold and stormy night. It has almost everything to appeal to the patrons of motion pictures. A fine production for any theatre, anywhere. Played March 10.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver—Quite a clever picture, well directed and acted. Could have been trimmed a little closer to advantage. Many laughs, many pleased customers. Thanks, Universal. —Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—A little old, but picked this due to reports on same, and it was a knockout western. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, seven reels. Played March 20-21.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—A very different and much better picture than the title infers. It's about gambling, but it is one of the best pictures from anybody this year. Played March 31.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon, Preston Foster—A great actress whose talents were wasted on this cheap story. Why don't they spend some money for writers and make a great picture with this woman. Running time, 73 minutes. Played March 28. —A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

HI, NELLIE! Paul Muni—This is one of the best newspaper stories I have ever seen. It is a mystery romance with plenty of action, comedy, mystery and romance. One of the best pictures for Muni. The excellent supporting cast adds considerably to the entertainment value of the show. The Warner trailer sold the show for us and had them talking a week in advance of playdate. Played one day to good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 5. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JIMMY, THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Boy, is this a fast one! Never a dull moment. Another ace comedy drama from the Warner Brothers, who really know what it takes to make the public laugh. Don't fail to play it. Running time, 67 minutes. Played April 1-2-3.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Texas. General patronage.

MIND READER: Warren William, Constance Cummings—I was rather afraid of this, but it proved better than I had expected. After seeing this your women patrons will lose faith in fortune tellers, which is a good thing. But this also has definite entertainment values. You can go after this; the picture will back you up. Drawing power average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

HICCUPS CHAMP: Krazy Kat Kartoons—A good cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson. Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RADIO-DOUGH: Sidney and Murray—These two fellows certainly suit our Saturday night people. We need more of this type and less musicals. Running time, two reels.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre. Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

TEN BABY FINGERS: Sidney and Murray—Silly but it brought much laughter, and that is what you want. Played Friday and Saturday. Running time, two reels.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpeliar, Vermont. General patronage.

Educational

GOOD BAD MAN, THE: Coronet Comedies—Nothing to recommend in this one. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR MELODY: Musical Comedies—Just a lot of junk. A waste of time to make and exhibit. Many more of these and I go back to cartoons for life. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

TRAV'LLING THE ROAD: Alexander Gray—Song Hit Story. Good on any night. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Here is a very good "Our Gang" comedy and the best one lately. Many of our patrons do not understand the kids talking and they naturally do not like them. Personally I like them, but admit is rather hard to understand their talking. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JAIL BIRDS OF PARADISE: Musical Comedies—Good any time, anywhere. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Pitts and Todd—Just another 18-minute view of Todd's lingerie and Pitts' trying her best to be funny. Not much to it. I don't blame Zasu for quitting after these kind of comedies she had to make. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

LUNCHEON AT TWELVE: Charley Chase—A very good comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Paramount

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE (No. 6): Best one we have had. Takes you to different homes. Quite interesting. Had several compliments on it, which is unusual on a short. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BROADCAST, THE: Headliners—This is a very good musical featuring the Mills Brothers, Arthur Tracy, Donald Novis and Vincent Lopez and his orchestra. The announcer, Roy Atwell, spoils the entire show with his foolish announcing. Paramount should have left him out. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OLD BUGLER, THE: Chic Sale—Will get by. Clean. Mildly entertaining. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARADE OF THE WOODEN SOLDIERS: Betty Boop Cartoons—Good cartoon. Fit in on any program. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SAILORS, BEWARE: Eugene Pallette, Walter Catlett—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre. Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

STOOPNOCRACY: Screen Songs—This one is another good issue of the Screen song series, with the popular comedy team of the radio, Stoopnagle and Budd. The music is very good and the cartoon in connection with the short is very amusing for both young and old. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHEN YUBA PLAYS THE RUMBA ON THE TUBA: Screen Songs, Mills Brothers—Here is a wonderful issue of the Screen Songs, featuring the world famous Mills Brothers, doing their singing and playing. Just the type of entertainment the public want and how they go out for it. Paramount, give us more like this one. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

HEY NANNY, NANNY: Clark and McCullough—For the love of Pete, give these two boys a suitable story or take them off. This is no comedy. It's a tragedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

HIZZONER: Bert Lahr—They call this a musical, they forgot the music. Too bad they didn't forget it all.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KNEE DEEP IN MUSIC: Ruth Etting—Just like about sixty per cent of the comedies, no good.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NUT FACTORY: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Average cartoon, not good, not bad. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

RASSLIN' MATCH, THE: Amos 'N' Andy Cartoons—Voices good but the animation terrible. Drew a little extra business. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

RASSLIN' MATCH, THE: Amos 'N' Andy Cartoons—Give your patrons a treat and run this cartoon.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SNUG IN A JUG: Clark and McCullough—Just too bad, and how.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SUITS TO NUTS: Gribbon-Kennedy Comedies—Good semi-slapstick comedy. The writer does not care for comedy, so is a rather poor judge of this part of the program. Running time, two reels.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

PLAYFUL PLUTO: Mickey Mouse—Good. The best Mickey Mouse released by United Artists to date. Many good laughs and comical situations.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Universal

CANDY HOUSE, THE: Oswald Cartoons—This cartoon has a beautiful musical score. Had a number remain to see it on second show. Oswald cartoons are usually very good. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

CANDY HOUSE, THE: Oswald the Rabbit—We do not hesitate to say that this is the best cartoon we have played to date. It appealed to adults as well as the children, no doubt because Hansel and Gretel brought back memories to the grownups of their old fairytale days. You will not be sorry that you played this one. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

CHICKEN REEL: Oswald Cartoon—An excellent cartoon. Oswalds have all been good lately. My patronage looks forward to them and ask when we will have another. Running time, eight minutes.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

CONFIDENCE: Oswald Cartoons—Fair. Not a poor cartoon, but all the other Oswalds we have played so far this season were better. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS (No. 1): Some like them, some do not. I do not know yet if it is 50-50 or not, but about that. I like them myself, but I can't book what I like. Some tell me they are too silly, but I was of the impression that they were supposed to be silly. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS (No. 2): The poorest series of Universal short subjects, in my estimation. Not many laughs and some of the scenes are dragged out entirely too long. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS (No. 3): Fair. Gets by as one of the shorts. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

HAM AND EGGS: Oswald Cartoons—Here is a star that is getting better and better, especially the newer stuff. We are looking forward to "Toy Shoppe," "Gingerbread Boy" and other new ones "Candy House," which we just recently played, was the best cartoon we have ever had in our house.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

IN THE ZOO: Oswald Cartoons—Very good. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

MEETING MAIZIE: Sterling Halloway—This Halloway is a good comedian. Different, of course, but that's maybe the reason they like him. Ever since we saw him as Joe Brown's brother in "Elmer the Great" we have liked him. Hope somebody does not get the idea to star in a feature and kill him. Running time, two reels.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Louise Fazenda—About like the rest of the Fazenda comedies. A lot of running around. The audience seems to like it. Running time, two reels.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS (No. 33): Will help any program—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BUDDY, THE GOB: Looney Tunes—Another good cartoon comedy of the new series. Buddy is almost as good as Bosko and here's wishing him success. Plenty of laughs and will please both young and old. Come on, Vitagraph, give us some more like these. We want good shorts and you make them. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevities—Another good colored musical comedy, as good or even better than most features. Give it plenty of billing. It will please every one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Texas. General patronage.

DISH RAN AWAY WITH THE SPOON, THE: Merrie Melodies—This is a fine cartoon that got as many laughs from the adults as it did from the kiddies. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DISH RAN AWAY WITH THE SPOON, THE: Merrie Melodies—Merrie Melodies are almost all good. Children especially like them, and the children certainly should be taken into consideration, especially when one can also please the grown-ups at the same time. A lot of clever stuff in this one. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

GIRL TROUBLE: Mitchell and Durante—An excellent color revue that you can be proud of. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES FLOSSIE: Big V Comedies—Can't understand why any one would release anything with this star. Disgusting.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND: Melody Masters—Good musical one-reeler that will please everybody. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

OUT OF THE PAST: Pepper Pot—Shots from old news reels, dating back quite a ways, must be back to the very beginning of newsreels. I got this because I thought it was on the order of Universal's "Good Old Days," but it was not in it for entertainment compared to that. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

PICTURE PALACE: Broadway Brevities—O. K. Vitaphone shorts are the best so far this year. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ROCK-A-BYE-BYE, WITH DR. ROCKWELL: Pepper Pot—One of the worst shorts that we have run in some time. Patrons remarked about how bad it was. Running time, one reel.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

SAMOAN MEMORIES: Musical World Journeys—Another fine travel talk from Warner Bros. The scenery is beautiful and, as one patron remarked: "It is a painless way to teach the kids." Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SKY SYMPHONY: Broadway Brevities—Fair. A lot of good stuff in it. Running time, two reels.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

SPANISH AMERICA: Musical World Journeys—On this trip you will take your patrons to Havana and the Panama Canal Zone with a good look at Sloppy Joe's cabaret and few other warm spots south. A very interesting short. Running time, nine minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Texas. General patronage.

TUNE DETECTIVE, THE: Pepper Pot—Here is a novelty subject that should please everybody. Some good dancing, a little singing and few good laughs. Running time, nine minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Texas. General patronage.

TURKEY IN THE RAW: Big V Comedies—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plain view, Neb. General patronage.

YEAST IS YEAST: Broadway Brevities—This is a very good musical with plenty of beautiful girls and some good music. Tom Patricola is the star and puts his part over very well. This series of shorts are absolutely the best musicals on the market. Keep it up, Vitagraph. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MEN OF "THE KNOW-HOW"

An appreciation of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

By TERRY RAMSAYE

FAME is a commodity in the world of the motion picture and it is a fickle, evanescent sort of stuff. It is sold while it is budding and flowering and when it comes to ripeness it is some way always through and done—for the world of the screen. Fame is, for the films, concerned entirely with the appearance of things, the content of shadows that speed across the screen. It contains nothing but itself and is gone when the light is out. It is, valuable although it may be, immaterial.

That may be why the publicity glories are not for the makers of the shadow machines. Nothing that can be weighed and measured ever gets into the electric lights of the amusement world.

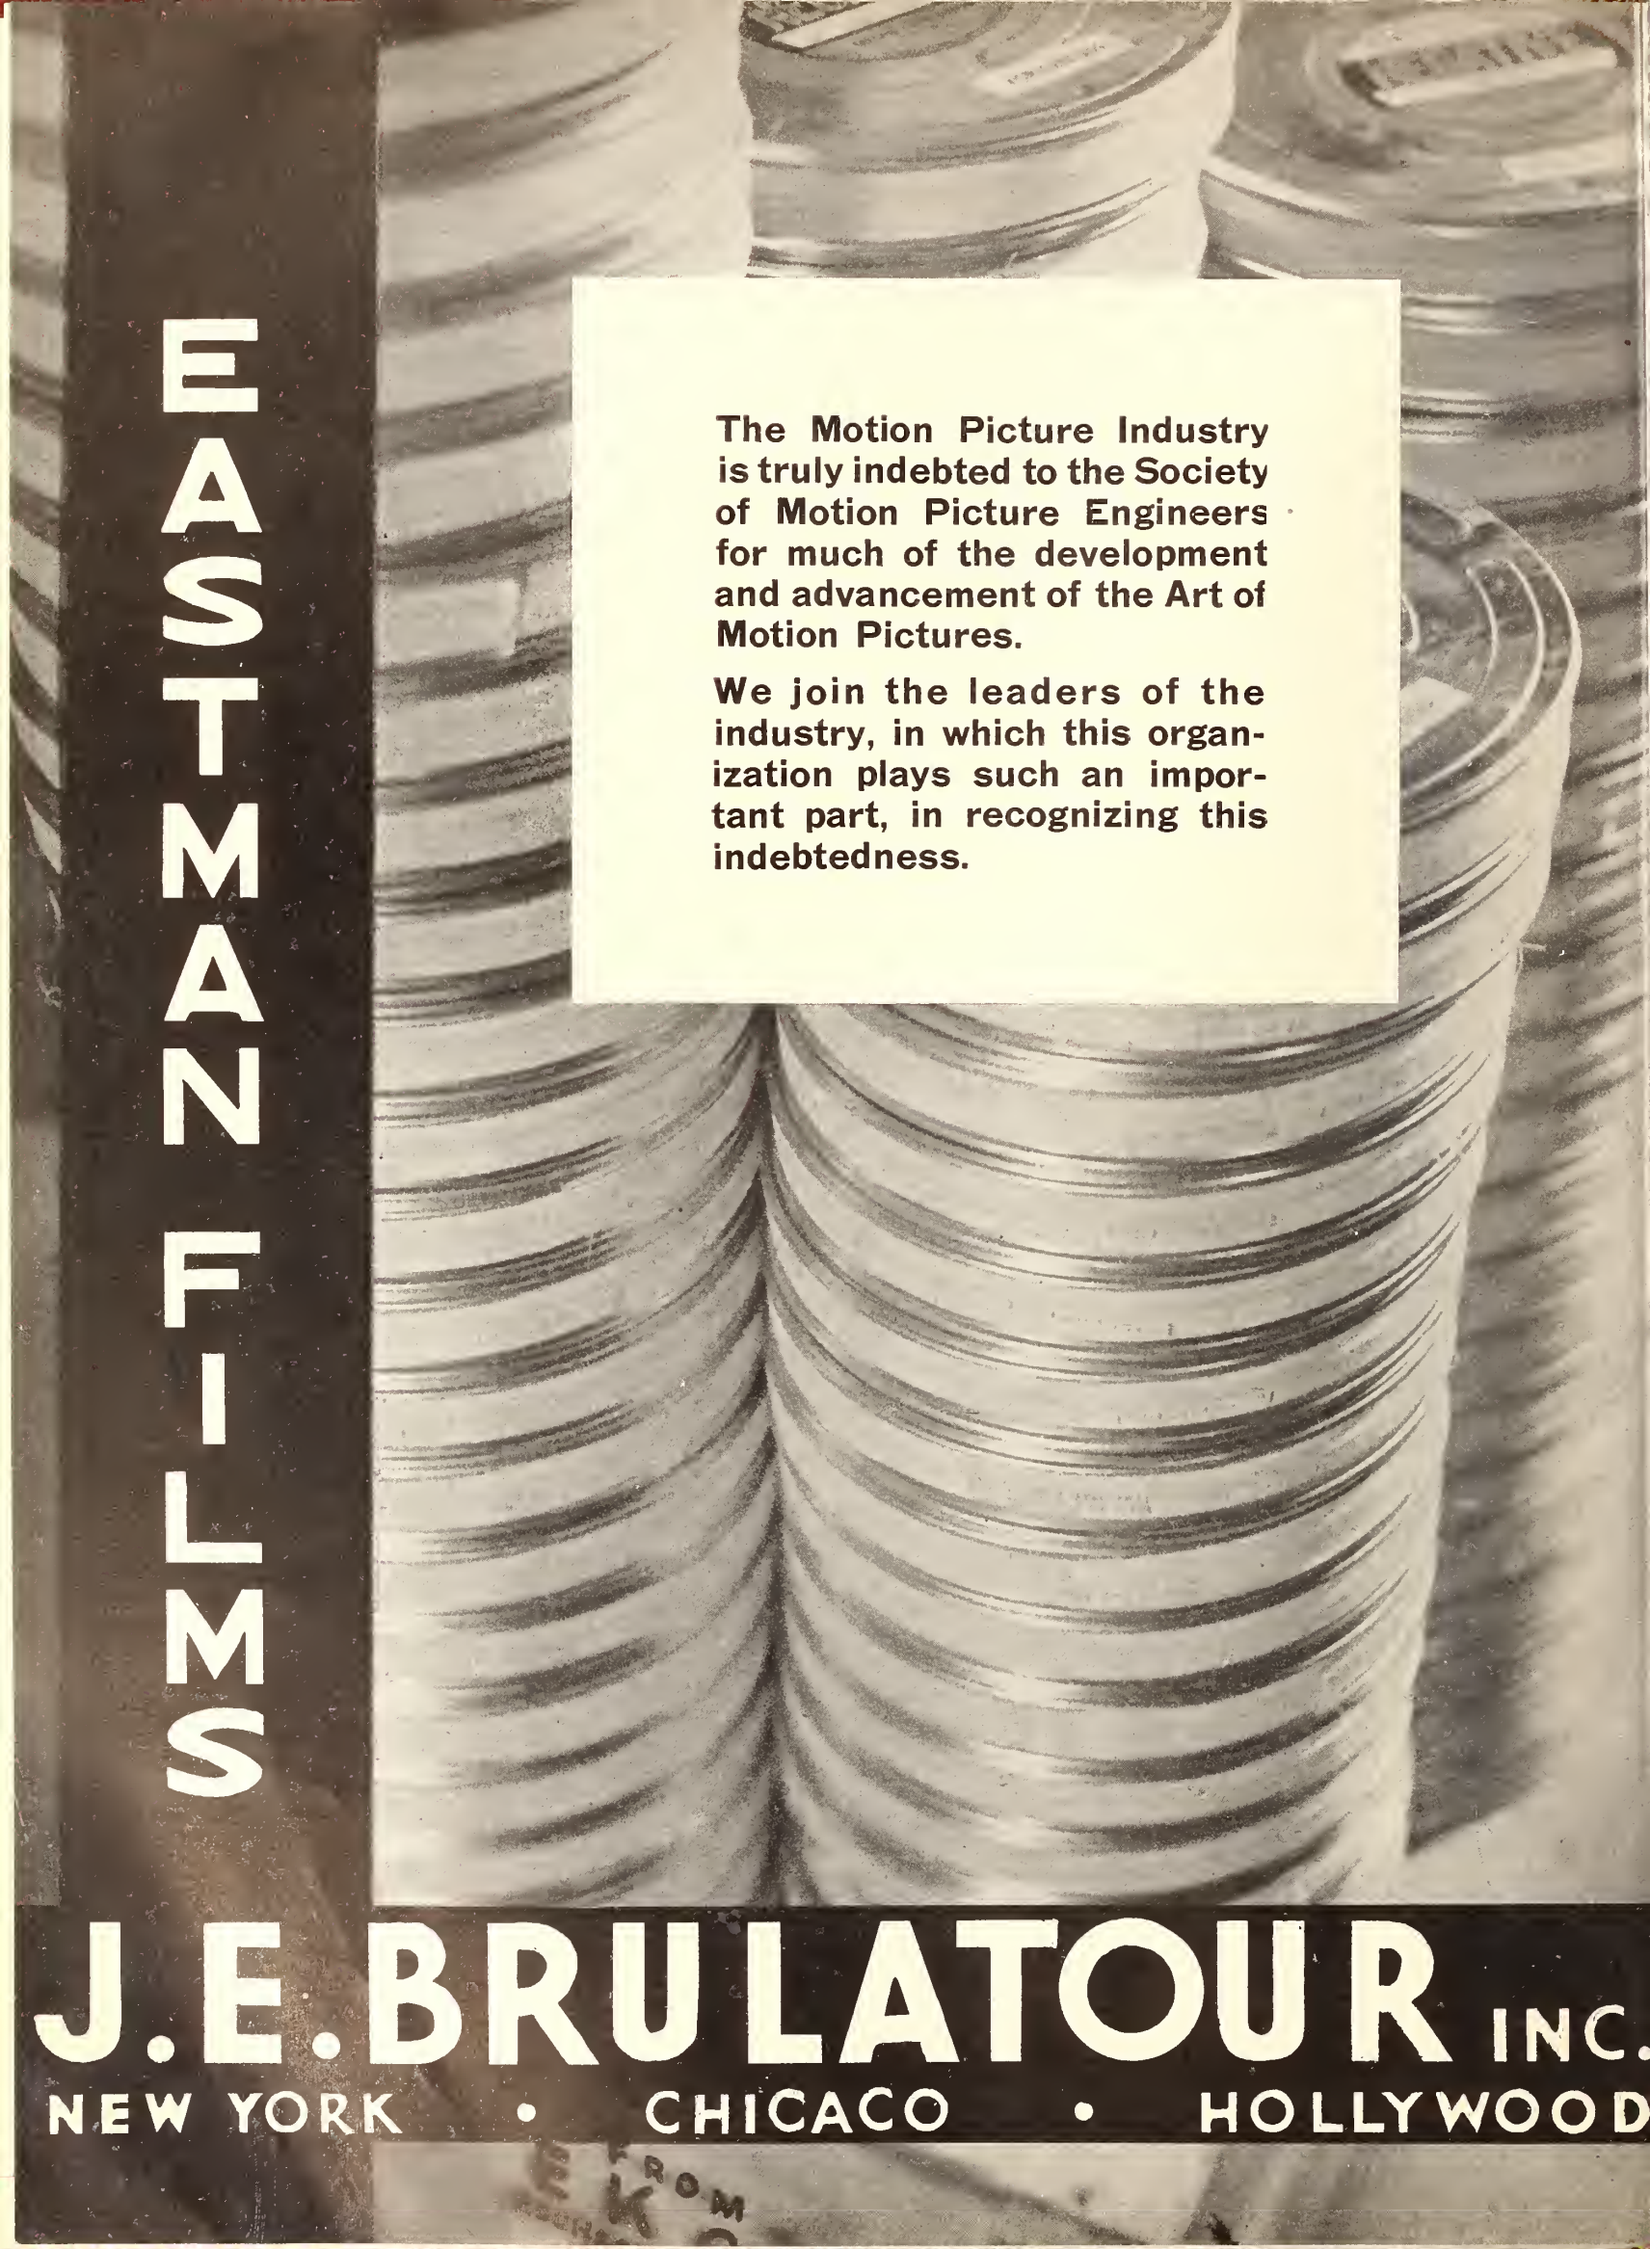
So it comes that on occasion such as this, special attention is fittingly to be paid to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the first and dominant organization of the technicians and makers of ponderable things, workable machinery and substantial mechanical and chemical and optical fact.

Men still active aggressive members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers were at work on the problems of the screen and the studio before Mary Pickford was born, before the feature length drama was dreamed, before the microphone had learned its letters. Down the years they have been at their labors ever since, adding to and enriching the power and scope of the tools of this dominant medium of expression.



The Society of Motion Picture Engineers is the custodian of that precious element of the industry which the old pioneers used to call "the know how." The "know how" used to be a set of whispered secrets and formulae of the rule of thumb. The members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, with its background of staunch supporters among the technological industries which employ these engineers, have made of the motion picture process a group of sciences, exact, reliable in all their processes, foolproof in the hands of artists and the carelessly, nonchalantly creative personages of what is called "production."

Once upon a time, easily within the memories of most motion picture makers of today, laboratory workers carried mystic little black books with cryptic formulae for such magic as a green toned image. Densitometers had been heard about, but gamma was still Greek. Developing baths were still in the realm of witchcraft. Static was something that came in the winter and was incurable. Decibels were unborn and acoustics were "none of our damned business."

The mechanism of the silent drama came near to final perfection in the period of the rise of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and when sound came with its terrific influx of new technological content and problems, the society grew in its scope and personnel and function to meet the new day.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers is the custodian of the "know how," the possessor of the forces that make the wheels go round, the movers of every picture that moves and the voices of every picture that speaks and sings.

EASTMAN FILMS
The Motion Picture Industry is truly indebted to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for much of the development and advancement of the Art of Motion Pictures.
We join the leaders of the industry, in which this organization plays such an important part, in recognizing this indebtedness.

SMPE SEES 18 YEARS OF ITS EFFORT IN STANDARDIZING BEARING FRUIT

One of Earliest Achievements Was Uniformity of Film Perforation, Achieved at Society's Second Meeting in 1916

Activities Concentrated in Committees Covering Entire Range of Technics of Motion Picture, Recording and Reproduction

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH
President of the SMPE

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers was founded in 1916 by a group of 26 men, headed by C. Francis Jenkins, pioneer investigator in motion picture engineering and television. Throughout its life, the society has grown both in size and importance, and has come to be regarded as the foremost clearing house of motion picture technology in the world. The purpose of its inception was "the advancement in the theory and practice of motion picture engineering and the allied arts and sciences, the standardization of the mechanisms and the maintenance of a high professional standing among its members."

With these thoughts in mind, the society first set about to achieve a universal standardization of the greatly diversified equipment existing at the time. The motion picture industry was in its infancy; there was no sound; the projectors differed considerably from one make to another; there was waste, of time, effort and material. And in order to achieve any degree of advancement in the art, it was necessary that those difficulties be corrected.

Accordingly, one of the first steps in the process of standardization was that of establishing committees for the purpose of investigating the various technical aspects of the different problems involved. There were committees on illumination, projection equipment, screens, and various other important factors of projection. In those days, little attention was paid to the problems of production, and much remained to be done in the matter of scientific and accurate processing of motion picture film. Photographic work in those days, whether still or in motion, was entirely the work of an individualistic artist, with little or no scientific basis.

Standardization Gradual

As time went on, the committees were able to initiate a gradual growth of standardization which ultimately led to the efficient and economical conditions that we find today. Among the earliest matters of standardization was that dealing with the motion picture film perforation, which was accomplished at the second meeting of the society in October, 1916, at New York. Later on, the entire layout of the film was standardized, as published in the transactions of the society in 1918.

From that time on, the subjects of standardization included the dimensions of film, the establishment of the frame line, film splicing specifications, lantern slide mat openings, projector sprockets, projector apertures, camera apertures, dimensions of projection lenses, 16 mm. equipment, film track specifications, taking and projection speeds, positioning of the scanning line (when sound came into the picture), definition of safety film, and a number of other items, all of which have been publicized from time to time in the Journal of the Society and in its Standards Booklet.

Activities Centered in Committees

As might be expected, the most important activities of the Society are centered in its committees. The personnel of the committees has always been composed of prominent members of the industries who were highly trained in the work of the particular committees to which they were assigned. Among the committees were, and are, the Apparatus Committee, Color Committee, Historical and Museum, Laboratory and Exchange Practice, Non-Theatrical Equipment, Progress, Projection Practice, Projection Screens, Projection Theory, Sound, Standards, and others.

None of the committees is more important than the Committee on Standards, the function of which is to investigate current practices with a view of achieving their universal standardization, to reconcile and correlate divergent practices, and to recommend such alterations in current practice as may be indicated by current economic circumstances.

Additional accomplishments of the Standards Committee have been the standardization of sprocket dimensions, the establishment of the new aperture dimensions in collaboration with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, recommendations concerning the acceptance of sound screens, from both the optical and acoustical standpoints, and dimensions and operating characteristics of projectors and cameras.

The Projection Practice Committee has been particularly active in promoting and furthering investigations of the problems connected with the practical aspects of motion picture projection in the theatres, and are rendering in that respect a particularly valuable service to the industry. During the past three years, they have been investigating the various responsibilities devolving upon the projectionist, upon whom the entire success of the motion picture performance depends.

Elaborate Specifications

They have drawn up very elaborate specifications for the design and construction of the projection room, have studied the adjustment and conditioning of motion picture equipment for high quality projection, have looked into the details of adjustment of the projection equipment, particularly as regards the requisite tolerances, tensions and clearances for maintaining the equipment in a good state of repair, have made various recommendations concerning the acceptance of highly visible and recognizable change-over marks, and have made a great number of recommendations for lessening the extent to which film is mutilated and destroyed in the theatres. One of the latest studies of the Projection Practice Committee has been in connection with the proposed establishment of the 1,700 foot length for a reel of film, the results of which study will be presented at the forthcoming Convention of the Society at Atlantic City on Tuesday, April 24.

Other Studies Made

In connection with the work of the Projection Practice Committee, the other two projection committees, namely, the Projection Screens and the Projection Theory Committee, have rendered valuable service in establishing acceptance requirements of screens and the requisite illumination of screens for sufficiently bright pictures. In addition, studies have been made in connection with the aging and renovation of screens, matters which should receive a great deal more attention in theatres than they have received.

The Laboratory and Exchange Practice Committee has been engaged in work as described by its name; the Sub-Committee on Laboratory Practice devoting its attention to the problems of the laboratory in turning out processed film of the highest quality. The Sub-Committee on Exchange Practice is concerned with the operations going on in exchanges, not only as regards the handling of film in the exchange proper, but the shipping and distribution of film as well. Recommendations for the proper handling of film in exchanges have been made with the thought in mind of rendering exchange service more efficient, reducing the losses entailed in replacements and cleaning, and standardizing the reels and equip-

NEW SMPE POLICY BROADENS SCOPE OF SOCIETY FOR ITS 730 MEMBERS

Three Grades of Membership Established, Qualifications Widened and Fees Lowered; 173 Added Since October

Activities of Technical Committees Expanded by Naming Group of Vice-Presidents to Direct Work of Departments

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers today with a total membership of 730 enters a new era of service to the motion picture industry. Due to changing economic and industrial conditions, the Society has recently undergone a complete and constructive revision of its previous policies, and has broadened its scope so that it may more actively serve every branch in the industry.

Faced with economic problems which threatened to limit the activities of the Society, two alternatives were indicated: that of continuing as a small society, with restricted power and action, and a dignified, though rather self-centered and remote attitude; or that of broadening the qualifications for membership and reducing the fees, thus making the Society more accessible to all the members of the industry, from the highest to the lowest, and counting on the increase of membership to compensate for the reduction of the rates, and reduce the unit cost per member per year; attain a wider distribution of the Journal, increased scope of activity of the committees, a more widespread and powerful influence upon the motion picture industry as a whole, and a more democratic, altruistic, and genial temperament.

Under the leadership of President Alfred N. Goldsmith, the latter alternative was enthusiastically endorsed by the membership. In carrying out this policy, three grades of membership were established with three corresponding sets of membership fees, the lowest fee being made so low as to be within the means of every self-supporting member of the motion picture industry. To broaden the activities of the technical committee, provision was made for a group of vice-presidents who would personally direct the work of the committees. By so distributing the work among men who would be chosen because of their expertness in each particular field, the work of the committees would be prosecuted not only more vigorously, but effectively, and the technical contributions of the Society to the industry could be considerably enhanced. To each vice-president is assigned a particular phase of the Society's work.

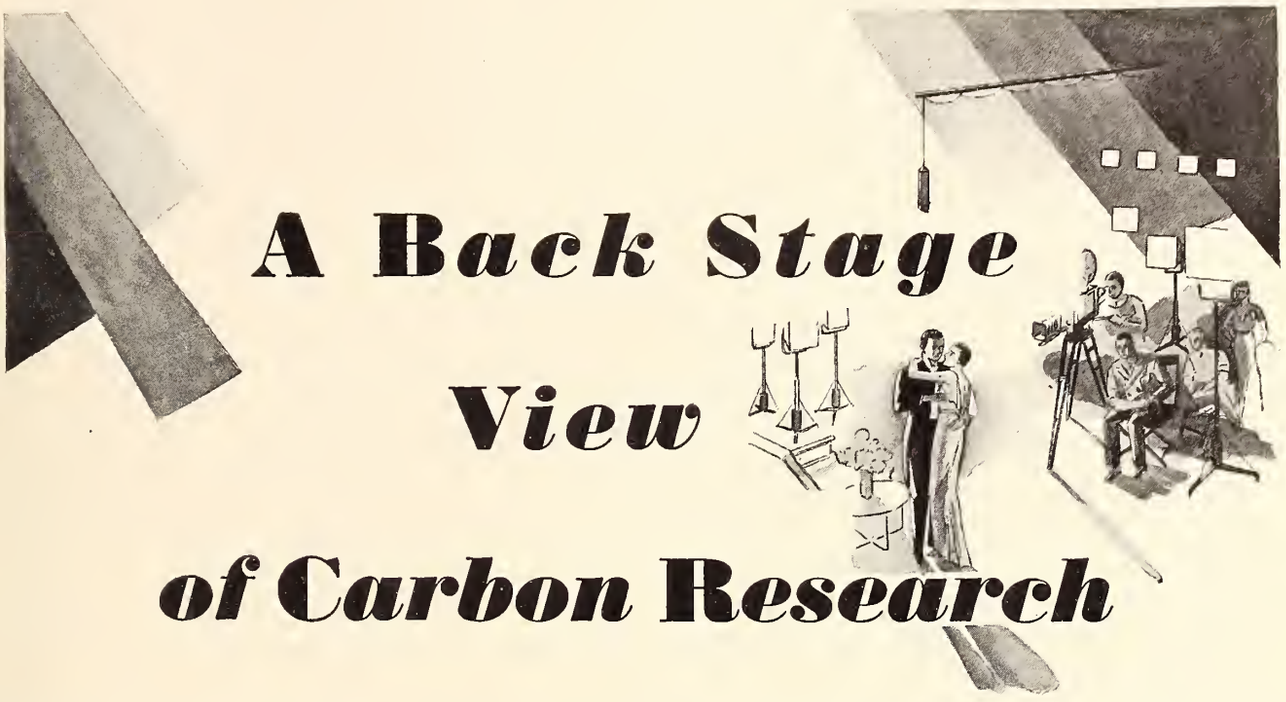
Various Vice-Presidents Named

Following an election recently held, L. A. Jones of the Eastman Kodak Company was elected engineering vice-president, having charge of all technical committees of the Society. J. I. Crabtree, former president of the Society, was elected editorial vice-president with supervision over the monthly journal and the historical and progress committees; O. M. Glunt, assistant director of apparatus development of Bell Telephone Laboratories, was elected financial vice-president with supervision over all fiscal operations of the Society and the work of the membership committee; and William C. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, was made vice-president in charge of conventions and publicity. To facilitate more active and concentrated cooperation between the east and west coast activities of the Society, Mr. H. C. Silent of the west coast office of Electrical Research Products, was elected executive vice-president.

As the Society operates today, in addition to its national organization, there are three local sections, one in each of the three important motion picture centers in the country, Hollywood, Chicago and New York, which hold regular monthly meetings. The Society also maintains a general office in New York where the monthly journal is published and all activities of the Society are coordinated.

Membership Increased by 173

Since October 1933, when the new policy went into effect, the membership has been increased by 173; 153 associate members have been transferred to active membership, 129 active members have became Fellows, and 29 associate members have been transferred to the grade of Fellow.



The Society and its membership are interested in studio problems, studio operation and production methods, equipment for acoustic treatment, photography, and sound recording in the studio, processing of film as well as film manufacture, black-and-white and color processes, exchange practice, film inspection and handling, theatre design and

A Back Stage View of Carbon Research

CONTINUOUS research into the realms of Light—developments based on sound engineering practise—broad vision to anticipate and provide for the requirements of the industry—field service to assure economy and satisfaction—all of this has been going on for more than half a century—constant improvement and progress—better screen illumination for theatres, large and small—resulting in better projection, satisfied audiences and greater box office returns.

SOME OF THE MOST RECENT ACCOMPLISHMENTS

FOR THE THEATRE

National High Intensity Carbons (13.6mm x 22″)—For large theatres and long throws.

National High Low Carbons (9mm x 20″)—For the medium-size theatre.

National Copper Coated High Intensity A.C. Carbons—For the neighborhood theatre.

All of these carbons provide high intensity projection for any class of theatre, large or small—snow-white light and a brilliance of illumination that satisfies the most exacting and critical patronage.

FOR THE STUDIO

The New National Motion Picture Studio Carbon—A new carbon giving a light with color composition balanced to the color sensitivity of modern super-sensitive motion picture film.

At equal photographic intensity there is far less heat projected on the set than from any other source of studio illumination.

New silent arc lamps, side arcs, scoops and spots are available using these new carbons. They maintain a steady arc and provide illumination of uniform intensity.

SMPE CONVENTION PROGRAM SET; WILL OPPOSE REEL LENGTH CHANGE

1,700-Foot Reel Would Not Prevent Doubling of Film in Projectors, Say Chairmen of Projection and Exchange Practice

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, of which Alfred N. Goldsmith is president, will formally voice its disapproval of any change in the present standard reel length, at its annual spring convention, which opens on Monday morning and continues until Thursday, at Chalfonte-Haddon Hall in Atlantic City, N. J.

The changeover from the present standard 1,000-foot reel length to a 2,000-foot reel carrying 1,700 feet of film was recommended early last January to the entire industry by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts, from Hollywood. Lester Cowan, Academy secretary, said at that time that "the industry will definitely adopt the 2,000-foot reel." There has been no further action since then.

Studied Possible Efficiencies

Special technical committees appointed both by the Academy on the west coast and the SMPE in the east immediately set out to study the possible efficiencies of such a changeover. To date, no final recommendation has been forthcoming from the Academy, but, on next Tuesday the SMPE committee will recommend that the present 1,000-foot standard is best adapted for present exchange and exhibition practice.

The reason for the SMPE's disapproval, according to Trevor Faulkner, chairman of the Exchange Practice Committee, and also Harry Rubin, chairman of the Projection Practice Committee, is that the 1,700-foot reel would not prevent the practice of doubling of film in projectors by projectionists, with its consequent waste of material and mutilation of film. It was the doubling of film in projectors that prompted the Academy to move for the larger reel.

"In order to prevent the doubling of film," according to the SMPE, "it would be necessary for the minimum length of film to be somewhat greater than half the capacity of the projection magazine, which means that 1,750 feet of film should be the minimum, and about 2,000 feet the average or nominal length."

The SMPE committee and the exchange representatives were said by the Society to be generally in favor of continuing to use the 1,000-foot reel length, unless future economic considerations should favor a 2,000-foot length. In any event, lengths between 1,000 and 2,000 feet as a standard reel are definitely objected to at present by the committee.

Any changeover from the 1,000-foot standard reel would cost the industry several thousands of dollars, at least, necessitating, as it would, the discarding of all forms of equipment now in use to carry the 1,000-foot length.

In making its recommendation for a new 2,000-foot standard, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts stated last January:

"In cutting, release printing, distribution, shipping, and exchange inspection, the producing (and distributing) companies are using the reel of from 800 to 1,000 feet, which has been the established unit for many years. Most theatres, however, are equipped with 2,000-foot magazines and an increasing proportion are doubling up the reels for projection. The situation is complicated by the preference for longer reels among many projectionists in first-run houses, by the number of theatres in which only one projectionist is employed, by the fact that studios are frequently unable to avoid issuing reels of very short length, and by the fact that the exchanges have not been able to enforce penalties against reel doubling.

"The cost of handling prints in the theatres and exchanges is substantially increased by the fact that pictures are not distributed and projected on the same length reel. A Standard Release Print Leader and Trailer is supplied with every reel on the assumption that they will be used to secure an accurate changeover from reel to reel. The added costs of maintaining leaders and ends of reels in the exchanges, and of cutting, doubling and re-splicing the reels in the theatres are directly chargeable to the lack of an established uniform practice on reel length."

Rosenblatt To Talk at Convention

The annual Spring banquet of the SMPE will be held at the Chalfonte-Haddon Hall on Wednesday evening. Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA Division Administrator in charge of amusement codes, will be the principal speaker. The event will be broadcast over the NBC "Red Network."

Technical sessions dealing with virtually all phases of sound, projection, exchange, non-theatrical, amateur-film, studio, laboratory and photographic practice will be held daily.

A special meeting of Atlantic City and other New Jersey exhibitors, managers and projectionists will be held Monday morning, Mr. Goldsmith presiding. Representatives of all the large theatre interests, and a delegation from Local No. 310, IATSE, will also be on hand.

An exhibit of newly-developed motion picture apparatus will be held in conjunction with the convention. The convention committees follow:

MAKING MONEY UNDER PERSONAL OPERATION

"Each community calls for special treatment. Therefore, as no theatre can be made into a machine because it is not that kind of a business, the theatre manager each year is given more authority in the individual operation of his theatre. This applies whether it be one theatre or one hundred. Those gentlemen who have wasted so much money the past few years in acquiring theatres in large numbers realize this more than anyone else. This is proved by the fact that theatres which have been losing money for years under group operation have been operated at a profit, even during the past depressed conditions, under personal management."—ED KUYKENDALL to the MPTOA Convention.

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 220.—(A) How would you determine, by calculation or otherwise, the focal length of a projection lens to project a screen image of any desired dimensions at a given distance? (B) Are tables purporting to advise what size of screen image a lens will project at a given distance, reliable? State reasons for your answer. (C) Is diameter of projection lens important in the matter of efficiency? Explain fully.

Answer to Question No. 214

Bluebook School Question No. 214 was: (A) May a lens look perfectly clean when looked directly through, and still not be so? Explain. (B) This may seem a repetition and really is. However, please describe the effect of various sorts of dirt coatings on lenses upon the screen image. (C) Tell us how you would clean a lens.

I must once more caution some of you to be more careful. I do not like to discard answers in which everything is clear and correct, except perhaps one or two points, errors which apparently are due either to pure carelessness or lack of exertion. I feel that a man will be encouraged to study if his name is in every week, and that its omission even one week may have a discouraging effect; therefore, I have very often "squeezed" some one through under the above named circumstances. But be careful. This work is well worth the making of a real effort. The following sent in acceptable answers:

There were so many really excellent answers to Section A that I have decided to publish the answer of our oldest Bluebook School members, C. Rau and S. Evans, who say:

"Yes, a lens may look perfectly clean when looked directly through, but when turned so as to be viewed at an angle it may be found not to be so. Dust can ordinarily be seen from any angle, or no angle at all. However, faint stains, as of oil from the tip of a finger, may be invisible when looked straight through, yet when viewed from an angle are quite visible because of differences in reflection from the clean lens portions and from such spots.

"It may be noted that after the careful cleaning of a lens surface, when light is projected through and the surface viewed from an angle, faint tracings may be seen, such as a greasy mark, in the form of a ring, following the path of the cleaning cloth. From this it is seen that a very careful examination must be made after cleaning before one can be assured the lens is really clean and perfectly polished.

"It also points to the necessity for being very certain the cleaning cloth is itself perfectly clean. Many are now using a very fine, soft tissue for lens cleaning, which practice is to be commended. However, some have heard of this and have selected ordinary toilet paper, which must not be done. While some papers of this sort may be excellent, others would be far from excellent.

I think T. Van Vaulkenburg has a bit the best of it in the many excellent answers to Section B. He says:

"The effect would depend upon what lens it might be. Dirt of any sort on a condenser lens means loss of light, but no injurious results will be had so far as concerns the light that does reach the projection lens. Dirt on the projection lens will mean light loss and loss of contrast by reason of misdirected light. If it be merely a light coating of ordinary dust, or atmospheric deposit in the form of a scum, then the loss will not be great in either direction. If the coating be heavy, the loss in light through increased reflection will be heavy, and the loss in contrast due to misdirection of light rays also will be considerable. If the dirt be oily in its nature, then not only will reflection be increased, but also the light will be more or less diffused or dispersed, and the definition at a corresponding point of the screen image will be affected; possibly entirely ruined if the coating be heavy enough, in addition to which the contrast of other parts of the image will be lowered.

"Summing up, the effect will or may be (a) loss of light, (b) injury to screen image definition, (c) injury to picture contrast."

(C) Again I am most agreeably surprised by the many really excellent answers. D. Ferguson says:

"I would wash the lens in soapsuds, using pure castile soap, rubbing it thoroughly with soft absorbent cotton and drying thoroughly with a clean chamois skin. I would then put on a pair of clean cotton gloves, polish the lens surfaces with clean cotton, being sure all lint is removed, and then remount it. Personally I believe alcohol is injurious to the Canada balsam, whereas soap and water is perfectly safe."

I am unable to see how alcohol could injure the balsam, inasmuch as I do not believe it could possibly enter the seal. However, some lens experts have of late recommended soap and water. They condemn, however, the use of a chamois for the reason that there is always the possibility of some foreign matter becoming embedded therein.

D. Danielson says: "There are many patent lens cleaning compounds on the market, but I have found those I have tried to be either unworthy or exorbitant in price. The Bausch & Lomb Optical Company recommends the use of luke warm water, with a limited amount of Ivory soap added if oil be present in any degree. This I have found to be good, provided all the soap be rinsed off before polishing. I apply the water with a chamois skin. Some lens folks recommend a tissue known as 'Kleenex,' or similar patented tissue papers, for polishing. These do a good job, all right, but I find them to be lint producing. Very soft tissue paper serves fairly well. A solution of water and pure alcohol [He says "denatured," but that won't do at all. It leaves a coating on the glass.—F. H. R.] in which a soft cloth has been dampened may be used for lens cleaning. The polishing is done with a soft, dry cloth. I am now using this method with excellent results. It is cheap and effective if used intelligently. Plenty of time must be given to polishing. In lens cleaning there is a kind of grease I can heartily recommend; namely, elbow grease. Either of the methods above outlined, with intelligence and plenty of elbow grease, will do the job and do it well."

ment used in the exchanges. The Sub-Committee on Exchange Practice has been working very closely with the Projection Practice Committee on the problem of the 1,700 foot reel, and the combined reports of those two committees will represent the concerted opinion of the society on the problem.

Study of Uniformity

The Sound Committee likewise has been engaged in unraveling the technical difficulties of sound recording and reproduction. Its work has been very closely related to the acoustical problems involved and in that respect it has endeavored to correlate the electrical demands of the problems with the acoustical situations found in the studio review rooms and theatres. One of the most important problems, which was recently resolved by the committee, was that of determining whether the uniformity of response with frequency should exist in each discreet piece of apparatus, from the microphone to the loudspeaker, or whether various degrees of compensation should exist in certain pieces of equipment for deficiencies in other pieces.

The latest problem with which the Sound Committee is concerned deals with the maintenance of the wide frequency range and volume range now employed in motion picture recording and reproduction. Wonderful improvements have been made during the past year by extending those ranges, but it has become patent that all the work involved in achieving those improvements will be for naught if anything is allowed to interfere in the recording or reproduction. Accordingly, it may be expected that the findings of the committee in this study will represent one of the most important works that the society has accomplished.

The Color Committee has periodically made a review of the patent situation of color cinematography, and is now engaged in compiling an elaborate glossary of terms used in color work. The Historical Committee is gathering information concerning the work of the pioneers in the industry, and preserving important records of progress. It has within its purview also the building of a museum of motion picture memorabilia at the Los Angeles Museum in California, and an additional collection of historical equipment has been begun at the Museum of Science and Industry in New York.

Other Committees of the Society, such as the Convention and Papers Committee, are engaged in promoting the technical meetings of the society and encouraging the scientists and engineers to submit to the society for permanent record in the Journal complete and periodic account of their developmental and research work, which accounts are presented at the conventions and local meetings of the society. The annual and semi-annual reports of all the committees are published in the Journal of the society, the conventions are held twice a year in various cities, and the local section meetings (Atlantic Coast, Mid-West and Pacific Coast) are held regularly each month.

Cover All Branches

The activities of the society, during the past few years, have so widened as to include almost every phase of production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

In the Journal, official monthly organ of the society, have been published since 1916 21 volumes of material devoted exclusively to the motion picture industry.

The membership of the society includes laboratory technicians, photographic chemists, cinematographers, studio technicians, projectionists, equipment manufacturers, producers, theatre managers, directors, sound recordists, illuminating engineers, exhibitors, opticians, equipment designing engineers, exchange managers, film editors, physicists, acoustical engineers, amateur cinematographers, and many others interested in motion picture engineering either as a vocation or as an avocation. Membership in the society is open to any one interested in the motion picture art and every member receives the monthly Journal and other publications of the society and is privileged to attend and participate in all the national and regional meetings.

AGFA ANNOUNCES SUPERPAN NEGATIVE

SUPERPAN NEGATIVE represents a refinement in motion picture negative film manufacture rather than an invention of startling novelty.

It embodies in film of SUPER-SENSITIVE speed a FINER GRAIN.

A wider latitude in both exposure and development increases the range of pictorial possibilities of motion pictures.

Its non-abrasion surface coating protects the EMULSION physically, while the anti-halation coating underlying the emulsion preserves the photographic definition.

High evenly balanced COLOR SENSITIVITY simplifies the problem of correct registration under any lighting condition and will permit any desired color emphasis without requiring serious deep sacrifices with the use of filters.

SOUND EQUIPMENT
WIDE RANGE

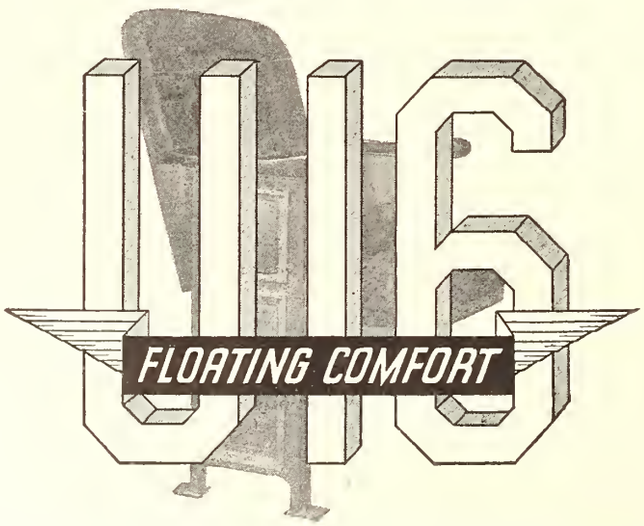
SPECIAL ATTENTION: Syncrofilm Sound Heads are now available for Motiograph Projectors, Model F and Model H, in both our DeLuxe Model A and Model D. We have just added these two new sound heads to our line and can now supply heads for Powers, Simplex, Superior, and Motiograph Model F and Model H.

Syncrofilm Sound Heads are designed to meet the requirements of the projector on which they are mounted, and feature simplicity and ease of operation.

Syncrofilm Products are built to the highest precision standards, giving years of service with negligible upkeep.

WIDE RANGE enters your theatre with the new Syncrofilm Sound Heads. You need Wide Range reproduction, your box office demands it. Take full advantage of the new improvements in sound equipment. Get full value from the new recordings. Syncrofilm Sound Heads produce every frequency recorded on the film. Every fine shading of voice and music on the track is transmitted to the amplifier, producing absolute, accurate and natural reproduction.

Syncrofilm solves your projection problems, whether for sound heads, amplifiers or speakers.



Sold on a Money Back Guarantee.

adaptation to best presentations, projection methods and equipment as well as sound reproduction in the theatre, and the practical as well as theoretical aspects of the work of the projectionist.

The Society is no more interested in one branch of the industry than in another; its scope extends to methods and processes as definitely as to equipment and its design; and its activities cover the whole range from studio to theatre. Its members come from every division of the industry, and they are welded together into a cooperative whole through the activities of the Society. Neither in its membership nor in its committees and governing body is there any lack of an independent spirit.

The spirit of the exclusive clique is foreign to its policies, and its many members have shown a commendable willingness to forego personal or corporate advantage on occasion for the common good. The board of governors of the Society journey to the board meetings from great distances in a number of cases, and devote careful thought and valuable time to working out the problems of the industry through the Society.

Film Theatres in Greece Totaled 122 in January

On January 1, 1934, there was a total of 122 motion picture theatres operating in Greece, according to a report from K. L. Rankin, commercial attache in Athens. In addition, there are about 15 or 20 small film establishments operating part time in village cafes. A large number of outdoor theatres are operated during the hot summer months, using the equipment of indoor houses, which are closed during the summer because of lack of ventilation. Practically all houses of any importance are wired, though in many cases the apparatus has been assembled from parts imported piecemeal from abroad.

RKO Radio Staff Develops New Camera

William Eglington and Harry Cunningham of the RKO Radio camera staff at the Hollywood studio have developed a new camera, used for the first time on "Of Human Bondage," which is claimed by the studio to potentially save hundreds of hours and thousands of dollars in production.

The new camera weighs 115 pounds, which compares with 160 pounds for the old type and is said to be one-fourth the size of the ordinary camera, thus permitting facile handling on the set. There is no glass in front of the lens, obviating the necessity of constant watchfulness to avoid light reflections.

Ontario Tax Nets Total Of $904,591 During 1933

A total of $904,591 was collected from amusement taxes in Ontario, Canada, last year, it was announced by Premier G. S. Henry last week at Toronto. The figure represented a decrease from the previous year. On the basis of returns during the past four months, however, budget figures for this year have estimated the returns from this source at $1,800,000, an 11% increase.

Your Theatre needs this TEST REEL

● For theatres, review rooms, exchanges, laboratories and wherever quality reproduction is desired. These reels are an S.M.P.E. Standard, prepared under the supervision of the Projection Practice Committee.

● The visual section includes special targets for detecting travel-ghost, lens aberration, definition, and film weave. The sound section includes recordings of various kinds of music and voice, in addition to constant frequency, constant amplitude recordings for testing the quality of reproduction, the frequency range, the presence of flutter, and 60-cycle or 96-cycle modulation, and the adjustment of the sound track.

● No longer need you be in doubt about your projection equipment delivering highest possible quality results. These reels, each 500 feet long, are designed to be used as a precision instrument in testing the performance of projectors.

"Eliminates all excuses for poor reproduction. Projectionists know just where they stand through the aid of these reels. I recommend them unqualifiedly."—THAD BARROWS, Publix Theatres, Boston, Mass.

"No theatre that serves its patrons well should be without these test reels. Simply great."—R. H. McCULLOUGH, Fox West Coast Service Corp.

New Rules for Picture Producers in China

A new set of regulations pertaining to passports for motion picture producers in China has been promulgated by the Executive Yuan. Any foreigner who wishes to take pictures in China must first obtain a passport from the government for traveling in the interior. With this passport, the necessity of obtaining a permit from the local authorities follows, according to Julean Arnold, American commercial attache at Shanghai.

All pictures must be made under the close supervision of representatives of local authorities, Mr. Arnold wrote, and the subject matter of the pictures taken must not be (1) derogatory to the prestige of the Chinese nation; (2) antagonistic to the Three People's Principles; (3) contrary to custom or morals and, (4) relate to superstitions. All pictures must then be passed by the National Board of Film Censors before exportation.

New Producing Company Is Formed in Colorado

The Premier Pictures Corporation, organized by interests in Denver and Colorado Springs, is hoped by its sponsors to be the means of putting the state on the motion picture production map. With 250,000 shares, no par value, in capital, local bankers hope to dispose of the entire stock issue within the state.

Location has been established five miles outside Colorado Springs, on a 440,000 acre ranch. Forty acres have been purchased, with an option taken on any of the rest. Plans call for the expenditure of $150,000 in buildings and equipment in the next six months. The production of short subjects is expected to start within the next three months. Allen Curtis will direct. Directors of the corporation are Mr. Curtis, W. A. Shane, Edward Fallon, G. H. Shane and Roy Carver.

Buenos Aires Had 404 Releases During 1933

A total of 404 films were released in Buenos Aires, Argentina, during the year 1933, reports Jule B. Smith, assistant trade commissioner. Of the number, 74.7 per cent came from the United States and in 77.7 per cent of the total the English language was used. Buenos Aires is said to have the greatest number of releases of any city in the world, due to its excessive number of houses, estimated at 158, with an annual attendance of more than 19,000,000. The total number of houses in Argentina is estimated at 1500, of which more than one-third are wired.

Gray Heads Radio Work For Columbia Pictures

Vernon Gray has been appointed to head the Columbia Pictures radio department by George Brown, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation. Mr. Gray previously worked for Paramount for 12 years, and for Fox, and has been identified in radio work with WOR and various stations of the NBC chain.

Vivian Moses, who had been handling special publicity for Columbia for several months, and Harold Davis Emerson, of the publicity staff, have resigned.

DEAR HERALD:

When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her banner to the air,
She tore the azure robes of night
And set the stars of glory there.

We don't recall just who it was who wrote that, but whoever it was we will venture to say it was written near the commencement of this century, for they don't write that kind of poetry today. They write "love" and "her ruby lips" and "her divine form," etc., etc. We hear it from crooners on the radio, we hear it from wouldbe crooners in pictures, until we have ceased to wonder that they are forming nudist colonies all over the land.

We are told constantly that the world is growing better and better all the while. Well, maybe it is. We would be very unpopular to express an adverse opinion, but since our unpopularity commenced at the time we started our uneventful career, it doesn't matter a whole lot what we say.

Take the verses you hear in a lot of songs on the radio and in altogether too many pictures, and separate them from the music and see if you can make any sense out of them. We can't. Then think of the men you know, or have heard of today, and see if you can pick out any Washingtons, Lincolns, Grants, Clevelands, Garfields or Blaines. We can't. We will agree that the world is getting better. We will agree to this merely to keep you from hunting up your shotgun, but we will not agree that it is because of the wouldbe song writers, and it machts nicht aus to us what you think about it.

As to Lotteries

We understand that New York is strongly advocating a state lottery in order to get more revenue for the state. Out here there is talk of the same thing. Here we have a law against slot machines. It is illegal to bet on horse races, on cards, for theatres to give away groceries or offer any inducements for the purchase of tickets, but there's a proposition to legalize a state lottery as a means of getting more money from the suckers into the public feed trough. If the state would operate the lottery and get all the money we don't know but what we might favor it; but if it is to be run by a gambling syndicate, we'd be against it. The more we think about it the more we are inclined to think that "Consistency" went down with the ship.

A few nights ago we saw "Son of Kong," which was reported to be better than "King Kong" itself. It was built largely along the line of "King Kong," but not so spectacular. Had the public thought that the animals were real instead of being faked, it would have given the picture a more satisfying flavor, but the days are past for humbugging the public. You can't feed 'em liver sausage and make 'em think it is huckleberry pie.

A Good Talker

We have heard a lot of smokers say that they would like to quit smoking but they just couldn't do it. That's a lot of horseradish. A man can quit any habit if he wants to, but he generally don't want to. We had smoked for 60 years, but the Doc told us we would have to quit. We did. We haven't smoked for over two weeks, although we have a box of cigars sitting on the library table where we could reach one at any time, but we don't want to. We will admit that we had to do a lot of talking to ourself to keep from it, but then we are a good talker. We persuaded a woman once to let us fish in the creek on her place by telling her how young she looked and how well she kept her hair dressed, although she was close to 60 and we doubt if she had combed her hair in two weeks. Some people might call it flattery, but we call it diplomacy. We made it work. We never believe in telling a lie unless you tell one big enough to knock 'em off their feet. But we did quit smoking, and that's no Joshua.

California has a lot of things to be proud of. She has her figs, oranges, roses, walnuts, beaches, and many other things besides Mildred Early. We just got a nice long letter from Mildred and that's why we are including her with California's most important and interesting products.

Among other things she says: "I always read your Colyum the first thing when the HERALD arrives each week" (what more could one want as proof of her excellent judgment). She also said that Miss Lola Gentry of the Film Board told her that she had not forgotten the dinner engagement she had with us two years ago. NOTE. Now, listen boys, don't jump at conclusions. We did have a dinner engagement with her, but unfortunately some darn thing kept us from fulfilling it, but the fact that she still remembers it adds a whole lot to our estimated importance.

Miss Early tells us that Jeannette Meehan is still in the HERALD office and sends her love and best wishes, which causes the clouds to disappear and the sun to shine a little brighter on our side of the calf pasture. But maybe you'd like to know who Miss Early and Miss Meehan are. Well, Miss Early is the tall, handsome blonde in the HERALD office who keeps the wheels going around and Miss Meehan is the granddaughter of the late Gene Stratton Porter, who wrote "Freckles," "Keeper of the Bees" and other interesting books. We are delighted to count them as two of our most loyal friends.

From away up in Tolley, North Dakota, comes a poetic letter from Frank Esenburg, film peddler for United Artists. Frank was evidently trying to unload some of United Artist's excellent product on Doc Hurd, and to get even with him Doc made him write us a letter in verse, the following being one of the stanzas:

I know you'll get a kick from this,
Doc Hurd here your bum lines don't miss,
He made me write in rhyme.
He runs the show in Tolley here,
That is, when he's not full of beer,
Which is most of the time.

The idea of a man being "full of beer" in a dry state like North Dakota. It's preposterous. If it had been our old friend, John Piller, of Valley City there might have been something to it.

Tolley is where the grasshoppers hold mass conventions between picnics and discuss the relative merits of barbed wire fences and pitchfork handles as proper dessert for weak stomachs. If Doc didn't buy some United Artists service we hope some one ties a tin can to the tail of his bulldog. Thanks, Frank, for your letter.

Then again comes a letter from away down in Tryon, Oklahoma, from C. E. McClain, telling us to send the HERALD to his Liberty Theatre at Tryon and his Ritz Theatre at Oilton. Thanks, Brother McClain; your order has gone in and everybody is happy.

C. E. says that on June 30 he will retire from the servce of Uncle Sam after 30 years. Which is evident that if he could hold a job with our esteemed Uncle for 30 years he must be a Republican strongly tinctured with democracy. Anyhow, 30 years' service proves that he must be all right or else they were short on Democrats. Thanks, Mac. I hope to see you some time—

When the birds begin to sing
And the summer days are here,
When the roosters all get chummy with the hens,
Then we'll make the echoes ring
When we both get full of beer
And go and gather eggs out in the pens.

A federal investigation of local conditions involving circuits and exchanges and sponsored by the recently formed Independent Theatre Owners' Association is under way in Chicago. A meeting of the group at the Stevens Hotel last week was attended by two representatives of the Federal Trade Commission, working under the direction of William Dinnen, local agent. Complaints of a number of exhibitors were heard, both in open meeting and in private. Arrangements were made for hearing further complaints at the commission's office, 1118 new post office building. It was learned that several local exchanges had been called upon to produce copies of film contracts with circuits and letters pertaining to protection.

HOLQUIST

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AS FAR AS IT GOES

In his annual address delivered at the first business session of the recent Los Angeles MPTOA convention, President Ed Kuykendall had this to say regarding the theatre manager:

> ". . . Personality more than any one factor counts in the theatre operations of today; therefore the individual theatre manager owes it to himself and this industry to take full advantage of it. Theatres in all states cannot be operated today by one master mind in New York; each community calls for a special treatment. The theatre cannot be made into a machine (it is not that kind of a business); therefore the theatre manager each year is given more authority in the individual operation of his theatre. . . ."

Mr. Kuykendall's remarks are true as far as they go, but he might have added—"unfortunately, every capable theatre manager is not allowed by his superiors to utilize the full force of his personality to the theatre's advantage"—or words to that effect.

It is agreed that localized operation is the answer to many exhibition ills. Constructive minds of the industry have time and again affirmed it in one form or another. But successful decentralized management will be brought about only when every able theatreman is recognized as a person of actual importance and is turned loose to show his stuff.

The exhibitors are kidding themselves in convention or out, if they believe that any lasting solution of their ills can be found without due consideration being given to the status of the manager as the keystone of the entire structure.

IT ALL DEPENDS

After complimenting us on the number of low-cost stunts published in a recent issue, a member asks why we do not run more inexpensive ideas. To which, one answer might be—exactly what constitutes an inexpensive idea?

Two managers in similar situations can work on the same tieup or bally, and one almost invariably will put his over at a lower cost than the other, due perhaps to better promotion or a softer local "touch." Two showmen will devise and execute the very same theatre front, and again almost invariably one will show a smaller nut.

Thus the cost attached to box office ideas depends, among other things, upon showmanship, local conditions and facilities, general savvy and experience. Many campaigns we publish can be labeled both expensive and inexpensive to put over. It all depends.

For the further information of discouraged theatremen and those skeptical of opportunities for advancement, we call attention to the following Round Tablers and their recent assignments awarded for the sterling results these members have produced as managers and assistants:

Walter Morris, Managing Director, Stanley Theatre, Baltimore; J. J. Rosenfield, City Manager, Tri-State Theatres, Omaha; Francis Deering, Manager, Loew's State, Memphis; Billings Booth, City Manager, Loew Theatres, Athens, Ga.; L. D. Clarke, City Manager, Fox Theatres, Ocean Park, Cal.; Milton Overman, City Manager, Publix Theatres, Pueblo, Colo.

In spite of the sad(?) state of the theatre, it is evident that managerial ability is still being recognized.

A certain chain executive is supposed to have made the crack in open meeting that he would fire any of his managers who were caught playing golf. And another circuit operator has stated that he would fire his managers who did not play golf.

Well, at least they agree on the firing.

LEISURE CLASSES

Warm weather is just around the corner. And with the flowers that bloom in the Spring comes a flock of new headaches for managers who are not yet planning to stimulate business during the coming months. In addition to the usual griefs the theatreman falls heir to on the arrival of outdoors weather, he is now confronted by the added competition of classes in leisure. With the shortening of working hours, it is assumed that folks do not know just what to do with their new found liberty, so they are being sent to school to learn profitable ways of spending time—but not money.

Smart members alive to the possibilities of what can happen to the box office if this thing spreads, are busily putting together campaigns that will return a fair slice of this leisure time. In this issue are chronicled some of the ideas that Round Tablers are working to bring attention to the "school" of the motion picture theatre.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Is this poor manager too overcome to even answer?

McGinnis Publishes Amusement Weekly

Another Round Tabler who has gone into publishing, and evidently profitably to judge from his early results, is R. V. McGinnis, owner-manager of the New Theatre, Russellville, Ark. Called "Amusement News and Shoppers Guide" is the four page tab size sheet that McGinnis puts out weekly, containing a lot of paid advertising as well as theatre news.

In his first issue, "R. V." stated editorially that he was not competing with the local paper, but was publishing his "News" to keep his patrons well informed of the coming programs. And he is doing it in a capable manner by printing 4000 copies distributed free, the entire setup smacking of skilled professional handling. Well done, McGinnis.

Roth Does Own Printing Of Weekly Programs

Manager W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn., forwards a number of weekly programs that he prints personally in his own shop and asks for some criticisms on his work. For the purpose they are intended, these programs are well done. They are five inches wide by seven inches, printed on varicolored coated stock and Roth uses one- and two-column press book mats and accompanying copy. The rest of the program is carried underneath, together with institutional advertising.

Upside Down 24s Create Excitement

My, my, there seems to be a fever spreading over the country of upside down 24 sheets, for in the past few weeks a number of campaigns have been forwarded which include this curiosity-provoker. The latest instance is reported from Harlan, Ky., where Colonel C. R. Stoflet, of Consolidated Theatres, managed to cop a newspaper story on this old-timer. The stunt was pulled on "Hips Hips, Hooray" and "C. R." says that his cashier was driven a bit frantic by numerous phone calls of those hastening to apprise the theatre of the "error."

Trewhela Continues To Crash the Front Page

Folks out in Lewiston, Mont., think there is something amiss when the local papers do not run a page one story on Johnny Trewhela's activities at the Judith Theatre. Johnny knows what the editors want, and gives it to them, for many happy returns.

Visiting in town was the master mechanic of the "Eskimo" expedition to Alaska, and as the picture was dated about that time, Trewhela was able to arrange a lot of two and three column interviews giving the low down on the production, all the stories carrying the proper theatre credits. The visitor was amenable to a personal appearance during the run, and that of course was good for other breaks.

John is also in demand as a luncheon and after dinner speaker, one of his most recent talks being about the movies, in which he said some kind words about MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Thanks, pardner.

Boucher's Publicity Colors Shopper's Weekly

Frank Boucher has not informed us whether or not he is behind the Shopper's Weekly, a six page regular size sheet published in Hagerstown, Md. But there is certainly a number of effective theatre stories and cuts on the current and coming attractions at the Maryland and Colonial Theatres, where Frank is in command.

Carried each week is a serial instalment, the present one being on "Wonder Bar," a front page notice calling attention to this feature and the date of its local showing. There is a lot of other picture stuff, but the idea is far from a house program, as plenty of outside advertising is represented.

Adler Ties Comic Strip To "Palooka" Showing

Nashville, Tenn., papers carry the Joe Palooka comic strip and Manager Edwin Adler, Vendome Theatre, missed no angles in tying this in on his "Palooka" showing. Papers went for large display ads on the date and plugged it further with banners on all delivery trucks. The sweat shirt merchandise hookup was also effected with window displays and mention in store advertising.

Sedge Tilts Grosses On "Venus" Contest

An "American Venus and Apollo" contest to find the best proportioned woman and handsomest man on Staten Island has just been completed by Sedge Coppock, skipper of the Paramount Theatre, Stapleton, S. I. Run on nine consecutive Wednesday evenings, including Lent, with a program of second choice pictures, the stunt is reported to have consistently tripled business on this day at an average weekly expense of $40.

Sedge's thought was that stage bathing beauty revues would be more apt to draw during the winter months and with this in mind had 10 different girls in bathing suits enter the contest each week. Audience applause decided the weekly winner, after which any of the girls with talent were permitted to compete for other prizes. The entire program ran 45 minutes, giving Sedge an acceptable stage show at little cost.

On the ninth Wednesday, all the weekly winners appeared together from which the finalist was chosen. Then, as a climax, Sedge put on the gag to find the handsomest man and says that it went over so well he had to stop selling tickets by nine o'clock.

During the entire contest, everything was done to keep the idea on a high plane. Stage settings and lobby displays were elaborate and newspaper advertising dignified.

"Viva Villa" Gets Ace Story Breaks

Billy Ferguson, MGM exploitation chief, discovered that the daughter of the late Pancho Villa was living in El Paso, Texas, and made immediate arrangements which resulted in the personal appearance of the girl at the opening of "Viva Villa," at the New York Criterion.

The arrival of the young lady was covered by all the newspapers with stories and pictures which, of course, mentioned the title and theatre. As there had been innumerable difficulties to be overcome in securing a contract for Miss Villa's services during which time she was reported to have been spirited away to Mexico, reports of her experiences were covered by the wire associations, thus giving the picture an additional buildup all over the country.

Finney Steps Fast At Atlantic City

Ed Finney put over a fancy job of work on making Atlantic City Monogram-conscious during the recent convention of that company held in the seashore city. Special campaigns were put on for "Broken Dreams" at the Steel Pier and "Beggars in Ermine" at the Strand, in which the conventioneers were given a neat break with the line "Welcome Men of Monogram" carried in all advertising and in lights on the Pier (see photo).

This plug was also carried in window cards, spotted along the boardwalk, wherein the titles of both pictures were headed by photos of W. Ray Johnston and Trem Carr, Monogram heads. Finney arranged special broadcasts to plug the local showings of the pictures and during these programs tribute was paid to Johnston on his 20th anniversary in the business.

All papers ran daily stories and shots of those in attendance, and important convention announcements were sent out over the A. P. wires. Local stories of the gathering were tied into the current attractions.

As a lobby bally at the Steel Pier on "Broken Dreams," a mystic interpreted dreams and gave free readings. Tying in with the date on "Beggars in Ermine," a newspaper contest was put over in which the practices of beggars were exposed and the means employed to promote handouts.

Traffic Rules Plug "Trouble" at Rivoli

Though the heated months may still be some distance away, those United Artist exploiteers have already welcomed the warm season by putting out a traffic card embodying summer rules for driving in New York. Copy on reverse side reads, "Drive Carefully—Don't Go 'Looking for Trouble.' Follow Rules on Other Side." The top half of the card is given over to the traffic regulations, the last and far from the least is the "snapper," advising motorists to drive to the Rivoli to see "Looking for Trouble."

Sizable free newspaper ads were secured in tieups with prominent radio and shoe stores, the tiein line of copy being the same as the one used above, with further space given to theatre cuts and credits.

As the picture has to do with the adventures of telephone "trouble shooters," tieups were made with the local phone companies wherein the picture was plugged to all employees.

GOVERNOR OF IDAHO TO PRESENT AWARD

Nevin McCord Will Receive the March Quigley Plaque from Governor Ross; Louis Marcus Heads Committee in Charge

Immediately after the judges' decision had made Manager Nevin McCord, of the Granada Theatre, Boise, Idaho, winner of the March Quigley trophy, arrangements were under way for a presentation in keeping with those accorded the January and February winners.

Heading a committee of prominent Western theatremen and state officials, the Honorable Louis Marcus, Mayor of Salt Lake City, Utah, and operator of the circuit of which the Granada is a unit, at this writing is sponsoring the ceremonies in Boise, the capital of Idaho, at which Governor C. Ben Ross will personally present the March Award to McCord. It is expected that full details of the ceremony and pictures will be carried in the next issue.

McCord's Campaign

The selling angle on "Frontier Marshal" that did the business was the exploitation of "Queenie," a character in the picture, as a Mae West type, advertising copy containing the line "The Mae West of the Old West." McCord states that it was so successful that an extra Saturday show was necessary, and the campaign is now being adopted by Division Manager Harry David for use in all other Marcus theatres playing the picture.

Through the cooperation of the Fox Studios, McCord was able to obtain some of the actual costumes worn in the picture, which were worn by the theatre cashier in advance and also hooked into an "Anniversary of Progress" campaign put on by a leading store. Another good window was obtained with an exhibit of old guns McCord borrowed from his State Historical Museum, and these were also used in the lobby.

Nevin secured many other prominent locations with an adaptation of Charlie Winchell's photostat newspaper idea from the Round Table section of Feb. 14. The greatest part of his outdoor billing was accomplished through tieups in windows, busses, taxis, etc., as the advertising budget did not allow the purchase of posters.

A newspaper subscription tieup resulted in many inches of free space, McCord paying only for a small percentage of the actual lineage used, the rest promoted from the newspaper and other merchants with whom tieups were made.

The above are the highlights of the campaign, the entire cost of which was reported to be under $50. Nevin states that great care was taken so as not to create the impression that Mae West was in the picture, and further states that many of his patrons said that this was the first Western they had ever liked, with additional business coming from those who did not care for pictures of that type and were sold on the Mae West angle.

Costumed Girls Bally Sizer's "Moulin Rouge"

Numerous kicky ideas put over by Manager Eaton Sizer, Jeffris Theatre, Janesville, Wis., on "Moulin Rouge" were topped with a flock of gals in costume who bally'd the attraction in various ways. One pair worked the main streets handing out heralds piled on a huge compo tray which supported a giant cutout champagne bottle. Another girl, also in costume, was placed on a platform in lobby from which she pointed to an illuminated easel beside her. Still a third, dressed likewise, operated a p. a. system over which were played the song hits and announcements made.

Co-op page in which merchants gave free tickets for sales over a certain figure, also helped, as did effective displays in various stores. Eaton promoted a number of vacant store windows in good spots, and had these dressed with great care and detail, using colorful backgrounds lighted with baby spots.

IMPORTANT TO QUIGLEY ENTRANTS

So that there will be no misunderstanding, the Judges have definitely set the deadline for April Quigley Award entries at midnight, Saturday, May 5. This means that campaigns to be considered must be actually delivered at Club headquarters before or at this time. Managers are requested to give this date careful attention and to make the necessary mailing provisions so that their entries will arrive in time.—MIKE.

24 Sheet Cutouts on Street and in Lobby

Activities in different fields of exploitation reported by Manager Ben Wallerstein, Palace Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, indicate much work being done in this quarter to put over attractions. Street stunts are favored. On "Fashions" silk banners were hung on street car poles in neighborhood of theatre. Transportation company tied in on "Flying Down to Rio" by providing bannered street car Ben promoting brass band to travel inside car playing song hits.

Two 24-sheet cutouts were used on "Convention City," displayed first in lobby, then mounted on truck with engine valve and train whistle. Eyes in star pictures were cutout and flashers placed back of 24. The train lamps were lit up with red and green bulbs, and handkerchiefs placed in the stars' hands. Draft created by fan gave display effect of animation.

Ben and his crew are hustling for all the business in sight and accompanying photo is a group shot of the entire house staff. The be-spatted gent seated on the right is Ben in person.

Newspaper Ties In On Hat Designing Contest

Freshened up and promoted for excellent returns was the always reliable hat designing contest as effected by Manager Carter Barron of Loew's Fox, Washington, D. C., and publicist Lou Brown on "Gallant Lady." Local newspaper went for it handsomely, breaking this for four days with two-column cuts of Harding and smaller cuts showing star wearing different style hats. Cash prizes and passes were offered.

The Cinema Hat Shop hookin as arranged for the New York date was also put on here, stores cooperating with windows and ads. The usual radio and hotel orchestra tieups were made.

Reese Gives Prizes On Letter Idea

Nineteenth anniversary kiddie show of the Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, was celebrated by Manager Horace Reese with a gag that he reports worked very well for him. Special cardboard throwaways were distributed to the children with free admissions given to the first fifty who turned in the correct amount of letters on the card included in the name of the theatre. The program was carried below, which of course meant that the youngsters would study it carefully in counting up the necessary words.

Wright Promotes Heralds from Stores

Manager Jack Wright, Palace Theatre, Taylor, Texas, advertised the southern premiere of "George White's Scandals" with a lobby display on which he states much extra effort was expended. In advance, a large shadow box was placed in front of the theatre with elaborate setpiece (see photo), and on opening day the flash was added to with a banner atop the marquee.

As his advertising budget is very small, Jack has to promote heralds and other advertising through cooperation with local merchants, and on this attraction tied in with a dry cleaner's to pay for the printing of throwaways, copy of which guaranteed the workmanship of the store and the entertainment of the picture.

Wright keeps down the nut by doing all his own sign work in the theatre art shop and is kind enough to state that he gets many good pointers from the Round Table pages. Thanks, Jack, so say many others.

Al Zimbalist Making Many Ace Tieups

The 21 theatres of the St. Louis Amusement Co. now receive daily free broadcasts of their programs through a tieup arranged by Publicity Director Al Zimbalist. In addition the hookup includes etherizing of contests on different pictures and this was recently inaugurated by Al on "Flying Down to Rio," on which he reports many answers received.

Exploitation was done on a large scale to plug the day and date runs of the picture in many of the theatres, 35 neighborhood weekly papers carrying special stories and contests. Ushers were dressed in flying costumes and airplane parts were promoted to dress up lobbies.

The "Carioca" dance was promoted in a number of dance halls and other plugs arranged with music stores all over the city. Numerous other tieins were made, newspaper cooperation being featured with a large "Lux" ad on Del Rio in which the picture and names of theatres were mentioned.

The floral display angle is not being neglected in St. Louis, accompany photo showing an Easter lobby display promoted by George Woods, district manager. The value of the flower tieup is evidently recognized in this spot as Al tells us that this tie-in was put over in many of the houses.

Barrel Stunt Clicks On Leon's "Duck" Date

The barrel gag is still making the rounds —and profitably. Manager Leon Pickle, Kentucky Theatre, Henderson, Ky., made recent use of it on "Duck Soup" (see photo) reporting that it attracted attention both on the street and in the lobby.

The workings of this one was described some issues back, but for the information of those who missed it, a small fan in the bottom of the barrel makes the heads revolve. Leon recommends the gaudiest colors for the copy. See January 20 issue, page 82, for further details.

New Member Puts Across Excellent Style Show

A well devised stage style show entitled "A Century of Progress in Style" was featured by Manager J. R. Smith on his showing of "Beloved" at the Lensic Theatre, Santa Fe, New Mexico. A tiein with one of the leading stores furnished different dresses, hats and shoes from morning to evening wear and 12 local girls to model.

Smith built a stage setting of an old colonial home with large Georgian pillars through which the models made their entrance wearing the styles of the early '80s. Then the stage was blacked out and the second scene was a modernistic set upon which the models wearing the new style entered through a large picture frame to a revolving turntable, all of this to the accompaniment of new and old orchestral music.

"J. R." is a new member and this marks his first contribution. It is well done indeed and we anticipate further campaigns as effective from this Southwest showman.

Patrons Dine With Stars on "Dinner"

From Harry Sugarman, skipper of Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood, Cal., comes a different slant on "Dinner at Eight" in which his patrons were "invited" to dine with some real picture stars. It was worked as follows. In advance and for three days of the run, a trailer announced that patrons were requested to leave their names and telephone numbers and that on certain days Jack LaRue, the Paramount star, would select four names and these would be invited to attend a dinner at one of the four leading restaurants with which the hookup was made. In the event that a man was chosen, it was mandatory that he be accompanied by a woman and vice versa, thereby making up a dinner of eight.

Each restaurant was visited in turn, and a day in advance a prominent table was set aside with a card to the effect that it was reserved for the Egyptian Theatre "Dinner at Eight." The guests were requested to meet in Harry's office when the proper introductions were made, after which two bannered Chevrolet sedans were used to escort the guests to dinner. The finale of the evening was the return to the theatre where the diners saw the picture as Harry's guests.

So well did the idea go over that the participating restaurants vied with one another in plugging the gag.

Shaffer Sells Love Angle on "Eskimo"

For his box office purposes, Manager Frank K. Shaffer, Virginia Theatre, Harrisonburg, Va., saw fit to sell "Eskimo" from the love angle and states that this was helpful in stimulating business from among those who might not care for the travelogue or educational slants in the picture. Frank concentrated his campaign on his adult patronage and students at a local teachers' college, refraining wisely from any special tieups with grade school children.

Personal letters were directed to teachers in the city and county schools, inviting them to see the picture, but not recommending it especially for the younger generation. Many of the press book tieup were effected and telephone calls made to city officials and other leading citizens. The accompanying photo illustrates how Shaffer highlighted the selling points he emphasized in the general campaign. His lobby told everything.

Costumes Usherettes To Help Sell "Rio"

Manager Fred Naify, Senator Theatre, Chico, Cal., went airminded in his "Flying Down to Rio" campaign by dressing his lobby with airplane cutouts and his usherettes in flying costume (see photo). The theme was further carried out with flying banners above the marquee and in the lobby.

In addition to strong newspaper reviews, extra advertising and billing, the distribution of thousands of theatre calendars was helpful. These were given out in town and in a surrounding 50-mile area. As there are few theatres in these neighboring spots, Fred states that the calendar idea and ads in the small-town papers are very valuable in bringing in business from his drawing area, a not inconsiderable patronage.

Gene Raymond Visits Sonny

Shaffer's "Eskimo" Lobby

Learning that Father Hubbard, famed "Glacier Priest" of Alaska, was expected in town to visit his brother, Fred arranged for a showing of the explorer's "Aniakchak" as an added attraction. The Father cooperated by appearing at the theatre with his dogs, which were placed in the lobby to bally the showing, and many theatre parties of his friends were made up in honor of the visitor.

Hospital Screening Nets Good Publicity

Manager M. A. Cooper tied in neatly with his women's clubs for a special showing of "I Am Suzanne" at a local hospital, in conjunction with the date at the Fox Theatre, Hackensack, N. J. Portable machines were installed and among the invited guests were many well known residents which was duly emphasized in Cooper's newspapers. Tied into this were theatre announcements made at many club meetings.

Imprinted "Suzanne" cutout cards were given to 1,500 children and a further attention-attractor was a miniature lobby stage upon which was displayed three marionettes, their strings attached to an axle driven by a slow speed motor. A music box was hooked up to furnish melodies while the puppets were performing.

On "Dinner at Eight," "M. A." got a newspaper break by planting a three-column cut of his house staff in their new uniforms, worn for the first time on the opening day of the picture. Though this had not been planned ahead, the arrival of the outfits gave Cooper an opportunity to do some fast thinking and plant this profitable publicity.

Hockey Plugs Aid Pete Egan's Date

The popularity of Canadian ice hockey gave Manager Pete Egan and exploiteer Dave Bayne many openings to advertise "Flying Down to Rio" at the Palace Theatre, Calgary. At two important games, the picture song hits were put on during the play by play broadcast, and in the intermissions sandwich men on skates were allowed to do their stuff on the ice. Pete also arranged to print a theatre ad on the reverse side of thousands of admission tickets for another game that attracted citywide attention.

The music angle was further plugged with flashy window displays, the accompanying photo showing a window personally dressed by Bayne, with cutout girl figures on airplane wings. Style, florists and telegraph tieups were also made and an out of the ordinary front pictured in last week's issue also attracted notice.

Gene Raymond Aids Shepherd on "Suzanne"

Sonny Shepherd, the unofficial greeter of film executives and celebrities in Miami, had occasion to take advantage of his role during the visit to the resort city of Gene Raymond. Sonny was playing "I Am Suzanne" and was able to persuade Gene to stop over for a personal appearance. The accompanying photo shows the star doing his autograph bit and evidently enjoying it.

Naturally, Sonny saw to it that the papers made full mention of the visit. Other newspaper stuff included series of articles on marionette construction in which action shots of Lilian Harvey were used as illustrations. A classified tieup which returned plenty of free space was also effected.

Shepherd had kites carrying large theatre banners flown over the traffic-congested causeway between Miami and Miami Beach. A mechanical man street bally was also put on wherein the "man" would unfold a theatre banner at various stops when the crowds gathered, and they sure gathered in Miami.

THE SMALL TOWN SHOWMAN

Indiana Manager Finds Stronger Exploitation Necessary to Put Over Pictures in Smaller Towns

by MACK McCARTY
Manager, Centennial, Warsaw, Ind.

Selling pictures today has become a man's job regardless of the size of the city. We know that the public are picture-wise but they are far from being publicity or exploitation wise, which means we still have two open roads to follow. There are very few pictures made each year that will stand on their own legs as far as box office value is concerned, that is, without much publicity on the part of the theatre manager.

Mack McCarty

For example, an exhibitor was in my office the other day telling me how bad conditions were in his city and that it was impossible to get high admission or more than 10 cents and fill his house of only 200 seats, and this being a college town, too. He was going to play "Little Women" of course first run for only 10 cents admission. After much persuasion I induced him to raise the price to 25 cents and sent him the same marquee display I used. He played the picture four days to capacity business.

I venture to say the gross on any picture can be raised at least 25 per cent by proper publicity, than could be obtained without it. We know all pictures are not hits and it falls on the shoulders of the manager to get them in, and this applies to small towns even more so, because people in small towns do not see snappy displays every day or novel stunts. But people in the city are much harder to please, but this is overcome because of the greater drawing power. People in the smaller communities are just as appreciative or even more so than the larger cities.

Blames Exhibitors

The great trouble with the small town exhibitors is they just sit down and expect people to walk in on any picture and never once open the press book for ideas and I know it to be a fact that several of these bellyachers do not even take a trade paper or know whether they are going to play a certain picture when asked by a patron.

And we have another socalled trouble germ, and that is the fellow who has the town sewed up by having the only theatre and expects to stuff entertainment down his patrons' throat without any effort. His theatre most always needs cleaning up and his signs are several years old which would not know the meaning of a paint brush, just because the boss does not know the meaning of competition in any form.

I never turn down a chance to build my box office up. I have to depend on ideas that are inexpensive, but they are plentiful if you dig deep enough. Many a good picture is going to waste as far as box office is concerned because of the lack of publicity and exploitation to put it over..

Landers' Editor Writes Column on New Pictures

Manager W. L. Landers, Landers Theatre, Batesville, Ark., speaks very favorably of the recent Warner trade showing he attended in Memphis in company with the editor of his local paper, invited by the Warner branch manager. An immediate result of this invitation was a full column in the paper devoted to the pictures that were screened that must have proven a good buildup for these attractions and will no doubt boost grosses.

Dave Advertised for Rain And Much to His Surprise—

Manager David Dallas, Paramount Theatre, Borger, Texas, looked about for a different angle to advertise "Golden Harvest." He discovered his idea in the continued local absence of necessary rainfall and placed a classified ad in his local paper, the copy requesting 10,000 citizens of that section to pray for rain or snow on the days the picture played for a "Golden Harvest" for all.

Much to Dave's surprise, it did rain, and the quick-thinking advertising manager of the local sheet immediately fashioned a swell house ad (see photo), tying this in neatly to the advertising potency of the paper, and of course plugging the picture.

Other Opinions On Radio Advertising

Expressions on the relative worth of radio advertising continue to arrive from members and below we are running some short comments from New Orleans and Dallas Round Tablers. They both make use of broadcast facilities to sell their shows, and what they say is based on their individual experiences. The subject is still alive, if any other managers desire to speak their pieces.

H. S. McLEOD
St. Charles, New Orleans, La.

Any success we have had from radio advertising has come from a well planned program. For instance, I have hired players from the Little Theatre group here in the city and in the last two instances, with "Emperor Jones" and "The World Changes" we have given fifteen minutes of the play and used all the effects available at the studio.

A radio contest which ran for three nights, 15 minutes each for the best letter on "Why They Liked the St. Charles Theatre" with a first prize a six months' pass, a second prize two three months' passes, and a third prize a one month pass, produced over 100 contestants and gave us many valuable ideas in the operation of our house.

It is my opinion that a regular weekly or daily plug of every picture is not particularly profitable over the radio. It is only when you have one of the bigger pictures and you can give it at least 15 minutes programs, do you get the full value for your money in radio. We have used both the chain stations here in New Orleans at least twice a month.

LOUIS CHARNINSKY
Capitol, Dallas, Texas

I have used radio advertising in every manner possible to boost my ticket sales and have always found that where I used a regular radio program that it paid big dividends. However, I do not recommend spot announcements show as, attend the Capitol tonight and see so and so, because they are usually given on a program where phonopraph records are played and people as a habit don't listen to such programs.

Maloney Promotes Slipper Stunt on "Catherine"

And now they're finding "lost" slippers to win a pair of shoes, and it was all started by Manager H. H. Maloney, State Theatre, Providence, R. I. A week ahead, three times daily, a white slipper was slipped under some orchestra seat. Then a trailer was shown stating that the royal footwear of "Catherine the Great" was lost in the theatre, and requesting patrons to look about as the finder would win new shoes, which Maloney had promoted from one of his stores. House lights were up during the search, and everybody had fun.

Free tickets placed in certain boxes of stockings were announced frequently over the radio in a tieup with the store selling the hosiery. Good windows were also secured on this hookup. And for a street stunt, "H. H." had business size cards distributed, containing the following copy: "Ask for Catherine—She's Great" with the tip off copy on the other side. Well, well!

SPRING AND SUMMER BUSINESS

CHARLES S. BASSIN
Oriental, Mattapan, Mass.

SUMMER MAILING LIST

As a stimulant to spring and summer business, a large mailing list is being built up which will include the beaches. The letter idea will include a follow-up and "thank you" reply. In addition to the attractions, institutional advertising also will be stressed. There are many patrons with summer homes within driving range of the Oriental, and letters are being sent to these people now so no contacts will be lost when they move to their beach homes.

STARLIGHT PROMENADE

Inaugurated last summer, Bassin is improving it for this season and will open it on June 1. The addition of a dance floor is anticipated and thus far large quantities of ginger ale and cigarettes have been promoted, as well as new furnishings. Details of this idea were carried in issues of July 22, 1933 and Feb. 24, 1934. The promenade is in the rear of the Oriental on the theatre property. Charley fixed it up as a lounge where during intermissions, soft drinks and smokes are served free of charge. It's a costless idea, and a honey.

E. M. HART
Oxford, Plainfield, N. J.

PLAYGROUND ACTIVITIES

Ed has cultivated hearty cooperation from his local recreation commissioner in charge of all outdoor activities, such as streets blocked off for roller skating, baseball, tennis, swimming, etc. Thus it is possible to promote roller skating races in restricted areas and other such ideas with the theatres donating prizes through merchant hookups. These events are advertised at all local recreation fields, and as a return courtesy, Hart has presented the Commissioner with a gold badge good for admission in all Plainfield Reade Theatres of which Ed is City Manager.

LOCAL MOVIES

This idea worked out so well last summer that Hart is again repeating it this year. One of his operators has a motion picture camera with which movies of outdoor activities in the various parks and fields are taken. The pictures are then shown at the theatres with rings around certain of the onlookers to whom prizes promoted from local merchants are given. The only cost to the theatre is the expense of the film. There are other variations of the local movie idea that other members are using—an always profitable angle for good returns.

SEASONAL SLANTS FROM THE FIELD

The time to break out those selling angles to pep up business on the coming months is here, and on this page is set forth what some of the members are doing, and what they have suggested to stimulate the spring and summer business. Other general seasonal ideas will be run as they are received from the managers. Theatremen who are working on any angles that may be of benefit to the rest of the membership are invited to send these along for publication.—MIKE.

LOUIS LAMM
Capitol, Elyria, Ohio

BABY CONTEST

Louis is tying in with two leading photographs and local papers, plus a number of merchants. The photographer takes the picture at no cost to patron who will be required to register the baby at theatre and receive an order on the photographer. With each admission, the patron receives a coupon good for 10 votes when deposited in a box in the lobby. The photos are displayed in the lobby numbered consecutively in order they are applied for. The baby receiving most votes will be considered the most popular. An additional tiein can be made with merchants who donate prizes to the winning baby. Louie says the month of May is the logical time for a contest of this kind and the age limit should be from six months to three years.

HOME GROWN FLOWER SHOW

This tieup to be made with local garden clubs, also with newspapers for a lobby show. Committee selects best exhibits for which passes may be given as prizes. It may be possible to promote other prizes from such merchants as florists, seed stores and hardware stores selling garden equipment.

Louie also suggests an elaboration of the idea by having patrons take pictures of their gardens for lobby display. Where this is put on, tieins with newspapers, photo supply stores and camera clubs are indicated.

STYLE SHOWS—STAGE WEDDINGS

Innumerable opportunities for added business are presented by these "old reliables," suggestions for which have been carried frequently in the Round Table pages. Members desiring more information on how to put these on are requested to communicate with Club headquarters, or consult their Round Table files, issue of April 8, 1933.

JOHN McMANUS
Midland, Kansas City, Mo.

NEWSPAPER TIEIN

John states that many newspapers have advertising budgets to plug their classified departments and this offers an acceptable tiein on seasonable ideas. The publicity departments have available stills showing stars on horseback, in swim suits, on bicycles, in boats of various kinds and engaging in other summer activities. John has arranged to supply these for newspaper "house" ads which of course will include the proper credits.

LOBBY DECORATIONS

Beside the more fragile varieties of flowers and plants, McManus contemplates the use of spruce or fir trees in dressy wooden buckets on the sidewalk, and also suggests ferns in hanging baskets. Lobby rock gardens can also be arranged with waterfall or fountain effect, wherever this is possible. The use of these accessories requires of course the proper lighting, and showmen are aware of the desirability of the lighter greens and certain shades of blue in lighting their lobbies to convey coolness.

HOUSE PERSONNEL

The staff at the Midland will, as usual, be attired in proper hot weather uniforms, and John lays great stress upon the necessity of proper seasonal apparel to be worn by the executives. In situations where the expense of summer uniforms cannot be undertaken, white flannels, white shoes, etc. are suggested.

GEORGE D. TYSON
Ambassador, St. Louis, Mo.

"MAY FESTIVAL OF HITS"

George is now completing a campaign which he called "April Shower of Hits," but states that it can also be used in May or June as "May Festival of Hits" or "June Jamboree." It is the old reliable of selling a group of pictures by an advance buildup.

All advertising in advance and during the month carried the tag line. Leiberman pennants were used as were burgees out front and other imprinted flags in the lobby and under the canopy. Strings of varicolored pennants were hung from the upright sign on the top of the marquee and setpieces on coming attractions planted in the lobby.

Two special Paramount trailers on their new pictures were clipped and these scenes were used in the house trailer plugging the "month." Newspapers cooperated generously and George states that the idea worked out very satisfactorily as it has for the past several years.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

THE GREAT GIVE-AWAYS

MORE entertainment is being given away by advertisers than the amusement business has for sale.

The whole mercantile world has taken up the pattern of the medicine show's ancient technique—a free show to draw in the suckers—maybe "customers" is a more polite word.

From this time on, the motion picture industry is confronted with the problem of making entertainment so much more appealing than the free shows of advertisers that it can be sold at a price and a profit.

The motion picture has demonstrated itself as the greatest mechanism that the world has ever known for the making of star value. Star value means merely the power of commanding public attention and interest.

Extraordinary efforts, new plans and methods of operation will have to be evolved if the screen is to keep competitively for itself some reasonable proportion of the drawing power that it creates.

A casual glance at the developmental aspects of advertising will reveal a startling picture. When advertising began it consisted of an announcement of the availability of commodities already in demand and their prices. It was pure announcement copy. It was "news about merchandise."

It was of no interest to the person who did not require the goods. It was of vast interest to the person who did require the goods. Advertising, in the modern sense, began in this nation when there was an inadequate supply of manufactured goods. Success in business in those days was practically assured by competent production. Selling was not a large problem. It consisted in telling where to "come and get it."

Out of the technological revolution in industry we have come to a vast increase in the production of things, a production which delivers goods much in excess of demand.

In this era advertising has crossed over from the service of wants to the business of striving to create wants. The real want of American business is wants wanted. Every advertisement is a want ad.

When production outstripped demand and there was discovered to be more goods than wants, advertising had to look for something beyond "news about merchandise."

The advertiser had to change the subject in order to get one that was interesting. Why the expedient succeeds is not explicable in terms of common sense. There is no good reason why the whimsical patter of Mr. Ed Wynn, for instance, should make you want any special brand of gasoline. Mr. Wynn has nothing to do with gasoline. But we are not to look for common sense in advertising, the show business, or other broad public contact because sense is not common. Nor are buying reasons reasonable.

That may be one of the most important reasons why no one is ever able to explain the show business to a layman.

Meanwhile advertising, which means merely merchandising in the world of merchandise, is engaged in giving away entertainment—a free show on the air, a ten-cent newspaper for three cents, a magazine that costs thirty-five cents to produce for a nickel, and free deals of story books, toys and whatnot ad infinitum—while the motion picture industry has to try to make a living selling entertainment.

Cruelly enough, experience tends to indicate that the amusement business finds little profit to trying to hit back by giving away merchandise.

So apparently, the show business is confronted with the problem of being louder, funnier and vastly more entertaining than anything that the advertisers' millions can buy to give away.

ARGUING aspects of censorship, Mr. Cecil B. DeMille, as reported by Film Daily in a Hollywood dispatch, told exhibitors there assembled in convention: "Every time you get a picture, you get the heart-blood of many people." The many who have had their throats cut in Hollywood will confirm Mr. DeMille's assertion.

A Harvard professor of anthropology has already spent two months in the Free State making measurements in quest of the typical Irishman. He might as well come home. He can find Mr. Eddie Dowling in Motion Picture Almanac.

DISCUSSING the annual report of the president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the Morning Citizen of Ottawa, Ontario, remarks: "Will Hays' encyclicals on the progress of the movies are invariably absorbing documents. Besides an unquenchable humor, there is an elfin optimism about the screen 'czar's' reports to his congregation, which is the movie public."

MANAGEMENT FIGURES

SLIGHTLY more than one-fifth of the national income was taken by taxes in 1932, according to the National Industrial Conference Board. American tax collection in that year totaled almost as much as the combined tax takings of the United Kingdom, France and Germany. The stupendous sum of $8,000,000,000 was collected in the United States.

When we consider a figure of 20.3% for government, alongside of what it does for us, some of the costs of distribution in industry appear slightly more reasonable.

Twenty per cent of the gross for "management" is a higher figure than even the motion picture industry has tolerated so far. It would appear that Uncle Sam has a lot too many relatives on the payroll—and practically all "yes men."

Invited this week to defend block booking against any two opponents were Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and George J. Schaefer, vice-president of Paramount, by the Women's Republican Club of Boston. Considered probable opponents are Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, former honorary president of the Motion Picture Research Council, and Mrs. Florence Bagley. . . .

TO ADVISE SOVIET

Enlisted by the Russian government to confer with a Soviet official next month on a five-year plan for Russian motion picture production, Darryl Zanuck, production executive of 20th Century Pictures, will set the plans for such a program and also advise on the mechanics of picture-making.

B. & K. NET PROFIT

A consolidated net profit of $95,191 for the 52 weeks ended December 30, 1933, was reported last week by Balaban & Katz, Chicago circuit, and subsidiaries. The net compares with a consolidated net loss of $993,638 for the 53 weeks ended December 30, 1932. . . .

STAGE SHOW INCREASE

Discovery that a weak film will not stand up at the box office, plus the increase in business generally, has led to a definite upturn in the use of stage shows and vaudeville in the Kansas City area. Indicative is the fact that last week saw stage shows at three first runs, where there had been only one before, and that occasionally. . . .

FILM COWBOYS

The motorized circuses traveling the Midwest are using film cowboys to a large extent. With the Barnett Brothers in Ohio is Harry Carey, with the Downie Brothers circus are Jack Hoxie and Dixie Starr, with the Gorman Brothers is Buzz Barton, with the Sam Dill-Tom Mix caravan is Mr. Mix.

POLES MAY LIFT BAN

As a result of the recently signed Polish-German trade treaty the lifting of the ban against German pictures is considered likely in Warsaw. For almost one year all German product was banned, while the new Polish contingent law limits the number of foreign films shown in Poland to 200 per year. . . .

GOLF FOR NEEDY

Led by H. H. Everett, president of the Jesters' Club of South Carolina and Charlotte Monogram exchange head, film men there are sponsoring a club golf tournament on May 14 for needy film folk. . . .

MGM JUNGLE PICTURE

Plunging into the South American jungles via airplane will be the adventurous assignment of George B. Seitz, director; Harold H. Noice, explorer-author, and Joseph Cook, business manager, all MGM men. Last week they took off for a 73,000 mile flight, their destination the Indian communal village of Yarawate on the Rio Vaupes, where, with an all native cast, they will film "Jungle Red Men," taking a year in the doing. . . .

EMBASSY'S NEWSREELS

Shifting from its exclusive use of the Pathe Newsreel, the Embassy, Broadway's newsreel theatre, has reverted to its original policy when a Fox house. Last weekend it began the use of the reels of Pathe, Hearst Metrotone, Paramount and Universal. With the admission remaining as is, a travelogue will round out the program. . . .

SELWYN PROMOTED

To the executive staff at MGM has been added Edgar Selwyn, a successful stage producer before he went to the films. He will work with Louis B. Mayer and E. J. Mannix on future productions. Starting as an actor, Mr. Selwyn moved rapidly from production to the screen. . . .

MPPDA INFLUENCE

Indicative of the influence being wielded by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America is the decision of MGM to abandon production plans for "The Postman Rings Twice" and "Professional Co-Respondent," due to inability to prepare acceptable scripts. . . .

ROWLAND SUED

Named defendant in a $50,000 damage suit this week was Richard A. Declaring the action is "to prevent a conflict of names," Sally Blane, Universal player, has re-spelled her first name "Sallie," which, as a change, seems to be of little consequence, except, perhaps, to Miss Blane. . . .

EXHIBITOR LOSES 30 FILMS IN FIRST GRIEVANCE RULING

Clearance Boards Start on New Zoning Schedules; Exhibitors Must Pay Code Assessments in 30 Days or Face $500 Fine

The motion picture code of fair competition is working in the field—at last—a Local Grievance Board having handed down the first decision, after an exhibitor had been tried and found guilty of unfairly competing with another theatre by overbuying motion pictures with the intent and effect of depriving his competitor of product. Decisions on cases of unfair competitive practices, dozens of which are pending, now are expected to be forthcoming daily from the 32 Local Grievance Boards.

Other evidences of progress in code administration: (1) Local Clearance Boards in some cities started to effect new zoning schedules; (2) Exhibitors were given 30 days to pay their code assessments; (3) The NRA named a Trade Practice Complaints Committee as a final check to keep complaints within the industry; (4) The last of the code board secretaries were appointed, as leases were being signed for the last of the field headquarters.

The Local Grievance Board at Milwaukee announced the first board decision and declared Saxe Amusement Management, Inc., was justified in charges of unfair competition, by overbuying, preferred against Ashley Theatre Corporation of Madison, Wis. The board awarded 30 Warner features to Saxe for its Capitol, which runs in competition with the Ashley house at Madison, and ordered Ashley to release Warner of its contractual committments to Ashley in order that Warner may deliver the 30 pictures to Saxe.

Ashley was given five days in which to appeal the decision, and, if in the event that any or all of the 30 Warner pictures are exhibited by Ashley before a final determination of the proceeding, as a result of an appeal, then Ashley is to release product under contract from Columbia, Fox, MGM, Paramount, RKO, United Artists and Universal, in the order named, until a total of 30 features are received by Saxe.

The decision was unanimous. Members of the board were M. T. Ellis, Jr., George Fischer, L. George Ross and Sam Shurman. Representatives of both theatre interests appeared in person and were represented by attorneys. Warner was represented by its attorneys. The hearing was in the Hotel Schroeder, Milwaukee, and took eight hours.

Complaints Ready Elsewhere

At Cleveland, complaints charging distribution of free tickets in violation of the code were ready for hearing, with the Lyceum complaining against the Arion and Southern theatres, and the Paul Gusdanovic Circuit complaining against Myer Fine's Mt. Pleasant theatre.

At Kansas City, exhibitors were complaining that while some exchanges were readily granting the 10 per cent cancellation privilege, others were refusing on the ground that they had not been so instructed by their sales managers in New York.

Pete Wood, acting for the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, petitioned the Code Authority and Division Administrator Sol Rosenblatt to reopen the code clause controlling subsequent run advertising, saying the clause is unfair and unworkable.

The MPTO of Maryland voted to ban giveaways and premiums, but both are prohibited by the code anyway. However, because the Local Grievance Board merely acts on complaints and does not file them, the action will be presented as a complaint charging unfair competition and will serve as a test case.

Issues Forms for Clearance Protests

The Code Authority this week made available to the Local Clearance and Zoning Boards copies of the official blank to be used by exhibitors who complain about new schedules or about changes in existing drafts as recommended by the local board. Unless protests are officially filed, the recommended changes or new drafts will stand without further hearing.

The complaining exhibitors, in addition to the usual information for identification, must state the nature of the protest with sufficient facts in detail to indicate that existing clearance and zoning is unfair, unjust, unreasonable and inequitable in length and/or area, specifying in detail the facts which will be relied upon in support of the protest. The names and addresses of all exhibitors and/or distributors claimed to be directly involved must also be enumerated. Three copies must be filed by the exhibitor with the secretary of the Local Clearance Board.

A proposed rezoning plan in Kansas City was threatened with severe opposition by a group of independents, headed by W. D. Fulton. They claimed that if the board should proceed to re-zone the city, it would exceed its authority, because the code does not grant it the power to re-zone and set up a new protection schedule for the balance of this year's product. The independents held that the re-zoning should begin with 1934-35 product.

Exhibitors Warned on Assessments

The first checks were received by the Code Authority in New York in payment of theatre code assessments. Exhibitors must remit within 30 days after receipt of notice, the first payment being for the first six months of 1934. Unless a Local Grievance Board unanimously recommends that such 30-day period be extended, the Authority ruled last Saturday that an exhibitor who does not remit within the specified period shall not exhibit in his theatre any motion picture to which is attached the Blue Eagle insignia of the NRA, and any exhibition of any motion picture in violation of this order shall be deemed a violation of the code. A violation may be punishable by a fine of $500, with each day's violation a separate offense.

The Authority immediately started to notify the Local Boards of the receipt of payments by individuals, which notification automatically makes the exhibitor eligible to file complaints of unfair competition. Distributors will be notified when exhibitors do not pay the assessment.

Exhibitors who did not sign the code must also pay an assessment for their particular classification, if they desire to receive code benefits, such as the 10 per cent cancellation privilege, among others. Non-assentors, however, did not receive a bill stipulating the assessment to be paid.

Complaints against the code assessments were voiced by exhibitors. The schedule of assessments is unfair to independent theatres, said Mr. Wood of Ohio.

The Code Authority was at work on a detailed analysis of how the $181,362 to be collected from producers, distributors and exhibitors, will be spent in code administration. The report will list salaries of all code workers, amounts to be spent for rentals of local board headquarters, and the like.

New Board, Last of Secretaries Named

A special Trade Practices Complaint Committee was set up this week by the NRA to keep trade practice complaints within the industry. It consists of Charles L. O'Reilly, of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and J. Robert Rubin, of MGM, representing the industry, and Division Administrator Rosenblatt, for the Administration. The industry's representatives have the power of vote. Mr. Rosenblatt has not. However, he may veto, subject to review by the NRA.

The new Board will directly contact the Local Grievance and Local Clearance Boards. They will not handle complaints involving production, vaudeville, presentations or labor.

Secretaries for the 32 boards are all at work, the Code Authority this week having completed the staff with appointment of the following:

NEW BLUE EAGLES FOR CODE ASSENTORS

Members of the film industry who have filed their assents to the motion picture code next week will begin to receive the new Blue Eagle insignia, which is to distinguish code adherents from those who have not accepted the code.

On the new poster, the word "code" will replace the familiar "We Do Our Part," accompanied by the name of the trade or industry of the establishment displaying it and employer's individual registration number.

Failure to comply strictly with code requirements may be penalized by withdrawal of the Code Eagle, and the insignia will not be issued to any employer who is violating a code or agreement.

Distribution of the new posters will be made by the NRA through the state compliance directors.

Trade Complaints Committee Named as Final Check to Keep Complaints Within Industry; Roster Completed

ONLY ONE IMPORTANT ADVERSE BILL IS PASSED OUT OF 300 PROPOSED

Ohio Admission Tax Law Lone Significant Outcome of 76 State Legislative Sessions; 3 States Legalize Sunday Shows

The 1934-35 legislative "season" swung into the home stretch this week through a field of 300 film measures introduced in 76 state legislative sessions. In addition to these 300 state measures definitely affecting the industry, there were 18 federal legislative proposals introduced at Washington, involving the business of the motion picture. A total of 47 state legislatures met in the past 12 months—Mississippi being the only state not meeting—despite the fact that only nine states had scheduled regular sessions during the 1933-34 season. The legislatures of 19 states met twice and five states met three times.

Of adverse measures of major industry importance proposed only one actually was made law, and that was the Ohio admission tax, which, though bitterly fought by exhibitor groups, was expected. Thirty similar measures had been introduced in various state legislatures. South Carolina repealed its admission tax and state measures legalizing Sunday shows were passed in New Jersey, Kentucky and Wisconsin. Likewise Sunday showings also were made legal in two counties in Maryland, including the city of Baltimore. Tax bills proposed, other than those on admissions, included levies on footage, licensing and sales.

The two most important pieces of adverse motion picture legislation proposed during the session of Congress at Washington were the Dickstein bill, which would have placed severe restrictions on the importation of alien actors, and the two Patman bills, one of which provided for complete elimination of all block booking and the other for federal censorship of all motion pictures. The Dickstein bill was not passed and the Patman bills are lying dormant.

Bill on Minors Held Up

At Albany, the Burchill bill to permit a city, town or village to pass an ordinance permitting children to attend picture theatres unaccompanied by parent or guardian when school is not in session, ran into difficulties this week and was not expected to pass at this session. Certain welfare agencies of New York City, including the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, objected to the measure. Upstate welfare officials are said to have favored the bill. Under the terms of the Quinn bill, just passed by the New York legislature and sent to the Governor as an amendment to the state penal law, only a motion picture producer can be held responsible for the presentation of an adjudged immoral show. This relieves theatre employees and exhibitors of the prospect of arrest. The bill applies also to legitimate theatrical presentations and burlesque shows. This measure becomes law and goes into effect September 1, 1934.

Asheville, N. C., will be allowed to have Sunday shows under an ordinance passed last week by the city council. After May 4, all local theatres will be open Sundays from 1 to 7 P. M. and after 9 P. M. at night.

The bill to establish a board of censorship of all films in Massachusetts has been withdrawn. This means that all attempts at unfavorable film legislation at the current session in that state have failed.

The legislature of South Carolina has passed a new tax bill supplanting the 10 per cent admission tax with a graduated tax on theatres, according to seating capacity and location. It is estimated this will reduce the state's annual theatre tax by $80,000 to $100,000.

That the collective sales tax has fallen short of estimates was disclosed in Ohio last week in a speech of Governor White before the General Assembly, made in an effort to influence passage of the general sales tax, defeated in the House last week, following two previous defeats within the past year. Governor White pointed out that the 10 per cent imposts on admissions, cosmetics, beverages and malt wort, enacted last autumn, were supposed to produce $666,000 each per month, but that the returns have been only $400,000 to $450,000 from each.

Mayer Warns of Alien Bill

Addressing a group of more than 50 MGM players on Monday in Hollywood, Louis B. Mayer declared grave danger lies in the Dickstein bill. He urged all interested in the acting profession to sign a petition of protest to be forwarded to Senator Coolidge. John Emerson, writer, outlined numerous reasons why the measure should be fought, saying that only one-twentieth of all salary payments made to actors went to foreign talent. He added that if the United States bars foreign talent Europe would be certain to retaliate even to the extent of banning all American pictures. He said the determination of American producers to use foreign actors might result in their operating in foreign studios, where pictures, he declared, can be made less expensively than in the States. The meeting voted unanimously against the bill.

Exhibitors in St. Louis face the prospect of another tax, a one per cent sales levy, in addition to the present state sales tax of one-half of one per cent. Mayor Bernard F. Dickmann has indicated his intention of asking for such a tax in an address to the Board of Aldermen.

Trendle Contemplates No Further Changes

No further changes in the United Detroit Theatres management are contemplated at this time, according to George W. Trendle, as a result of the resignation of Thomas D. Moule as general manager and his replacement by Willard Patterson.

Mr. Moule had held the general managership for 15 years, staying on when Kunsky-Trendle turned the houses over to Publix. Howard O. Pierce continues as advertising and production manager and L. H. Gardner remains as manager of the suburban houses.

First Grievance Decision Made

Miriam Yergin, for Indianapolis; Lillian Silver and Florence Abramson, New York; Olive Bursiel, Boston; Lila Schofield, St. Louis; C. P. Zears, Oklahoma City; Regina Molseed, Omaha; Emaline Fineberg, Pittsburgh; James Fitzgerald, Washington; Benjamin Stosverg, Atlanta; Basil Ziegler, Philadelphia, and Don Douglas, Dallas.

New York is the only city in which separate secretaries have been appointed to serve the Grievance and the Clearance board.

The secretaries will be given a first-hand outline of their work at four regional meetings, to be held within 10 days by John C. Flinn, Code Authority. Secretaries from surrounding territories will attend meetings at Los Angeles, Kansas City, Chicago and New York. Mr. Flinn arrived on the Coast this week. Following the meeting with the Coast secretaries, he will investigate the production situation as it involves the code.

Local board headquarters were opened at Des Moines, in the Iowa Building; at Cincinnati, in the Palace Theatre Building, and at San Francisco, in the Golden Gate Theatre Building.

George W. Coleman was named as the Administration's "impartial" representative on the Boston clearance board.

The Administration's "impartial" members of local boards probably will be called into a general meeting at Washington in July.

It was indicated at the Capital that difficulty in determining upon recommendations which can be approved by all members of the National Recovery Review Board, headed by Clarence Darrow, had delayed presentation of the report on the Board's film code investigation to the President. The board had held several hearings for the socalled "little man."

Chairman Darrow of the Board conferred briefly with President Roosevelt. It is understood he was asked to continue his investigations.

The Board's report is expected to carry sharp criticism of the Recovery Administration and, backed by Senator Nye's demand for changes, it is considered possible that Congress may be asked to amend the Recovery Act before it adjourns.

Warner Directors Meet; No Comment on Erpi Case

The board of directors of Warner Bros. met in New York Tuesday to transact what executives described as "routine business."

Abel Cary Thomas, secretary, declined to comment on reports that the board considered a plan of settlement of litigation between Stanley Co., a Warner subsidiary, and Electrical Research Products, Inc. Trial was to have begun in Wilmington last month, but was postponed to next autumn in order to permit discussion of a proposed settlement, according to reports.

H. M. Doherty of the Warner auditing department has been named in charge of the company's theatre checking organization, formed by Ralph Budd of the personnel department.

PLEA FOR FAMILY FILMS RENEWED AT WOMEN'S SESSIONS IN 4 STATES

Leaders Voice Demands Before Junior Leagues, D. A. R., Federated Clubs, Research Council; 3,500 Better Films Councils

The industry was forcefully reminded this week, from several quarters, that the women of the country are firmly intent upon obtaining an improved moral tone in motion pictures for family consumption, and that they are fully prepared to wage their campaign more vigorously than heretofore until they have accomplished this end.

At meetings in New Orleans, Washington, Kansas City and New York, respectively, spokesmen of millions of members belonging to the National Association of Junior Leagues, Daughters of the American Revolution, General Federation of Women's Clubs, and the comparatively new Motion Picture Research Council, voiced the following conclusions:

Education of the nation to select only the good pictures is necessary to end the making of bad ones; censorship cannot accomplish this.

Parents are negligent in not selecting proper pictures for children.

Stronger nationwide campaign for cleaner films is needed.

Three-fourths of all pictures seen by children under 21 are based on love, sex or crime.

Development of a critical sense in children, especially, is necessary, because they are too receptive.

22,000,000 out of 77,000,000 who attend motion pictures weekly are under 21.

The present "going-to-have-a-baby" cycle, socalled, should be ridiculed to death by laughter.

Good pictures must be supported by the families of the nation.

At the same time that the women's leaders were making their demands, there came to light in New York the results of an investigation which showed that in one year Better Films Councils have increased in number from 3,000 to 3,500. These Councils, a direct contact among women's groups, theatregoers and exhibitors, represent locally all leading national associations.

In addition, there are now 1,500 motion picture committees of women's groups operating in other places independently.

Approximately 6,000 theatres are now tied in. Local Councils have tieups with from two theatres to 50, as the case in St. Louis.

Cooperative merchandising campaigns are arranged, principally to promote special programs designed for children or family endorsed by the Better Films Councils.

Some 20,000 "Selected Lists" are sent out every month.

The expressions of the women leaders, for improved product, were heard but a few hours after the producers in Hollywood had promised delegates to the MPTOA convention that off-color gags and questionable dialogue, subtle or otherwise, will be number one on the list of production "don'ts," at least insofar as those pictures are concerned which are widely used by theatre owners in the field for the family.

PLEDGE OF THE LEGION OF DECENCY

(Sign and give to your Pastor)

I wish to join the Legion of Decency, which condemns vile and unwholesome moving pictures. I unite with all who protest against them as a grave menace to youth, to home life, to country and to religion.

I condemn absolutely those salacious motion pictures which, with other degrading agencies, are corrupting public morals and promoting a sex mania in our land.

I shall do all that I can to arouse public opinion against the portrayal of vice as a normal condition of affairs, and against depicting criminals of any class as heroes and heroines, presenting their filthy philosophy of life as something acceptable to decent men and women.

I unite with all who condemn the display of suggestive advertisements on bill-boards, at theatre entrances and in newspapers, and the favorable reviews often given to immoral motion pictures in the daily press.

Considering these evils, I hereby promise to remain away from all motion pictures except those which do not offend decency and Christian morality. I promise further to secure as many members as possible for the Legion of Decency.

I make this protest in a spirit of self-respect, and with the conviction that the American public does not demand filthy pictures, but clean entertainment and educational features.

Name_____

No dues whatever for the Legion of Decency. No meetings.
Millions of Americans, pledging themselves individually, can rid the country of its greatest menace—the salacious motion picture.

Herewith is a reproduction of the pledge of the Legion of Decency which is being distributed in Catholic churches in a movement for elimination of salacious material from motion pictures.

The National Association of Junior Leagues joined in the current discussion about better motion pictures when Mrs. John G. Pratt, president, traveled to New Orleans, late last week, to address the local Better Films Council. She said: "Three-fourths of the pictures that are seen by persons under 21 years of age are based on love, sex, or crime. The attitude of children of today is merely receptive, instead of critical. A critical sense must be developed in children in order that they may choose the good from the bad. We must educate instead of legislate and create an audience that will demand good, clean pictures." A stronger campaign for clean films was urged.

Nearly one-third of the present average weekly motion picture attendance, approximating 77,000,000, is composed of children under 21, it was said.

In reply, Mr. Harry S. McLeod, president of the Gulf States Theatre Owners' Association, placed the blame on the parents. He charged that most persons know what kind of motion pictures they are taking their children to see.

On behalf of producers, Mr. Guy C. Brown, of RKO, said that producers would produce "clean" motion pictures if the public would make their box-office performances worth while.

At Washington, last week, the militant Daughters of the American Revolution went on record as strongly opposed to the "going-to-have-a-baby" cycle.

Mrs. Mildred Lewis Russel, chairman of the Better Films Committee of the DAR urged the nation to ridicule sexy sequences by deliberately ill-timed laughter as a sure method of killing undesirable motion pictures.

She added that education of the country to better motion pictures will be more effective than censorship.

Tracing box-office deflation from the stock market crash in 1929, to the present, Mrs. Russel cited the following attendance figures:

Year	Attendance
1928	100,000,000
1929	90,000,000
1930	85,000,000
1931	75,000,000
1933	80,000,000

The representative of some 2,000,000 members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs—the largest in the country—was heard Friday at Kansas City when Mrs. Richard M. McClure, of Chicago, head of the Federation's motion picture activities, told the Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs that American womanhood, credited by merchandising surveys with influencing 80 per cent of the purchases of motion picture theatre tickets, possesses a tremendous but as yet unrealized power to elevate film standards. She urged the women to support by ticket purchases those pictures which Better Films Councils are clamoring for, and to stay away from others.

Mrs. McClure said there was a serious intent on the part of the industry to keep its screens clean, through the Advisory Advertising Council and activities of the Producers' Association on the West Coast. She told the club women that no nudes or otherwise offensive copy has been noticeable in theatre advertising recently and that in the last few weeks the association "has rejected eight pictures in toto and a number of scripts have been returned for revision."

Executives of National Associations Agree Political Censorship Is Not Solution; Third of Patrons Declared Minors

Blames Independent Producers

The motion picture chairman echoed the frequently expressed opinion of large producers when she said: "The inferior, objectionable product to a large extent can be blamed on the independents who flood the market with shoddy films made for a certain class of exhibitors. They never have been bound by the 'moral code,' but under the industry code they, too, must submit to higher standards."

Censorship, she continued, is a process of putting the cart before the horse and is no solution since "you can't make a bad picture good once it is made bad."

Mrs. McClure said that seven years ago when as a club leader in Morgan Park, Ill., she was handed the job of organizing exhibitions in the high school to supply the total lack of film entertainment in the village through a profit-sharing plan with 28 organizations, "the question they asked was not whether the pictures would be entertaining or educational to our children, but 'How much money will it make for us?'"

Mrs. McClure read MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S list of the ten biggest money making stars, as chosen by a poll of exhibitors.

NRA MOVE FORESTALLS THEATRE UNION STRIKE

Service Local's Secretary-Treasurer, Out on Bail, Denies Coercion Charge; Records to Be Submitted to Rosenblatt

The combined efforts of the National Recovery Administration and the Regional Labor Board in New York this week resulted in an armistice and postponement of a threatened strike of Local 118 of the Theatre Amusement Employees' Union, composed of unskilled motion picture and legitimate theatre workers. The union had threatened to strike against the 62 theatres in the Loew circuit in New York territory and RKO theatres in the district.

On the day following the postponement, Charles C. Levey, secretary and treasurer of Local 118, was arrested on charges of coercion brought against him by Harry Lewis, manager of the Tivoli theatre, Brooklyn. Mr. Levey was released in $1,000 bail. He entered a plea of not guilty and a hearing was set for May 21.

Charge Follows Strike

The coercion charges came as the result of a several weeks strike of members of the local at the Tivoli. The theatre charged that Mr. Levey had "threatened violence" against Mr. Lewis for his refusal to reinstate several employees, members of the union, who, the complaint said, were discharged "for incompetency."

"There are no grounds for the charges," Mr. Levey said Monday. "There were no threats of violence made and the orders to reinstate the discharged employees were issued by the Regional Labor Board after a thorough hearing of the case.

Mr. Lewis charged specifically that Levey had threatened him "with violence between April 6 and 14" unless he reinstated a man discharged for incompetency and that when he refused to comply, "a stench bomb was dropped in the theatre and caused a panic."

The armistice on the projected strike was credited largely to the presence of division administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt at a special meeting at the Code Authority headquarters.

Rosenblatt Aids Armistice

The chief contention of the local has been that, in addition to its demands for reinstatement of discharged employees, its members represented a majority of employees at theatres in the New York Loew and RKO circuits. For this reason, the local feels it is entitled to make certain demands, such as higher wage scales for ushers, doormen, janitors and matrons; a "closed shop" in the theatres, and generally bettered conditions and shorter working hours for their members. If the check-up, instigated by Mr. Rosenblatt, shows a majority of affected employees in the union's membership, Loew's and RKO may be obliged to accept its demands. Labor Department operatives began the investigation Tuesday.

Both the union and the two circuits were to submit their records to Mr. Rosenblatt, with a report to be made at the end of this week. A majority of union members among Loew's and RKO employees, would, it is believed, be acceptable to other leading metropolitan circuits as a satisfactory representation in their own employees' ranks, with a city wide agreement resulting.

Elsewhere in the field strike flurries again appeared.

In Akron, Local 127 members of the Building Service Employees' International Union—of which the New York union is an affiliate—were picketing Loew's Akron theatre. The picketers were all ushers who had been discharged in January, and though the Regional Labor Board had "recommended that the ushers be reinstated," the theatre thus far has refused to sign an agreement, according to R. C. Rechel, recording secretary of the Akron local.

"All local unions are boycotting the theatre, and a distinct dropping off in attendance has followed," reported Mr Rechel. "Union officials say that Loew's will be picketed until a settlement satisfactory to everyone concerned is reached. All central labor unions in cities where a Loew theatre is located are being requested to boycott these theatres until such time as Loew's, Inc., see fit to recognize Service Employees' Unions."

In Buffalo, the state law requiring licensing of operators in first-class cities was upheld by the court in the case of a 16-year-old projectionist, who, detectives said, was in charge of the Marlowe theatre projector, but had no license.

Dubinsky Case Up in St. Louis

Ed Dubinsky this week again became the center of attention in the Kansas City situation with hearings scheduled in St. Louis before a special NRA compliance board on his controversy with projectionists.

Mr. Dubinsky's disagreement with the operators and stagehands is over the question of whether his Regent and Liberty theatres are to be classed as downtown operations, as in the past, or grouped with subsequent runs. The unions have different scales for the two classes of theatre. Dubinsky contends that when new agreements were put in force a year ago, his two theatres were given subsequent run classifications. That is denied by the operators' union.

St. Joseph Argument Still Alive

The St. Joseph, Mo., argument, involving two Dubinsky houses there, is still alive. The regional labor board at St. Louis recently ordered reinstatement of union operators and stagehands, but Dubinsky refused, obtained a Federal injunction, and agreed to arbitration by the National Labor Board. That board still is considering the question, and has asked the regional board for additional information. The St. Joseph fight is over Dubinsky's demand for only two men in a booth.

An action to test the power of the NRA in attempting to force Seattle suburban and neighborhood houses to increase salaries of operators is being undertaken in the western city by a group of exhibitors.

In Zanesville, Ohio, a five-year union battle was ended last week between Zanesville Theatres, Inc., and the IATSE and the American Federation of Musicians, largely, it is said, through the efforts of Arthur H. Bischoff, business agent for the stange hands and operators, and R. F. Cullis, president of the musicians' local. Four houses were affected.

Family Film Plea Renewed by Clubs

your Arlisses?" she asked. "There's a reason for their absence—you didn't buy the product they make. When you club women realize that you pay Mae West's salary and that you demonstrate our objection to her pictures by not buying them, she will cease to be on Paramount's payroll.

"Those who cry for censorship lose sight of the fact that no matter how much you cut and splice, the flavor still remains, and there is the danger of spoiling a great production. If you see a picture that is immoral or indecent, be vocal, be militant, tell your manager about it and he will tell the producer."

Touching on block booking, which is the manager's answer to criticism by offended patrons, Mrs. McClure pointed out that "in no community must a theatre run a picture that is immoral, indecent or offensive to race or religion." She explained a method employed by the Better Films Council of Chicago which has a committee to confer with the managers on bookings a month in advance and indicate those films which might be objectionable, carrying their case to the exchanges. She said the small independent is more willing to cooperate than the large circuits.

Mothers Blamed, Not Pictures

"The problem of what motoin pictures the child shall see is the mother's responsibility," said Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, chairman of the east coast pre-viewing committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, at an open forum conducted late last week in New York by various women's associations, to discuss motion pictures and their relation to home life. "We are a sophisticated people," she added, "and we cannot have movies strictly for the sake of the children."

Differing with Mrs. Sporborg's belief that good films should be picked out and bad ones left to perish for lack of box-office success, Mrs. August Belmont, chairman of the Motion Picture Research Council, came out flatly for action to upset "the preponderance of crime, sex and horror" in motion pictures. Mrs. Belmont added that her organization, while opposed to outright censorship, favors some form of film discipline.

Regarding the Payne Foundation study of motion pictures, to which Mrs. Belmont referred frequently, Mrs. Sporborg asserted it was not representative, because only delinquent boys were singled out and asked: "What movie ruined you?" The study should have included normal boys, she declared.

Nazi Film Producer Fights N. Y. Censor

Jewel Productions, Inc., producer of "Hitler's Reign of Terror," said to be an authentic record of the activities of the Nazi in Germany, has withdrawn its application for permission to exhibit the film in New York state, and will open the picture at the Mayfair on Broadway next Monday, without the formality of a permit.

In Chicago this week the same film was virtually banned when Mayor Edward J. Kelly, acting after a protest by Dr. R. L. Jaeger, German consul general in Chicago, rescinded the permit for the exhibition of the film. Dr. Jaeger declared he had acted on instructions from the German embassy in Washington, asserting that the picture had been made chiefly in America and that its exhibition would tend to cause bad feeling.

COURT GIVES PARAMOUNT TRUSTEES APPROVAL TO OPEN $12,237,000 SUIT

Trustees Authorized to Institute Proceedings Against 16 Directors and Former Directors in Stock Repurchases Approval

Court approval was granted this week to the trustees of Paramount Publix Corporation, bankrupt, for the institution of a suit in New York supreme court against certain directors and former directors of the corporation to recover $12,237,000, for which amount the directors are said to be liable as a result of their authorization and approval of certain Paramount stock repurchases made in 1931 and 1932.

Adolph Zukor, Paramount president, coincidentally explained that the stock repurchases had been made in connection with certain commitments in connection with theatre deals, and that "no officer or director had any interest in any of the contracts." Furthermore, he said, in determining the various accounting questions involved in the repurchases, particularly as to whether Paramount had sufficient surplus to perform the stock-purchase contracts, "the directors relied upon the audits of the company's books."

Sixteen Directors Named

The trustees—Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson—were authorized to institute proceedings against the following who were directors at the time the purchases were authorized and approved:

FRANK A. BAILEY	SIDNEY R. KENT
JULES BRULATOUR	AUSTIN KEOUGH
WILLIAM H. ENGLISH	RALPH A. KOHN
DANIEL FROHMAN	JESSE L. LASKY
JOHN HERTZ	ELEK J. LUDVIGH
FELIX E. KAHN	WILLIAM WISEMAN
GILBERT W. KAHN	ADOLPH ZUKOR
SAM KATZ	EUGENE J. ZUKOR

Also named by the corporation's trustees as being liable were: Donald S. Stralem, as executor under the will of Casimir I. Stralem, deceased; and Eugene J. Zukor, Melville Shauer, and Julia Shauer, as executors under the will of Emil E. Shauer, deceased. Both of the deceased were directors.

Events Set Forth in Statement

The specific nature of the complaint and the events which prompted the trustees to seek court approval for its institution were explained by the trustees' counsel in the following statement which was issued to the press on Wednesday afternoon, at Paramount's headquarters in Times Square, New York:

"On the petition of Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount Publix Corporation, Henry K. Davis, referee in bankruptcy, today directed the trustees to institute a suit in the supreme court, New York County, against certain directors of Paramount Publix Corporation who authorized and approved the purchase by Paramount of its own stock from various stockholders on certain dates between September 9, 1931, and March 7, 1932. The purchase of stock involved a total expenditure of $12,237,071.25.

"The petition of the trustees sets forth that on September 15, 1933, Messrs. Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co., accountants, were retained by the trustees to investigate and report on the purchases by Paramount Publix Corporation of shares of its own stock during the years 1930, 1931 and 1932. Subsequently, in December, 1933, and March, 1934, Mr. Arthur W. Teele, of the firm of Patterson, Teele & Dennis, accountants, and Mr. Frederick H. Hurdman, of the firm of Hurdman & Cranstoun, accountants, were respectively retained by the trustees to consult with Messrs. Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. upon the same matter. The petition then states that in March of this year the trustees received reports from these three accountants. According to the petition Messrs. Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. state in their report that they are of the opinion that the capital of Paramount was impaired by the purchase by it of its own stock on September 9, 1931, December 26, 1931, January 29, 1932, and March 7, 1932, in an aggregate amount of at least $11,335,285.78, as of March 7, 1932. The petition also states that Mr. Teele is of the opinion that the purchases impaired the capital of Paramount to the extent of at least $3,257,453.96 as of March 7, 1932, and that Mr. Hurdman states in his report that no facts have been presented to him to indicate that the purchase by Paramount of shares of its own stock during the periods in question impaired the capital of Paramount.

Suit Advised by Counsel

"The petition then sets forth that the trustees' counsel, Messrs. Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, have advised the trustees that, based on their investigation of the facts and the law, the trustees should institute a suit in the supreme court, New York County, against the directors who authorized or approved the purchases, on the ground that the capital or capital stock of the bankrupt was impaired by reason of the purchases of stock in question.

"In order to determine the liability of the directors in connection with these transactions the trustees have been authorized to institute suit against the following persons who were directors (or whose testators were directors) at the time the purchases were authorized and approved:

"Frank A. Bailey, Jules Brulatour, William H. English, Daniel Frohman, John Hertz, Felix E. Kahn, Gilbert W. Kahn, Sam Katz, Sidney R. Kent, Austin C. Keough, Ralph A. Kohn, Jesse L. Lasky, Elek J. Ludvigh, Sir William Wiseman, Adolph Zukor, Eugene J. Zukor, Donald S. Stralem, as executor under the Last Will and Testament of Casimir I. Stralem, deceased; and Eugene J. Zukor, Melville Shauer and Julia Shauer, as executors under the Last Will and Testament of Emil E. Shauer, deceased.

"The petition points out that the maximum amount of recovery by the trustees from all of the directors together would be $12,237,071.25, with interest. The petition further states that the trustees and their counsel are investigating the possible liability of those stockholders who were the recipients of money or property in connection with the transactions in question."

Identification of Directors

Frank A. Bailey represents Allied Owners Corporation, realtors. Jules Brulatour is the sole representative in the industry for Eastman Kodak film. William H. English and Messrs. Felix and Gilbert Kahn were the Kuhn, Loeb representatives on the Paramount board, as was Sir William Wiseman. Sam Katz, Jesse Lasky and Sidney Kent have since resigned as officers of the company, Messrs. Lasky and Kent now being at Fox Film. John Hertz, bankers' representative, has likewise since resigned. The following still are Paramount executives: Adolph Zukor, Eugene Zukor, Elek Ludvigh, Ralph Kohn, Austin Keough.

Zukor States Stock Repurchases Were Made in Connection with Certain Commitments in Theatre Deals in 1931 and '32

Zukor Explains Proceedings

At the same time on Wednesday that the Paramount trustees made known their intentions, Mr. Adolph Zukor made the following explanation of the proceedings:

"When the trustees' petition was called to his attention, Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, stated that several years ago Paramount acquired various theatre properties by the issue of its stock, with agreements to repurchase the stock upon demand within specified periods. The suit brought by the trustees involves these repurchases. No officer or director of Paramount had any interest in any of these contracts. In determining the various accounting questions involved in the repurchases, particularly as to whether Paramount had sufficient surplus to require performance of its contracts, the directors relied upon the audits of the corporation's book by its regular auditors, Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co., and upon a special report made by Messrs. Haskins & Sells. The consolidated earned surplus of Paramount and its subsidiaries at December 26, 1931 (before deducting $8,711,917.06 of stock repurchases) was certified by Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co. to aggregate over $27,000,000. The points raised by Messrs. Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. have been submitted to Messrs. Arthur Anderson & Co.; Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery; Miller, Donaldson & Co.; Peat, Marwick & Mitchell; and Price, Waterhouse & Co., all of whose opinions upon the disputed points sustain the action of the directors in performing the company's obligation to repurchase the stock in question."

22 Features Given German Bank Help

Special Berlin Correspondence

In the first year, or, to be exact, nine months, of the German Film Credit Bank, 22 feature films were financed by this institute, as well as fifty shorts and educational films.

The report to the general meeting of the bank organization, April 9, emphasized that the bank has carried on the business with a small profit, and an essential enlargement of the financial activities of the bank can be expected for 1934.

The board of directors was re-elected. Dr. Scheuermann, president of the Film Chamber, takes the chair, and state secretary Walther Funk and general manager Ludwig Klitzsch were elected as vice-presidents.

'SOLO SHOW FOR JOHN BARRYMORE'

Says DeCasseres of "Broadway Interlude"; Four Other Plays Discussed from Film Viewpoint

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

BROADWAY INTERLUDE

This "comedy-drama" by Achmed Abdullah, made from the Abdullah-Faith Baldwin novel of the same name, kept whispering into my ear all the time I was looking at it, "John Barrymore." A one-man show.

The central character, Grant Thompson, is a part that would perfectly suit Barrymore, that master of all the hooey of the actor's art. It is a somewhat distant but not recognizable caricature of the late David Belasco. And as portrayed by Robert Emmett Keane, who carries the show alone, it is an amusing picture of all the male Hermione's fake idealism, the producer's belief in his "star," the fiddle-faddle with women that he has "nursed to the heights," and the back-stage bunk that is Broadway.

The play—poor stuff, but which contains much picture material after high-developers have been applied to it—is laid in the swanky penthouse-studio-office atop Thompson's theatre.

Love affairs develop. There's the jealousy of a playwright for the "new star." Thompson's Wall Street backer (a distant caricature of a lately famous Croesus-Macaenas) cuts Thompson out of his girl—a fading ancient star.

Then, to complicate matters, Thompson's elderly secretary is romantically in love with this supreme humbug and thimble-rigger (but how charming!) of Broadway. With what gusto J. B. would take off this fellow!

For picture purposes, played by John Barrymore with a good supporting cast, "Broadway Interlude" contains half-a-dozen strong scenes, mostly comic and falsetto-dramatic.

As a play it needed the pulmotor. Hollywood probably has one for it in the Brain Farm.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

WIFE INSURANCE

"Wife Insurance," by Frederick Jackson (Arthur J. Beckhard, producing), was given in London under the title of "School for Husbands." It is a stringy, padded, loosely-jointed affair along ultra-modern lines with the kernel-theme that if husbands do not remain lovers their dames are likely to go off the reservation.

"Wife Insurance," with Ilka Chase, Kenneth MacKenna, Walter Abel, Harvey Stephens and Lillian Emerson, ought to have been better than it was. There are two many ambiguous complications. It has some picture possibilities for five swanky screen ladies and gents; but it will have to be simplified, for if a picture audience will not do one thing it is think out obscurities while the celluloid is running.

Two married couples are doing fairly well in a swell sort of a semi-cultured life when an up-to-date novelist, Leonard Drummond, a smoothie, as cynical as a police captain listening to a gangman's alibi, prances among 'em.

Both hubbies think their wives are having an affair with this Casanova-Gable, and the wives are inclined to let their more rotten halves believe it; but they are really, really not.

So the improbable situation is introduced of the husbands asking the common enemy, the writer, how they can keep their wives without spot. Drummond tells them—ha! ha! And the boobs almost fall into the trap.

After some unbelievable fal-lal, it is all cleared up and Drummond passes out of the play after having taught the husbands a lesson (moocha nerts and bull right here). A fairly good dialogue chin-chins its way through the show.

Play Ratings For the Screen

To the Broadway plays reviewed in this issue Benjamin DeCasseres, critic and essayist, assigns the following percentages as potential screen material:

"Broadway Interlude"—60 per cent.
"Wife Insurance"—60 per cent.
"Stevedore"—10 per cent.
"Pirates of Penzance"—100 per cent.
"Are You Decent?"—Zero.

STEVEDORE

George Sklar and Michael Blankfort (Paul Peters, too) are born to motion pictures. They will froth at the mouth when they read this, for these young fellows are full of Radical Uplift and Snort with Indignation at the Condition of Things. And Hollywood, to them, would naturally be the Capitalistic Den of Infamy de luxe.

But these fellows know how to pour action and living dialogue into their whirling, blazing, high-pressure scenarios of dear old Oppressed Humanity. They did a good job in "Peace on Earth"—simply raised speed-hell, although, sub-rosa, the play qua play was just soap-box wind.

Now George and Mike and Pete have put over another seven-thousand-geared stunner called "Stevedore," with a fifty-fifty white and Negro cast.

It is laid on a Southern city waterfront and concerns the pursuit of a Negro (and the attack by the infuriated whites on the Negro ghetto) whom a white girl—forced to do so by the chief of police—has framed for rape.

It is all flat Negro propaganda; but the point that concerns us here is that these three young fellows ought to be doing high-powered scribble-work out in Hollywood (no, I'm not their press-agent). For "Stevedore" is tremendously gripping and exciting, although I knew that I was every minute looking at balonie absolutus.

But what is the essence of putting over the average picture? Why, just that—making something gripping and exciting of what is fundamentally sheer garbage. Mike, George and Pete are masters of that game.

So it is only a question of time when George, Mike and Pete will go the way of all competent Denouncers—Hollywood. These boys know the art of hokum second only to Ben Hecht.

Picture value, 10 per cent.

PIRATES OF PENZANCE

In my Herculean efforts to get some courageous and enterprising producer in Hollywood to do the best of Gilbert and Sullivan, I wish to point out that at every revival anywhere in the country of the big four ("The Mikado," "Pirates of Penzance," "Pinafore" and "Iolanthe") they pack 'em in.

These operas are sung more often on the radio than any other musical shows. And just listen to the applause when and wherever this music is played in summer by the open-air bands (and where is it not played?).

There's a mint of money for someone in these Gilbert and Sullivan masterpieces.

"Pirates of Penzance," the second production by S. M. Chartock, packed the house. Every number had to be sung two or three times. And here is a picture story if there ever was one.

It is incredible that an article so universally in demand and so unanimously acclaimed as these Gilbert and Sullivan operas should not soon find its way to the screen. All the more so as next March is the Golden Jubilee of "The Mikado" (born March 24, 1885).

Picture value, 100 per cent.

ARE YOU DECENT?

This play by Crane Wilbur is a throwback to those good old Ibsen days when young women began to weep for babies without marriage certificates. You remember the old yamp?—"I wanna pick the father of me cheeee-ild!"

Antonia is one of those Long Island young women who live high, wide and handsome. Plenty mun. Nothing but dolce far niente (bumming to you). Reads Freud, Jung, Keyserling and nix on "Anthony Adverse."

Antonia wants to get a baby without book or bell. She parks her eye on a couple of country-house week-end dingle-dangles. One is a gymnast. She doesn't care for him a bit—but why not a gymnast for baby's papa? The other fellow is just a fellow. She rather likes him. But there's Eugenics!

So we work up to the Bed (third act). Here is the usual dirty drivel and cheap stuff ad naus.

When and if this script reaches Hollywood, I advise that it be heaved into a nice, decent, clean Vine street sewer.

2,000-FOOT REEL PREFERABLE TO 1,700, SMPE CONVENTION IS TOLD

New Sweep of Society's Interests from Laboratory to Exhibition Is Reflected in Four-Day Meeting at Atlantic City

By GEORGE SCHUTZ
Editor, Better Theatres

The theatre—its design as well as mechanical instruments through which it brings the motion picture to the public—probably never has received so great an amount of methodical, serious attention from the industry's technical organizations as at the Spring Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at Atlantic City this week. The new aim of the organization, to extend its interests from those of the laboratory to practical problems of more effective exhibition, was to be observed in nearly every session of the four-day meeting, which opened Monday at the Haddon Hall hotel.

In addition to papers and reports of direct bearing on projection and sound reproduction, one whole session Tuesday was devoted to conditions in film servicing and the theatre itself, while an open forum on size and shape of the screen image was conducted Wednesday morning.

Rosenblatt Address Broadcast

The motion picture code is a scientific approach to the problems of the industry, Sol. A. Rosenblatt, division administrator of the NRA, said at the banquet Wednesday night. His address was broadcast over the Red Network of the National Broadcasting Company.

He said that not all of the problems have been adjusted by the code but "fortunately the code is flexible."

A recent analysis, according to Mr. Rosenblatt, showed that "89.5 per cent of all provisions benefit independent exhibitors, distributors and producers."

"An NRA administrator is neither a dictator nor a tyrant," he declared.

More than 200 members attended the convention, many with guests. Sessions were presided over by the Society's president, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith.

An important problem which has its roots in the theatre was disposed of early, so far as this technical body is concerned, in the recommendation of the Practical Projection Committee that, if any change is to be made in film footage per reel, the reel length be made 2,000 feet, instead of 1,700 as proposed.

"As long as reels of 1,000-foot film footage are used," the committee declared, "film mutilation will continue, and exchanges must either accept the 2,000-foot reel or be prepared to police projection rooms to prevent doubling."

The open forum on size and shape of screen image was really an aftermath of a paper read by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, based on studies originally made and published in Better Theatres a year previous, but now brought directly before an industry technical organization for the first time. Mr. Schlanger examined scores of productions and found that although cinematography was exercising greater latitude in order to achieve a more dynamic pictorial effect, use of peripheral areas of screen still remained restricted, especially in American pictures.

This matter of the image, indeed, was but another phase of criticism voiced by Mr. Schlanger at a previous session, involving the functional character of many other auditorium elements as represented in present theatre design.

"The name 'motion picture,'" said Mr. Schlanger, "is somewhat misleading and is not truly expressive of the science and art of cinematography. The word 'motion' is self-explanatory, intimating action, but the word 'picture' must be analyzed in its applications to the cinema art.

"It is important for the motion picture that it should assume a shape which makes the view least conscious of an obviously committed outline. It is the apparently shapeless shape which is the most adaptable to the motion picture."

Stipulates Two Changes Needed

Seeking from optics principles through which natural vision for the viewer might be achieved, Mr. Schlanger stipulated two changes that must be made, one to attain conformity of the image to the shape of the natural field of vision; the other, appearance within this shape of both direct and indirect peripheral vision, meaning that the outer edges of the screen should be utilized more, not only for primary business of plot and narrative, but for secondary action as might be conducive to a more perfect illusion and greater pictorial appeal. To some extent, this would involve widening of the screen, at least proportionately to the height.

Mr. Schlanger's previous paper, although effective in winning both him and the Society extraordinary space in the daily press of New York and other cities, repeated the plea which he and others have been making for years, that the theatre, which is essentially the auditorium, be designed to function as an integral part of the whole mechanism of the motion picture.

Higher Standards Urged

Chief in general interest among other papers in a session devoted especially to exchange and theatre affairs, were those by R. M. Wilcox and L. W. Conrow of Electrical Research Products, on maintenance and operating costs; and by F. H. Richardson of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, who urged higher standards in the selection and maintenance of projection equipment. The Wilcox-Conrow paper, though emanating from a source commonly associated with the manufacture of sound equipment, ranged from illumination to heating and ventilating, offering nothing, however, that has not been published extensively by specialists.

Further refinement of sound recording was promised in methods described in a paper by G. L. Dimmick and H. Belar of RCA Victor. The system was represented as eliminating all ground noises and requiring only few changes in existing reproducing apparatus.

Rather augmenting the attention devoted to the professional motion picture was that given to developments in the 16 millimeter field, which enjoyed a session of its own. This meeting brought out the practicality of colored pictures in narrower width as well as the remarkable strides in the improvement of the quality of both the sound and image.

Papers at this session were read by representatives of RCA Victor, the Amateur Cinema League and the United Research Corporation, while H. Jones of Buffalo, N. Y., discussed the technique of hand synchronization.

Difficulties so far encountered in the application of the alternating carbon arc were attributed largely to the unfamiliarity of the industry at large with this development, which was introduced to the Society by the National Carbon Company a year ago. According to a paper by D. B. Joy and E. R. Geib of this company a measure of fluctuation noticeable is to be attributed to the shutter mechanism, and they declared that reports from the field show that fluctuation may be diminished by stopping down the objective lens and cutting down both blades of the two-wing shutter to a point just before the shadow ghost appears.

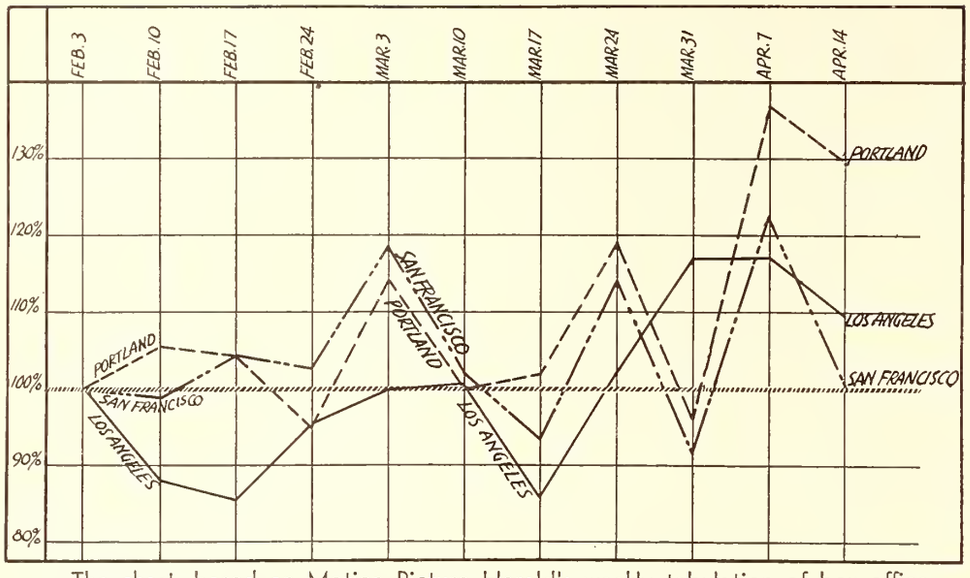
Forum on Size and Shape of Screen Image Follows Paper by Schlanger; Rosenblatt Address Broadcast at Banquet

Predict Color in Features

Further faith in the practicality of the A.C. high intensity carbon for supplanting low-intensity equipment was expressed by Rudolph Miehling, who described a device for adapting present low-intensity equipment to the A.C. carbon.

In making its routine report on recent technical developments in the world of the motion picture, all of which have been reported in the trade press, the progress committee ventured the prediction that color in feature pictures is to be revived. "It appears," it was stated, "that the public is evincing more interest in colored cartoons, and the stage seems to be set for an impressive revival of color in important feature pictures."

"Phase Shift" Sound Is Tested



"Phase Shift" sound—a refinement of wide range recording—has made its appearance in four Hollywood studios and is regarded by Electrical Research Products, Inc., as marking the greatest advance in sound to date. Paramount, MGM, Columbia and the General Service Studios have tested the device.

"Phase Shift" has been developed by the Bell Telephone Laboratories' engineers as the latest step in improvement of the Western Electric sound system.

Designed specifically to eliminate pressure and conflict on light values, it increases the sound cycle range in both lower and upper registers. It necessitates changes in studio amplifiers and refinements in present recording equipment, but does not require changes in theatre reproducers, it is said.

Willard S. McKay to Paris

Willard S. McKay, general counsel of Universal and newly elected secretary, sailed Wednesday for Europe, where, in his new capacity, he will take up matters of Universal production and distribution in Europe.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the variations in business in three West Coast key cities during the eleven-weeks period from February 3, 1934, to April 14, 1934. In each city, the receipts for the first week of the period in that city are taken as 100 per cent.

Ratio of Taxes To the National Income in Rise

The ratio of taxes to national income rose to 20.3 per cent in 1932, the highest figure recorded in the United States, the National Industrial Conference Board announced last week in a study of "The Burden of Taxation in the United States and European Countries."

In 1929 total tax collections, federal, state and local, were equal to 11.8 per cent of the national income, while from 1926 to 1929, the pre-depression years, the survey showed, the ratio of taxes to national income was almost constant in this country, moving no lower than 11 per cent and no higher than 11.8 per cent. In 1929 taxes totaled $9,800,000,000, compared with national income of $83,000,000,000.

Taxes increased to $10,000,000,000 in 1930, while national income decreased to $70,300,000,000, with the result that the ratio of taxes to national income rose to 14.6 per cent. In the following two years taxes fell off to $8,000,000,000, but national income decreased even more rapidly to $39,400,000,000.

American tax collections in 1932—the last year for which comparable data were obtainable—were almost equal to the combined total of the United Kingdom, Germany and France.

Aggregate tax collections in the United States reached an all time record of $10,300,000,000 in 1930, the survey shows. Of this, total federal taxes accounted for $3,500,000,000; state taxes for $1,800,000,000, and local taxes, $5,000,000,000. In 1932, federal taxes amounted to $1,800,000,000; state taxes, $1,700,000,000, and local taxes, $4,500,000,000.

Federal tax revenues for the fiscal year 1933 were at the 1932 level, and for 1934, the indications are that collections will be substantially higher than during the previous two years, the report said.

Universal Shows Net of $24,507 For Three Months

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has reported a consolidated net profit of $24,507 for the three months ended January 27, after all charges, including depreciation of fixed assets in the amount of $131,699. The net compares with a net loss of $213,211 for the same period of the previous year. A company statement declared business since January 27 is showing a marked gain over the same period of the preceding year, and "the indication is that a substantial profit will be realized" for the quarter ending April 28.

Following the annual meeting of Universal stockholders at Wilmington, Del., last week, at which seven of the nine directors were re-elected, the board elected Carl Laemmle president. Other officers named were: R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; Samuel Sedran, second vice-president; W. S. McKay, secretary; Helen E. Hughes, assistant secretary; Charles B. Paine, treasurer; Eugene F. Walsh, assistant treasurer. Immediately after the meeting Mr. Laemmle left New York for the Coast studio.

At Wilmington J. Myer Schine, upstate New York circuit operator, and Simon J. Klee, New York manufacturer, were elected to the board of directors to succeed Frank Mastroly and E. F. Walsh. Directors re-elected were: Carl Laemmle, P. D. Cochrane, Charles B. Paine, Helen E. Hughes, James R. Grainger, Willard S. McKay and R. H. Cochrane.

Pioneer Pictures Tests New Color Process

Pioneer Pictures, Inc., headed by Merian C. Cooper, RKO Radio production executive, this week made preparations at the Radio studios for production of a one-reel subject as a test film for a new color process.

Webb Reelected; Stock Purchase Plan Is Indorsed

Stuart W. Webb was reelected to the presidency of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on Tuesday following the annual meeting of the stockholders.

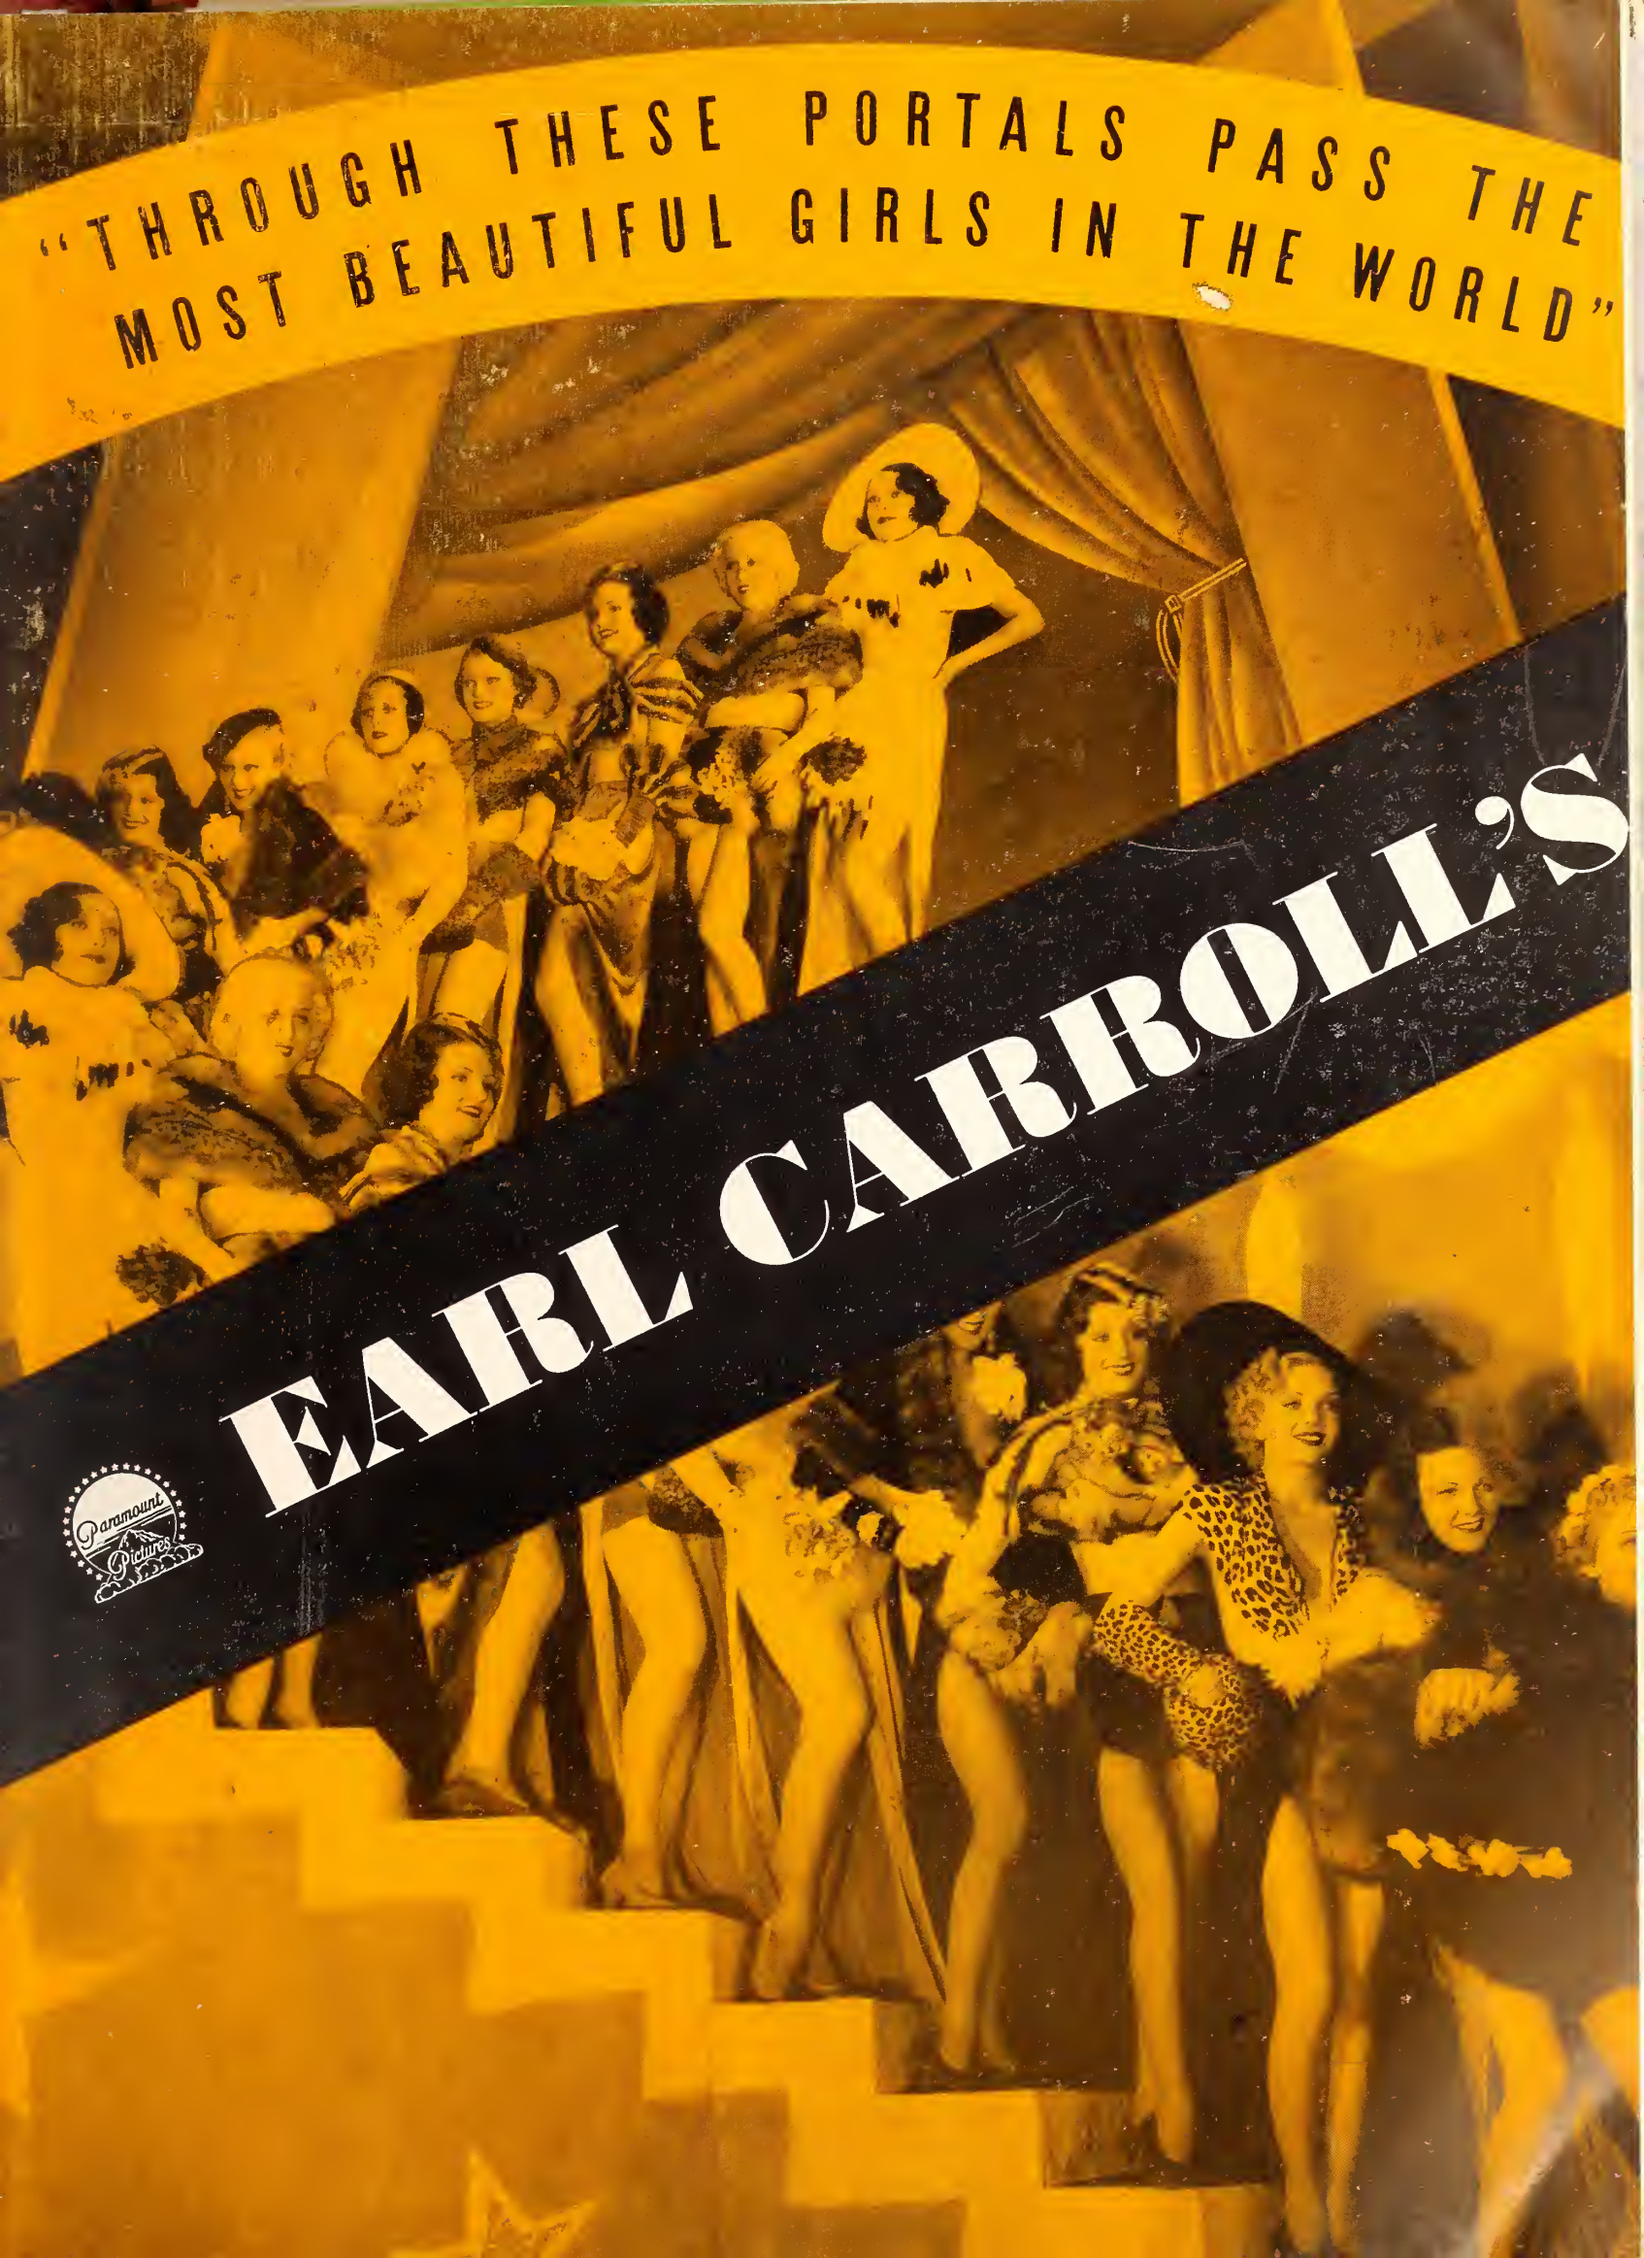
The principal business revolved around the voting on a proposal of the board of directors that Mr. Webb be given power to purchase shares of common stock not exceeding 12,500 at $2 a share each year over a four-year period, and not exceeding 3,000 shares of Class A preference stock at $12 a share in each over a three-year period.

Stockholders representing 402,343 shares of the combined issues voted in favor of the proposal against 770 shares of the combined issues dissenting.

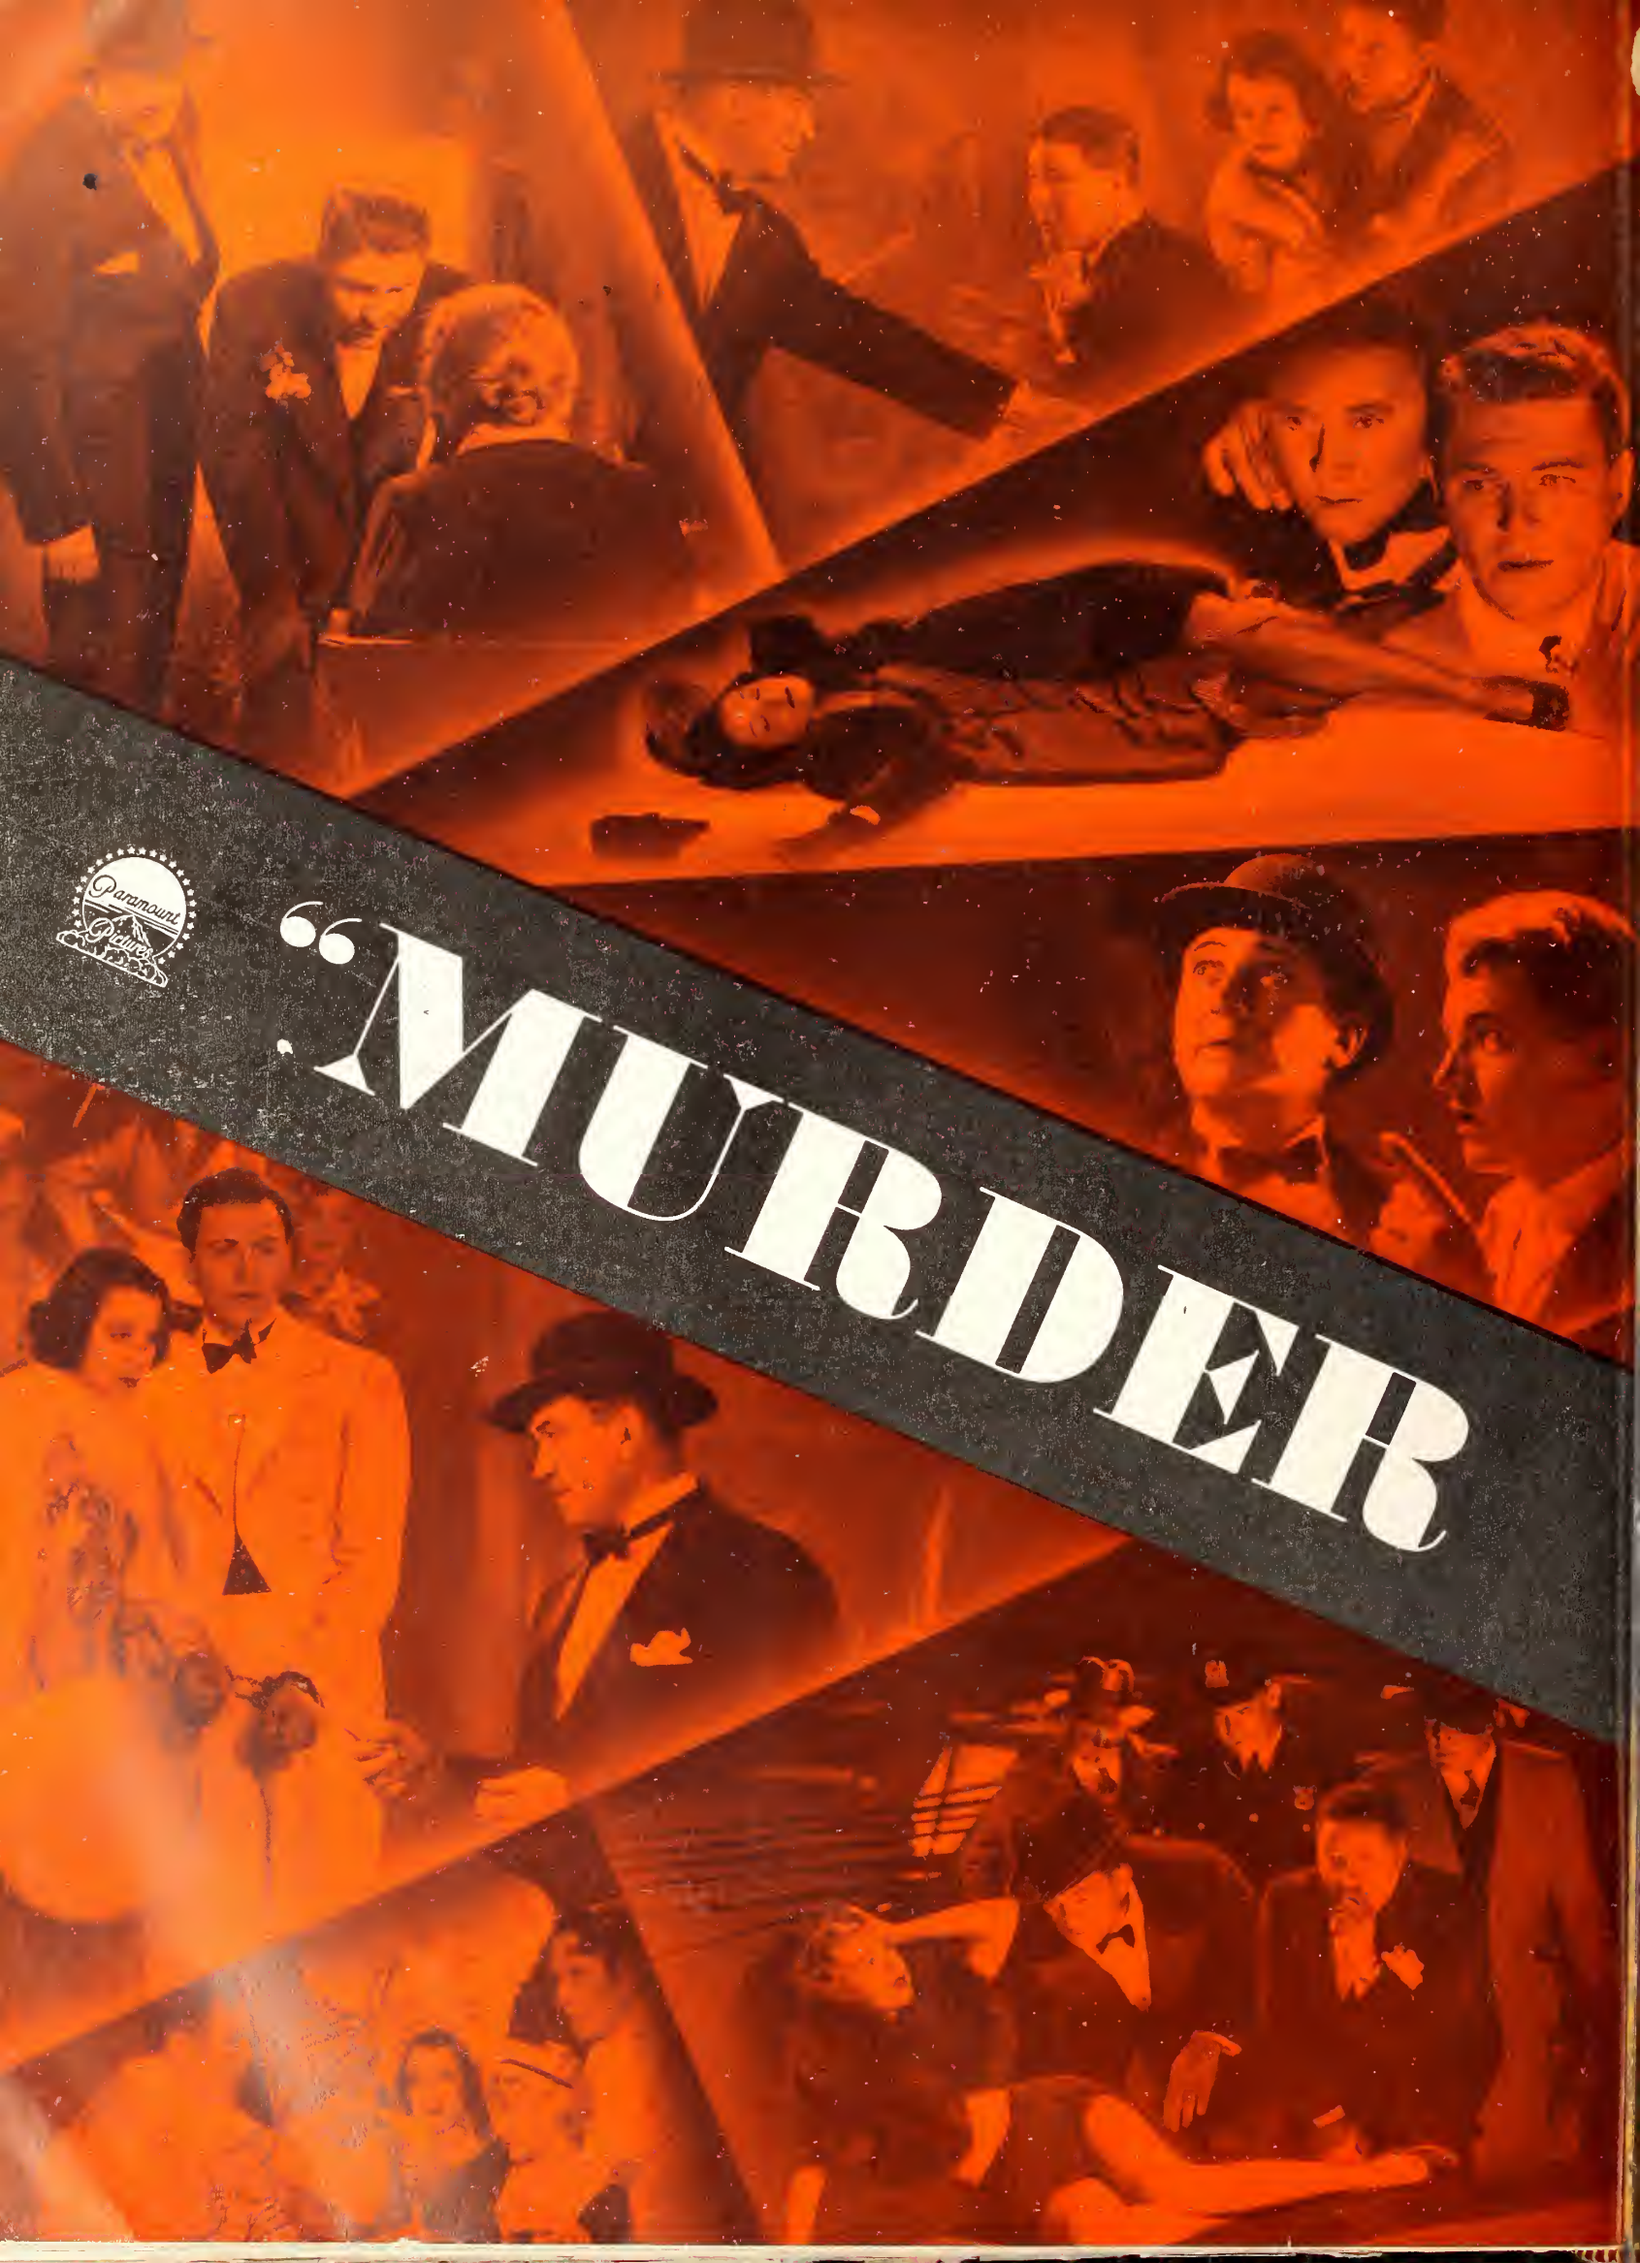
Mr. Webb announced that business for the first three months of 1934 will show an appreciable profit, and expected net profit for the entire year to be equal, if not considerably more than for 1933. Profit for 1933 before interest charges, but after deducting all expenses, taxes, amortization and depreciation, amounted to $570,966.

The Pathe president said the Bound Brook, N. J., laboratory is running at the rate of 40,000,000 feet of film annually, or about 20 per cent of capacity, and that several deals pending will increase this figure.

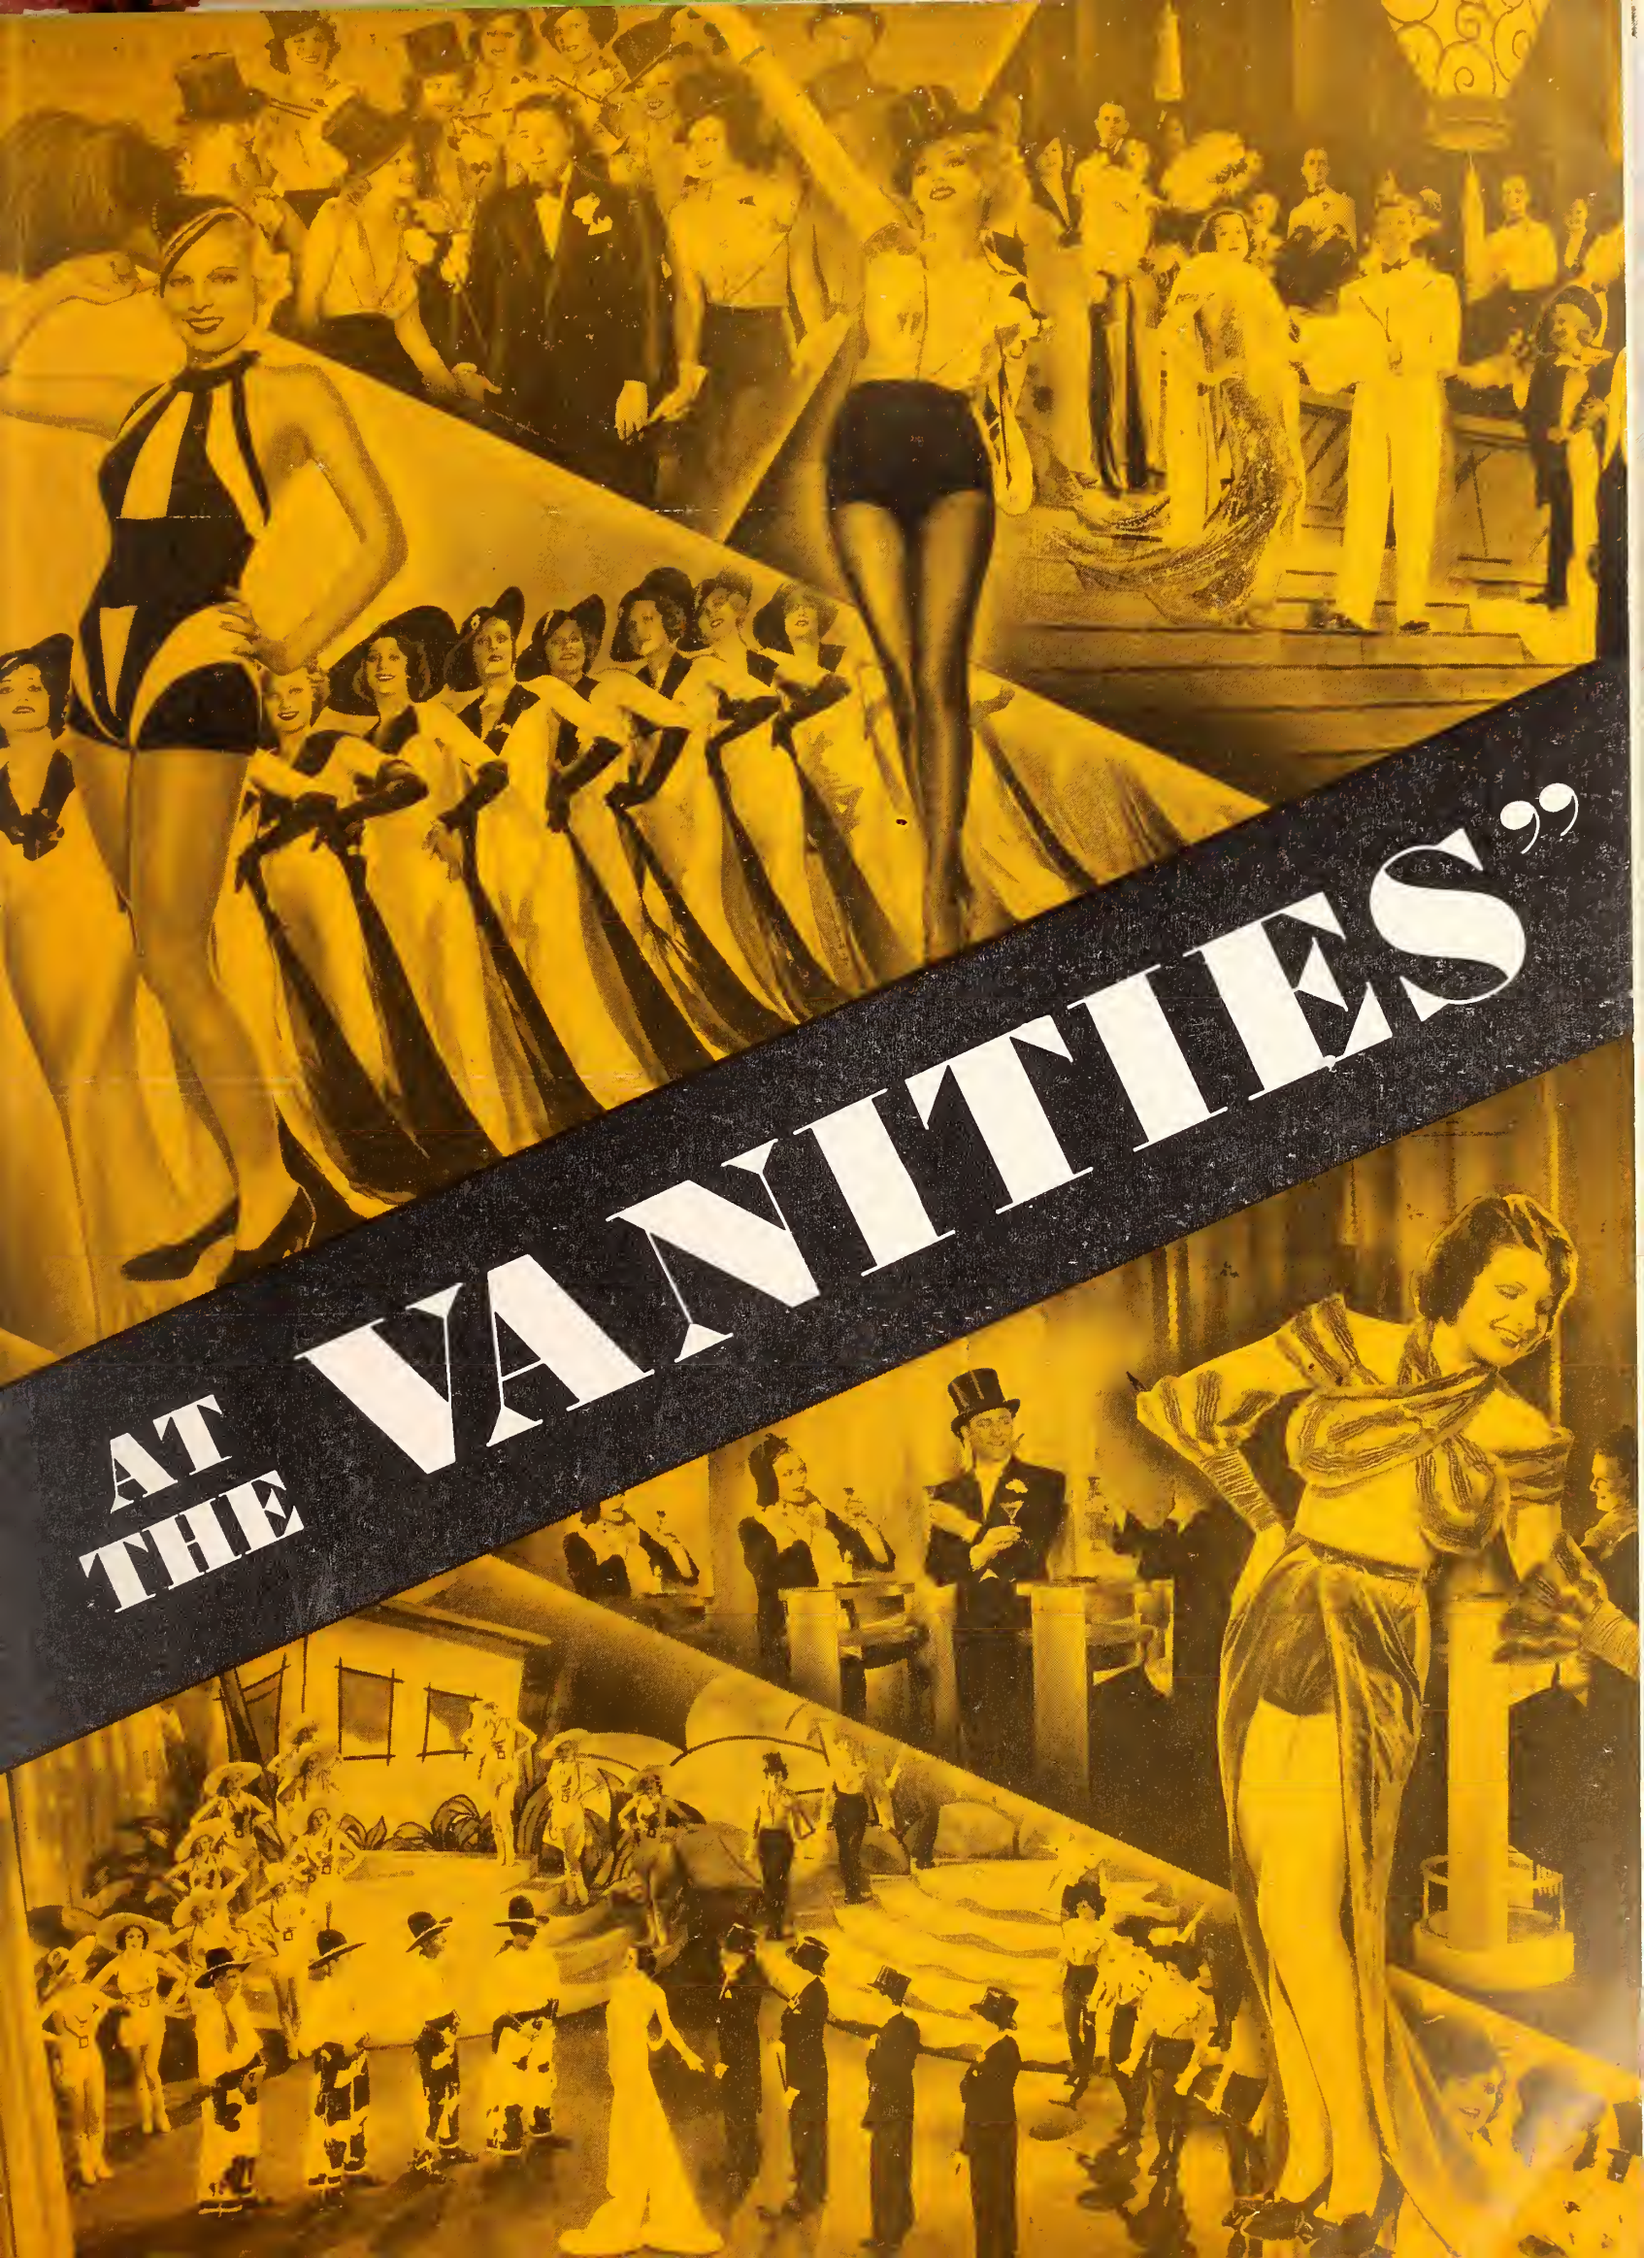
Other officers re-elected include: Arthur B. Poole, vice-president and treasurer; John C. Walsh, secretary and assistant treasurer; Ellen U. Keogh, assistant secretary.



Mr. Walsh, Daniel Frankel, Charles Fleming and T. J. Loach, company employees, were elected to the directorate, which consists of Mr. Webb, Mr. Poole, Robert W. Atkins, Henry J. Guild, Paul Fuller, Jr., Ellery W. Mann, George S. Montgomery, Jr., Arthur Sewall, 2nd, Charles A. Stone, Theodore C. Streibert and Charles B. Wiggin, these members all being reelected to the board.



May Require List Of All Salaries



A sharp lowering of the level of corporate executive salaries may be brought about by a provision incorporated in the new federal tax bill by the Senate, requiring corporations, in filing income returns, to include a statement showing salaries and bonuses paid to officers, directors and others in excess of $15,000 a year.

Demand for the legislation is a result of the recent investigation of corporation salary payments by the Federal Trade Commission, which disclosed that even during the depression period many corporations have paid executives large sums in the form of salaries and bonuses, in some instances the total in 1932 or 1933 being even greater than in 1929.

While the purpose of the amendment was to make it possible for stockholders to learn through this requirement what salary and bonus payments are being made, Treasury officials are said to favor withholding the information from publication because of its possible value to competitors.

MAYER STRIKES AT DICKSTEIN BILL
SIGNIFICANCE OF MPTOA CONVENTION
TWO CATHERINES AND TWO PICTURES
FIVE PICTURES START, FOUR FINISH

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

The first gun in Hollywood's major offensive against the Dickstein bill was fired Monday by Louis B. Mayer in a confidential talk to all MGM contract players.

Stating the bill will cut down the number of foreign actors to be used in American-made productions and add production obstacles by precluding foreign talent importation in meritorious cases Mr. Mayer called the projected legislation unfair and offered figures to show that less than 5 per cent of players appearing in American films were foreign born.

Less than one-twentieth of the entire salaries paid in Hollywood goes to foreign actors, Mr. Mayer said.

Considering the international phase of the situation, the production executive pointed out that many Hollywood stars with front line drawing power were foreign personalities and this investment would be jeopardized to the detriment of every branch of the business if the bill went through.

He also contended that reprisals against American personalities and American pictures could be expected from abroad.

It is understood that after the meeting a petition was signed by those attending expressing their opposition to the measure, and the petition will be forwarded to Washington along with other petitions representative of the industry.

Exhibitors, Producers Shook Hands

Out of the maze of meetings and greetings, winings and dinings, resolutions and proclamations, together with quests for autographs and photographs, at the recent M.P.T.O.A. convention, the profound fact that producers and exhibitors agreed to meet, did meet, and agreed to agree, stands out like a Mazda lamp in a dungeon.

Though their meeting was secret, it is understood they shook hands on a plan whereby a service of information will be established from exhibitors in the front lines, to the producers in the service of supply.

Together they expressed a desire to present wholesome films, establish standards of good taste and to encourage more films for family trade, as well as to keep a weather eye on the young folk, the future customers.

The Two Catherines

Preview of Paramount's "Scarlet Empress" this week drew comparison with the Korda-British produced film, as both spin around the personality of Catherine of Russia.

"Scarlet Empress," directed by Josef Von Sternberg, stars Marlene Dietrich. "Catherine the Great," directed by Alexander Korda, features Elizabeth Bergner, Austrian actress.

"Scarlet Empress" is painted on mural canvas, with broad sadistic strokes, depicting the brutality, chicanery and decadence of the Russian court.

"Catherine the Great" is a cameo, carved with charm and magnificence. By delicate touches the human values are embossed.

Miss Bergner, not possessed of the striking beauty of Miss Dietrich, is a consummate artist, an actress of rare power. Marlene Dietrich has more magnetism. "Scarlet Empress" assaults the senses. "Catherine" exalts the feelings.

Release of "Scarlet Empress" soon after the release of "Catherine" brings to mind the simultaneous showing of the screen productions "Carmen," one by Fox and starring Dolores del Rio, the other by Paramount and starring Geraldine Farrar. Both films profited by the public discussions in parlors and in prints.

Crowds also flocked to box-offices of two stage plays opening day and date with "The Devil" in two different theatres, one featuring George Arliss and the other Edwin Stevens.

The press agent of George Arliss' production scored by advertising "Go to 'The Devil' with George Arliss."

Studios are all working their companies overtime nightly since the windup of the convention. Most of the larger companies lost a good deal of time entertaining the exhibitors.

This situation rather bears out the thought that the local cameramen were using empty magazines when grinding out film scenes for the benefit of the visitors.

Hollywood production turnover being the smallest in weeks, no single entertainment trend is noticed in the five started and four finished. Included are straight dramas, romances, comedies, domestic dramatic romances and a semi-historical. None of the new five appears to be more than average program, though casts contain some outstanding names. On the other hand, two of the four finishing strongly promise to be of the big picture class.

With two, Universal tops the new picture group, which includes single units at Columbia, Paramount and Warner. Fox has two of the four completed; singletons come from Columbia and Paramount.

Two from Zeidman

First of the Universal duo is "I Give My Love," a Vicki Baum story, produced by B. F. Zeidman, directed by Karl Freund, with Wynne Gibson, Paul Lukas, Eric Linden, Dorothy Appleby, Sam Hardy, John Darrow and Kenneth Howell in the cast. The second feature is "Funny Thing Called Love," also a Zeidman production, directed by Kurt Neumann, in which Chester Morris and Mae Clarke head a cast comprising Frank Craven, Andy Devine, John Warburton, Irene Ware and Lois January.

Columbia started "Whom the Gods Destroy," dramatic romance, directed by Walter Lang, with Walter Connolly, Robert Young, George Cassiday, Doris Kenyon and Henry Kolker.

At Paramount the newly starting "I Married an Actress," is a Charles R. Rogers Production. The cast is headed by Elissa Landi and Adolphe Menjou with David Manners, Ala Mowbray, Paul Porcasi and George Baxter the principal supports. Ralph Murphy is the director.

At Warner, with Alfred Green directing, "Housewife" got underway. It features George Brent, Bette Davis, Ann Dvorak, John Holliday, Ruth Donnelly, Leila Bennett, Hobart Cavanaugh and Robert Barrat in a Robert Lord-Lillie Hayward original.

New Personality Introduced

Both the Fox completed pair look to be big box-office attractions. "The World Moves On," a Winfield Sheehan production, introduces a new personality, Madelaine Carroll, British actress, in a powerful story. The supporting cast includes Franchot Tone, Reginald Denny, Raul Roulien, Louise Dresser, Marcelle Corday, Ferdinand Schumann-Heink, Lumsden Hare and Stepin Fetchit among a lengthy list. "Merry Andrew" is a very different Will Rogers' picture. Sol Wurtzel is the producer and David Butler directed. The cast includes Peggy Wood, musical comedy stage star.

Paramount's completed picture is "Many Happy Returns," starring Burns and Allen, and directed by Norman McLeod.

"One Night of Love," a Columbia, winds up the list. An operatic tinged romance, it teams the singers Grace Moore and Tullio Carminati in the leads, supported by Lyle Talbot. Victor Schertzinger directed.

GALA OPENING FOR MICKEY AND MINNIE

While Mickey Mouse has been conceded a big box-office name he and Minnie are to have their first gala Hollywood premiere with super, titanic, colossal, mastodonic investitures, including all the other superlatives under-estimating the brilliant affair. The opening will be held at the Carthay Circle, May 3, and will introduce for the first time Disney's latest mousey creation, "Gulliver Mickey."

20 CENT MINIMUM FACES EXHIBITORS

Local Code Boards Expected to Decide; Columbia Stock Company Will Have 25 Players; MGM Plans Color Shorts

With further announcements of product plans for the 1934-35 season being made this week, the possibility that selling contracts may include a clause stipulating a 20-cent minimum admission charge was confronting small exhibitors. Sentiment of local code boards in the field is expected to determine the decision. This opinion was voiced in Chicago by Gradwell Sears, Warner sales executive, en route back to New York from the MPTOA convention in Los Angeles.

Mr. Sears said that cooperation of exhibitors with distributors to the extent indicated at the convention, also was an important consideration.

"It is still too early to tell whether exhibitors want to raise admissions, since the local boards are just beginning to operate," he said. Speaking for the company, he said that Warner did not sell 10-cent houses last season and "probably won't next year."

"But I am not prepared to say that this will be a definite sales policy," Mr. Sears added. "Also equally indefinite is whether rentals will be raised. It is well known that the NRA has increased production costs $25,000 to $35,000 a negative, but there is nothing definite to indicate this will be reflected in film rentals."

25 in Columbia Stock Company

Additional announcements of new season policies and product from New York and Hollywood included the following:

John M. Crimmon of Amity Pictures has acquired distribution rights to the mystery drama, "Before Morning," from the stage play by Edna and Edward P. Riley. Leo Carrillo is to be starred, and Lora Baxter and Taylor Holmes are in support.

Astor Pictures is contemplating a new series of Tim and Tom three-reel westerns and six six-reel melodramas, in addition to an increase in the Bud 'n Ben series to 12 more releases.

Columbia Pictures' stock company, now being organized, will carry about 25 players. Bill Perlberg, casting director, now in New York, is interviewing players at the company's home office. As the nucleus the following contract players have been signed: Walter Connolly, Ann Sothern, Richard Cromwell, Donald Cook, Raymond Walburn, Richard Heming and Billie Seward.

Sol Lesser has leased space at the Mack Sennett studios where he will produce "Peck's Bad Boy," beginning May 18. This will be followed by "When a Man's a Man," "Chandu," and a series of westerns.

A series of 13 shorts in Technicolor, using juvenile players, will be made by Robert MacGowan for Paramount release. Mr. MacGowan formerly made the Our Gang and Mickey McGuire comedies.

MGM winds up a two-year releasing deal with P. A. Powers at the end of the current season and soon will start production of its own series of color cartoons for 1934-35. During the past two years MGM has been releasing 12 "Flip the Frog" and 12 "Willie Whopper" cartoons, both series produced by UB Iwerks for Powers. David O. Selznick will make about 10 pictures for MGM's 1934-35 program.

Sales policies will be set by Paramount at a two-day meeting of home office executives, division and district managers starting Saturday at the Edgewater Beach hotel in Chicago. The policies decided upon will be officially announced at the annual sales convention in Los Angeles June 18-20.

RKO is considering taking all of its salesmen to Chicago for its annual sales convention June 18-20 at the Drake hotel. The dates were approved this week.

Superior Talking Pictures, Inc., will distribute two series of 12 three-reel featurettes, to be known as Tarzan the Police Dog, and Morton of the Mounted.

United Artists will release 20 features next season. In addition, 26 shorts, all in color, will be produced by Walt Disney and will consist of 13 Mickey Mouse and 13 Silly Symphonies.

Universal Will Have 40

Universal will complete its current schedule by June 1, and by that time three features on next season's program will either be well into production or completed. Production at Universal City during 1934-35 will be stepped up to include approximately 40 features, the greatest number in the last three years. Last season's program embraced 36 features, while the year before saw 26. The 40 features include six adventure pictures to be made by Buck Jones. There will be serials in addition. The program represents an additional $1,000,000 expenditure.

Al Jolson has signed a long-term contract with Warner calling for one picture annually. Hoot Gibson may make a series of six western for the Warner 1934-35 program. Warner has an option on Gibson's services after his first picture, "A Cowboy in London," which he will make in London this summer for Warner.

Majestic, with Larry Darmour in charge of production and Herman Gluckman in charge of distribution, has increased its feature schedule for 1934-35 to sixteen. Mascot, originally planning four exploitation pictures and four serials, has expanded its quota to twelve features and four serials.

Boston Projection Local Has Jubilee

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Unique and thoroughly successful was the Silver Jubilee dinner dance given by motion picture projectionists' local Union No. 182, IATSE & MPMO, Boston, on Wednesday, April 18, at the Copley-Plaza, Boston's most swank travelers' parking place. The event was unique in that speech-making was absolutely taboo and its success is attested by the attendance of between 500 and 600 guests.

Experience of years has taught me that when the Boston men start to do something, it always is well done. Even so I was just a bit astonished at the completeness of this, their latest attempt. The affair was, so far as the dinner itself be concerned, really a banquet par excellence expertly served. The huge grand ballroom of the Copley-Plaza was filled with tables, and all the tables were filled with guests.

Projection "Relics" Exhibited

Prior to the dinner, in a separate room the local exhibited a collection of projection relics, including several projector mechanisms and one of two complete projectors of ancient vintage that had been dug out of the mists of the past. Some day I hope to give you a detailed account of the various items of the exhibit, to which I propose to add later a relic of historic interest and monetary value in the shape of an original Edison spool-bank projector "reel" of film, together with its tin shipping case, the latter, strange as it may seem, acting also as the rewinder.

The affair was in general charge of Joseph S. Cifre, chairman of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary Jubilee Committee, its membership comprising 25 leading Boston projectionists.

Mr. Cifre, a member of the union, is general manager of the Boston branch of the National Theatre Supply Company, one of the company's largest stores. "Joe" is one of the hardest working men of whom I have knowledge.

Members Back Canavan

I enjoyed a long talk with James F. Burke, business representative of Local 182. Mr. Burke in years past has held every post of authority in the local, and administered well the affairs of each one.

Another very capable, competent man with whom I chatted was Thad Barrows, president of the organization. That is a hard working union officer. Both Barrows and Burke do their work for enthusiasm for the "cause." Neither receives or has ever sought a banker's salary to be drawn from the pockets of the men beside the projectors. Either would be most excellent timber for an I. A. vice-presidency. By the way, I talked with many of the Boston men and found that every one had a fixed idea that William Canavan should be returned to the I. A. presidency. The Boston local has 177 members. It has suffered no set-back because of the times; instead, it has maintained its position, and 100 per cent at that, except for a temporary reduction in wages through the summer months. The local was organized in 1909, chartered by the I. A. in 1910 and has grown steadily ever since.

The following men prominent in or having officially to do with motion picture affairs in Boston were among those present:

General Daniel Needham, representing Governor Ely.
Martin J. Mullin and Samuel Pinanski of M. & P. Theatres.
Edward W. Smith, manager and director of Metropolitan Theatre.
E. M. Loew, of the E. M. Loew Circuit.
Al Somerby, Bowdoin Square Theatre.
Hy Fine, music director of M. & P. Theatres.
Bob Sternberg, district manager of M. & P. Theatres.
Gene Fox, publicity director of the Metropolitan Theatre.
Harry Gaufain, producer.
Major Healy, state censor.
James J. Sheeran, state censor.
Joseph Levinson, circuit owner.
Phil Smith, circuit owner.
Harleigh Shultz, Hearst Publications.
Everett Ryan, state inspector.
James J. Finn, The International Projectionist.
Harry Sherman, president of Local 306.
Don McRae, McCauley Lamp Co.
Harry Wasserman, district manager, M. & P. Theatres.
Mrs. Bernard Corbett, Film Board of Trade.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Colonel Lemuel Q. Stoopnagle, of air fame, a six-footer of charm with a smile that flashes on and off like an electric light, confided to our Motion Picture Almanac biographical editor that he will shortly enrich the world of science with five marvelous inventions. A new wrinkle to end wrinkles, is the Colonel's red, white and blue starch, which would be used to keep American flags flying when there is no wind. Too, he has perfected cellophane umbrellas to permit the user to see if it's raining, and inverted lighthouses for submarines. A stationary elevator is another Colonel Stoopnagle advancement—the building will move up and down instead of the elevator. For the business world, the Colonel has devised wet envelopes, which will eliminate the necessity of licking postage stamps.

Not quite developed is his siren absorber for catching the noise made by fire sirens when answering false alarms, so that the racket may be used again for real fires.

The grave of the Hindu sage, Guatama Sidhartha, founder of Buddhism, must have reverberated from indignation within when 64 professional pallbearers and 20 Buddhist monks accompanied an empty casket down the streets of Peiping, the other day, while the camera boxes of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer merrily clicked away taking scenes for Pearl Buck's novel about China, "The Good Earth." The city fathers stepped in and forcibly halted the procession in the name of old Chinese law. The monks, who had been "lending color," for a fee, were ordered back to their temples, where they returned reluctantly, probably muttering, "A nice state of affairs when a fellow can't make an honest dollar or two."

Odd McIntyre's current contribution to the story circles is the yarn about Dashiell Hammett, silver fox of the mystery tale, who was called to Hollywood studios. After the usual period of loitering, he was sent for to view the most recent film of quite a hammy star, and told to turn out a script for him. Several days later he sent in the opening scene of the synopsis. It showed an undertaking parlor. In the dim light was a coffin. A slow-moving close-up revealed the hammy star in the coffin. Then workers came in and began hammering down the lid. There was more to come, but Hammett left the plot right there. And hurried back to New York.

THE CUTTING ROOM

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE

Columbia

This is a modern mother-son drama. The story is an original by Travis Ingham, the screen play by Ethel Hill and Dore Schary. Lambert Hillyer, who has handled many Columbia pictures, is the director.

Keyed to stimulate sympathetic human interest, the story is located in a college town. It eulogizes a type of woman, the college "biddy," known to thousands of graduates. First a waitress, married to a wealthy student football star, family influences force a divorce after her son is born. Jumping a generation, the son comes to college. Thoroughly spoiled at home, he is remade by his own mother—whom he knows only as the hall janitress. Repeating his father's athletic career, he also repeats his poor girl romance. When his father attempts to break up the affair, she goes to her ex-husband, points to the tragedy of their own lives when paternal influence interfered, and as the boy senses the relation and learns the story of his birth, he marries the girl, sure that his father's error will not be repeated.

Jean Arthur, long absent from the screen, is the mother. Donald Cook has the role of the father of their son, Richard Cromwell. Anita Louise is the poor girl whom Cromwell marries. Others in the cast are Mary Forbes, Jane Darwell, Ben Alexander, John Wray, Dutch Hendrian and Paul Stanton.

Supplementing the straight mother love dramatic theme are many incidents atmospheric of college life—campus fun and romance and athletics, with several football games providing the punch action, and excitement contrast. The combination of elements featured in the picture that appeal to both juveniles and adults suggests adoption of showmanship establishing the picture as family type entertainment.

DR. MONICA

Impressive and realistic dramatic romance is the keynote of this story. It is based on a Polish stage play by Marja Szczepkowska that has been highly popular in Europe. The English adaptation by Laura Walker Mayer was scenarized by Charles Kenyon, who did "Working Man" and "I Loved a Woman." Direction is by William Keighley.

As four persons are intimately concerned in the story, the cast is headed by a quartet of well-known screen personalities. The part of Dr. Monica, famous woman physician, is played by Kay Francis. Warren William is her husband. Jean Muir, heroine of "The Earth Turns," is the other woman. Verree Teasdale is a family friend. Supporting players include Phillip Reed, who scores in "Glamour"; Emma Dunn, familiar in many Warner pictures; Herbert Bunston, Ann Shoemaker, Virginia Hammond, Hale Hamilton and the muchly publicized socialite, Virginia Pine.

Located on the Continent, the story narrates a gripping dramatic triangle situation. William, devoted to his wife, Kay Francis, but fascinated by Jean Muir, decides to break up their clandestine affair, not knowing that the girl is to have a child. Building to tense drama, Kay, treating Jean for an injury, discovers the real situation. Only the dynamic pleas of Miss Teasdale convince her that she has a duty more vital than her moral scruples. Informing her husband of her knowledge and that he has a duty to the unmarried mother, Kay plans for a divorce that she knows will be a tragic blow to all. But Jean thinks differently, and after sending William back to his wife, she boards a plane and flies straight out to sea, as those who watch know the gasoline will only take her so far to a sacrificial death.

Marked by a seriousness that's far from grim, "Dr. Monica," which is presented in the spirit of the story in action and dialogue, looks to be a woman's picture mainly, but one which, because of its nature and caliber of the players presenting it, will interest any mature audience.

HE WAS HER MAN

Warner

In this, James Cagney and Joan Blondell are teamed again in the kind of story through which both rose to stardom. Basically it's a gangster atmosphered drama, in which the dynamic law of the gunman influences the sustaining romantic contrast. The original story is by Robert Lord, whose adaptability to this type yarn is attested by "Little Giant" and "Heroes for Sale." The screen play is by Tom Buckingham, last credited with "Tom Brown of Culver," and Nevin Busch, who adapted "College Coach."

Supporting the leads are Victor Jory, recently in "I Believed in You;" Frank Craven, known for both stage and screen appearances; Russell Hopton, now in "Half a Sinner;" Sarah Padden, Bradley Page and Samuel Hinds.

The principal locale is San Francisco and its fishing village environs. Cagney, ex-con, after being paid 15 grand to crack a safe, squeals to the police, and one of the gang is killed. Fleeing, he meets Joan Blondell, lady of the streets, who gets out of the mess by telling Cagney that she is to wed Jory, Portuguese fisherman. Welcomed and sheltered by Jory and his mother, Sarah Padden, suspense grows as Page's mobsters trail him to his death.

Besides the reunited Cagney-Blondell team to sell, the story has realistic drama, exciting suspense to sell, in addition to the moral that crime does not pay—particularly if the vicious underworld sits in judgment.

THE CIRCUS CLOWN

Warner

With Joe E. Brown as the star, this title adequately explains the color, character and background of this story. It's a circus picture and should be sold in circus style. While romance, drama, comedy, human interest and semi-tragedy are woven in, the exciting color of a three-ringed circus—everything from the menagerie, performers and thrill to sideshow freaks—is the natural feature.

Original story and screen play are by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby, who collaborated on "Horsefeathers," "Duck Soup" and "Kid from Spain," remembered as box-office comedies. Direction is by Ray Enright, who made a preview Brown picture, "The Tenderfoot," also "Silk Express" and "Havana Widows."

The cast supporting Brown is composed of known screen names. In most prominent roles are Patricia Ellis, recently in "Let's Be Ritzy;" Dorothy Burgess, currently in "Friends of Mr. Sweeney;" Donald Dilloway, in several important pictures during the last year, Gordon Westcott, one of the "Convention City" funsters. Harry Woods, little Ronnie Cosby, Spencer Charters and Tom Dugan also are included.

The son of an old acrobat, gone sour on the game, has circus blood in his veins. A barnyard performer and a pair of free tickets carry him away with the show. Roustabout, the butt of every one's jokes, he sticks as he's in love with Miss Ellis, queen of the flying trapeze, until Westcott, Patricia's dissolute brother, shows up drunk, and Brown, fearing what might happen to the girl if he goes on, kayoes Westcott. climbs to midair and goes through the act.

The story calls for many exciting situations and much action. It seems to have the stuff for all classes of patrons, and because of its character, theme and atmosphere demands that showmen take a leaf from the circus advance man's book of tricks in exploiting the show.

Sun Still Shining And Still Needed

To the Editor of the Herald:

Just a line from California, U.S.A., to let you know that the sun is still shining and that the sun is still needed here, and from what the press reports say, maybe we foreigners out here should send you a little of that "enigmatic, reluctant California Sun," but perhaps you could construct a nice little studio stage to cover Cape Race to the lower Chesapeake, and make the weather to suit you.

After reading your editorial, "Chains of Old Silver" in Motion Picture Herald of February 24, I must say that you should come to California and find out just what keeps the movies in the Sunshine State, or, as you call it, "the State of Smiles." Now if you were to stop and think that the success of a picture is not only "shots" produced by the brains of the studios on studio stages, but shots where the "shots" of the "Great Out-of-Doors" are used. Now what really great production has only "shots" made on studio stages, as for instance the Fox production, "Paddy the Next Best Thing." Show me what studio stage or any other kind of stage can produce the coast line and general scenic beauty that was found in this picture—it was all taken by "Sun Light."

I could tell you details of production, as to the location, distance, climate, the amount of sun that is needed, and all found here in California, but maybe you foreigners have a way to produce any and all kinds of "shots" on stages, where day and night are produced at will. As to the "Nothing of the land the sun-seekers found remains to the screen but the address" I am inclosing a few pictures from the Los Angeles Times of March 4th on "Around the World in California in Four Days." By looking over these pictures you can see for yourself what keeps the movies in California, and that the Sun is still needed very badly in the making of pictures. If you were to keep a record of all the pictures released in the 1933-1934 season you would no doubt find a large percentage of the footage in which both the out-of-doors and the sun have played an important part in the picture.

I am a steady reader of your magazine or, as I call it, "the Exhibitor's Bible," and get a great deal of good out of Friend Richardson's section, "The Bluebook School." Hoping you will appreciate a Californian's view on this subject, and good luck to your magazine, I remain,

R. G. Mobarry, 2715 Hope Street,
Walnut Park, Cal.

P. S. Looking over the release list I find that the following productions had a large percentage of out-of-doors and sun-"shots" in them: "The Lost Patrol," "Last Round Up," "Roman Scandals," "Miss Fane's Baby," "8 Girls in a Boat," "Hips Hips Hooray," "Man's Castle," "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," "Lady for a Day," and "Wild Boys of the Road." These are just a few—all made within 200 miles of Hollywood.

Mr. Mobarry makes interesting contention in his citations about California locations and their value to current production. However, his contention does not take cognizance of the fact that there are also many and varied natural locations in as ready access from any other major center where production might be undertaken. There is "out-of-doors" almost everywhere, and it is always picturable. —The Editor

"Joe Palooka" Brings Horne Recognition

Motion picture advertising was singled out of all other types for commendation this week when the American Spectator, monthly literati newspaper, selected Hal Horne's campaign on United Artists' "Joe Palooka," Reliance comedy starring Jimmy Durante, as the best of the year.

The five distinguished editors of the Spectator—George Jean Nathan, Ernest Boyd, Sherwood Anderson, James Branch Cabell and Eugene O'Neill—formed their own prize committee and, besides Mr. Horne's campaign, commended the New York Times for the best newspaper reporting of the year with Frederick Birchall's dispatches from Berlin. Sean O'Faolain's "A Nest of Simple Folk" was adjudged the best fiction; the preface of George Bernard Shaw's "On the Rocks" was selected as the best prose, and Gordon Daviot's "Richard of Bordeaux" won the accolade as the best play.

Of the five winners, Mr. Horne is the only native American. His staff at United Artists assisted him. The combined efforts in advertising "Palooka" "interested several of the editors to the extreme of luring them to Mr. Durante's performance," said the Spectator announcement.

Change in Astoria Studio Use Talked

Paramount is considering an arrangement whereby outside unit producers will make feature pictures for company distribution at the Eastern Service Studio in Astoria, Long Island. This studio formerly was operated by Paramount, but feature production there was discontinued in 1931.

The company is not, however, contemplating the establishment of any definite studio organization at the Long Island plant, it was stated at the Paramount home office.

At the same time, reports that Warner Bros. was considering a similar move were denied by Sam Sax's office at the Vitaphone Studio in Brooklyn. The Warner home office also considered "such a thing extremely doubtful."

Biophone Suing Three Electrics

The Biophone Corporation, manufacturer of reproducing equipment, filed suit on Wednesday in the United States district court, New York, for $15,000,000, against the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., charging violation of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts.

The suit, filed by Biophone's attorneys, David Berger and Ralph Vatner, also charged the defendants with monopolizing the talking picture field.

ALLIED PLEDGES AID TO RESEARCH COUNCIL

Allied States Association on Wednesday pledged its support to the Motion Picture Research Council, headed by Mrs. August Belmont, in the Council's campaign to elevate the standards of motion picture entertainment, and in its opposition to compulsory block booking. At the same time Allied petitioned the Council for its support of the Patman federal proposal to abolish block booking.

Allied's promise to "cooperate fully with the Council and all public spirited groups in general to employ the right of selection" came at a meeting Wednesday of eastern Allied leaders at the Park Central Hotel, New York, at which the following were present: E. M. Loew, Ed. Ansin, L. Levin, J. Charnow, I. Dollinger, E. Tarbell, A. Stone, William Smalley, B. Berkowitz, W. H. McLaughlin, E. H. Stoneman, H. Blum, W. B. Littlefield and S. E. Samuelson.

The meeting considered organization of expansion plans and new product and will be followed by another session on May 15 at Syracuse.

Sisk Will Handle Only Film Publicity

Robert F. Sisk, for the past two years in charge of all RKO film and theatre advertising and publicity, will relinquish within the next few weeks all duties pertaining to theatre publicity and devote his efforts exclusively to the management of the motion picture advertising. The move is reported to have been engineered by J. R. McDonough, RKO general manager, who is said to feel pictures and theatres should be handled separately.

It was learned also that Mike Meehan, controller of RKO's preferred stock, is agitating to divorce operation of Keith-Albee-Orpheum theatres from the picture company, and that the Sisk transfer was indictative of Mr. Meehan's plans.

RKO officials, however, on Wednesday denied any likelihood that the K-A-O houses will be removed from RKO supervision. That there is considerable disagreement over Mr. Meehan's proposals was disclosed.

"Meehan is simply trying to assert his rights as the controller of the company," an RKO official said.

John Dowd, who has handled the RKO theatres' advertising and publicity under Mr. Sisk, will continue in that position.

Warner Purchases Teddington Studio For British Output

Warner Bros. this week announced the purchase of the Teddington studios near London, the property having been occupied by the company for its British production since September, 1931. Harry M. Warner, president, and Sam E. Morris, vice-president in charge of the company's foreign affairs, negotiated the purchase.

The Teddington studios maintain an annual output of 26 feature pictures, chiefly for distribution in the United Kingdom, India, Australia and other parts of the Empire. Irving Asher is chairman and managing director of Warner-First National Productions, Ltd., and A. M. Salomon is studio manager.

Fox-West Coast Agreement Made

Fox Film Corporation, Chase National Bank and the Skouras Enterprises this week were understood to have come to an agreement regarding reorganization of Fox-West Theatres. While no details could be obtained—due chiefly to the fact that any plan must first be submitted to the United States district court at Los Angeles for approval—it was said by authoritative sources that an agreement had been reached pertaining to the actual set-up of the theatre group under reorganization. Coast reports indicated Sidney Kent, Fox Film president, may head the new company.

Meanwhile, a hearing on the petition of U. S. Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Wilmington, Del., receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., for authority to enter into a compromise agreement with the Chase National Bank, was fixed last week for May 1, by Chief Justice Daniel J. Layton, in chancery court, Wilmington.

Irving Trust Petition For $110,000 Approved

The petition of Irving Trust Co., trustee in bankruptcy for Publix Enterprises, and its attorneys, Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam & Roberts, for partial compensation aggregating $110,000 for bankruptcy administration services was approved Tuesday by Referee Henry K. Davis.

Two large claims against Publix held not provable by Referee Davis are those of the Sixteenth Street Realty Co., for $1,000,000, and the Fifteenth Street Investment Co., for $250,000, both for future rent on Denver theatre leases.

Meanwhile, consideration of three claims against Paramount Publix scheduled for Monday in New York was postponed until the creditors' meeting May 2. Claims to be adjusted are those of St. Louis Properties, $33,000; Citizens' National Trust and Savings Bank, Los Angeles, $10,000 and $13,000.

An order expunging a claim of $113,000 filed against Paramount by Vincent Lawrence, writer, alleging breach of contract, was signed by Referee Henry K. Davis at a hearing last week.

In Dover, Del., Interstate Circuit, Inc., was chartered, listing a capital of $10,000.

Manhattan Melodrama

(MGM-David O. Selznick)

Drama

This dramatic picture has showmanship vividly present in cast, story and production values. Its interest-creating potentialities are solely dependent upon the amount, money and effort applied to its exploitation. Screen quality for modern audiences, men, women and children, seriously entertaining and morally instructive, is there. The producers have done their part—provided novel saleable merchandise. It's up to the men who play it.

Although elaborately mounted, "Manhattan Melodrama" is simple drama with broad appeal. It deals with an understandable situation, presenting it clearly and completely. Yet while using every theatric trick to deliver its wallop, it permits deft illusion to have a forceful part. Topical interludes, accenting the picture's character, make possible an understanding more realistic than were entire reliance placed upon action or dialogue.

"Manhattan Melodrama" is life drama of two men and a woman, and modernly romantic. It includes many sparkling comedy moments in situation, action and dialogue. With quick excitement it builds suspense.

Locaied in New York, covering a period of years, using few persons as symbols, it dramatizes certain phases of life. Actually it is the intimate human story of two boys. Orphaned in the General Slocum steamship disaster; further bereft when their foster father is killed during a Trotzky riot; one (Gable) chose the wrong life path, the other (Powell) the accepted right. Blackie, crap-shooting kid, became a big shot gambler. Jim, studious, became a lawyer. Always a bond between them, their paths separated, crossed and finally converged at the most critical moments.

Blackie killed, but, aided by his pal Spud, he cleverly tricked Jim (now district attorney) so that he had no case. Blackie, loving Eleanor, his mistress, surrendered her to Jim when he knew that union meant happiness for both. When Snow, Jim's ex-aide, menaced his chief's gubernatorial ambitions, threatening to expose the Blackie-Jim relations, the inside story on Eleanor as well as that of the Arnold killing, Blackie, to protect both, killed again.

Jim prosecuted, convicted and obtained a death sentence against his boyhood friend. But there was no venom in Blackie's heart. As governor, Jim was deaf to Eleanor's pleas. Blackie, knowing what was going on, alone sympathized with the perplexed man. In his strange philosophy, he would consider Jim a skunk if he did anything other than his sworn duty to the people.

In Sing Sing's death house, the men re-live their lives, but Jim is sorry for the path he chose. As Father Joe, who once pulled them from the burning river boat, listens, Jim would commute the sentence. But not for Blackie. With quick step he marches to the fate the law demands. The lights dim suddenly as Jim stumbles down the corridor. But the finale is not morbid; rather a triumph for men who stuck to their ideals.

The showmanship is as simple as the picture itself. There are names for those who need them. There's an intensely provocative story teeming with ticket selling catchlines. It's acted with convicing realism that most folk understand.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Springtime for Henry

(Fox-Lasky)

Romantic Farce

Semi-sophisticated romantic farce for specialized audiences, many hurdles must be hopped if popular interest is to be stimulated for this picture. As it concentrates on visualizing the effects of Spring on one man's character, it involves three other persons in a mixed-up situation love affair difficult to understand. The comic touch is applied continually in both action and dialogue to the extent that some of the lines handicap the picture's value as an all-family attraction in the effort to make the picture appealing to the modernes.

Henry, gay philanderer, enjoying a reciprocated affair with Julia Jelliwell, has an uplifting influence brought into his life as Miss Smith becomes his secretary. Husband Johnnie philosophically tolerates the affair, believing it will eventuate in his selling carburetors to the Dewlit Motor Company. Johnnie meantime going on the make for Miss Smith, the show moves through the regular theatric gamut until, thoroughly inoculated by the uplifting influence of the good woman, Henry, lured by Julia, visits the Ray of Hope Mission. Confessing his past errors, the meeting generates into a slam-bang riot. The anti-climax reveals Miss Smith (the good woman) an ex-murderess who shot her husband in the Touraine, with much surprise all around. However, as Johnnie gets the carburetor contract, it's okay with him for Henry and Julia to carry on as long as he can have the reformed Miss Smith.

Despite value of cast names, the main field for the picture undoubtedly is the more liberal minded audiences to whom it may be sold as a spring tonic cocktail with a good supporting program.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Scarlet Empress

(Paramount)

Drama, Romance, Music

How patrons will respond to "The Scarlet Empress" is a problem, the solution of which demands astute showmanship. Basically, it's a lavishly mounted eye-and-ear spectacle. From the standpoint of magnitude, it is vividly different. Production effects, masterpieces of detailed pictorial splendor and unprecedented utilization of sound, dominate story or cast personnel values.

In many ways, as it comes up on the screen, the picture is a direct return to the silent day technique. A score or more subtitles are used to facilitate story interpretation and explain action. The musical score, in which chiming bells clang continuously, is a treat for music lovers. Particularly is this true of the sequence which features the famous "Kamennoi-Ostrow," a triumph of instrumental, choral and ringing melody. Yet so much is simultaneously presented that watching and listening to the picture is analgous to attempting to grasp every feature of a multi-ringed circus.

Not an historical romance drama as has been modernly established by such pictures as "Catherine the Great," "Henry VIII," or "Rothschild," it uses scattered pages from the diary of a Prussian princess, who became Russia's great empress, as the framework for its story. Because of this fact, there will be a tendency to compare the picture to "Catherine the Great." Actually the similarity is vague. Though presented with gigantic scope, "The Scarlet Empress" is the intimate story of a woman.

As the picture visualizes the semi-barbaric Oriental exoticism of the early 18th century Muscovite court, it dramatizes Sophie Frederica, the diplomatically betrothed wife of mentally deranged and lecherous Grand Duke Peter. As she is the center of all courtly intrigue, jealousy, conspiracy, it dramatizes the ambitious mother who wanted a throne for her daughter; with a comedy twist, it dramatizes Empress Elizabeth, giving her a composite Avenue A-Brooklyn-Kansas City character, presenting her as a woman whose only desire is that through this strange marriage should come an offspring worthy to continue her dynasty. It makes Sophie a hated wife, picking and choosing her lovers from the host of plotters. Finally, when powerful Elizabeth dies, it whirls Sophie into seething conflict—marked by a most thrilling bit of action as whole troops of Cossack cavalry ride through the palace—revolution that destroys Peter and puts her on the throne as Catherine the Great.

Practical selling calls for a brand of showmanship that's been long dormant. Essentially it's a pageant of masses, mechanics and sound wherein common entertainment elements are subordinate to both ponderous and dashing spectacle. Marlene Dietrich is really the only publicity valuable name, although Louise Dresser is the most easily understood character in the picture, so something more than mere dependence upon names is necessary. The impression should be created that the picture is vividly different. Strong references to its physical bigness should be broadcast. So should intriguing hints as to its intimate character appeal to those who consider unusual music and sound an attraction. It shouts for ingenious, mind-stunning showmanship comparable to the type

"Enjoyable and satisfying entertainment flows from this bucket of farce and fun. It's a sparkling draught right from the well of laughter. Taken from a successful play, modernized with shrewdness for homespun values, smart showmanship has aimed it at the masses and it hits the mark."

—Motion Picture Daily

"Promise your patrons their money's worth in entertainment, assured that the picture will deliver."

Half a Sinner

(Universal)

Comedy

In adapting this stage play, "Alias the Deacon," all the color that made it a legitimate comedy success has been preserved. Action and dialogue are of equal importance in carrying the story which develops a standby romantic angle, creates some ludicrous buffoonery, uncovers the expected dramatic asset and centers audience interest on practically every character at one time or another.

The Deacon actually is a card sharp masquerading as a man of the cloth. As a hobo, he first aids Phyllis, also riding the rods, to escape the unwelcome attention of Slim, later to light the spark of love for her and John Adams. Fostering the romance, the Deacon permits himself to be lured into a card game, where by manipulating the deck he outslicks the slickers and saves Widow Clarke's hotel from mortgagee Cunningham's clutches. As the faked wrestling match interludes, in which the double crossing manager Slim and dumb grappler Bill Moran shine, the show is brought to a happy ending.

Cast names being none too strong, showmanship dependence should be placed on story value with the comedy aspects stressed. As the fun making is clean and wholesome throughout and it also moves with catchy speed, the show is okay for family audiences, yet because of its semi-sporting world atmosphere it has more than the usual picture of this type to interest men folk. Card manipulating gags suggest some tricky showmanship to attract advance attention.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Now I'll Tell

(Fox-Sheehan)

Drama

This is the biography of Arnold Rothstein, New York gambler. Obviously dramatic, it is given a human interest dramatic twist, carries a thread of contrast comedy, generates topical excitement that colors suspense and in the end is an emphatic exposition that living beyond the pale, though not directly an accused criminal, does not pay. Not coming within the gangster classification, the picture nevertheless is adult entertainment with particular appeal to menfolk. Interest for women is found in the love story of Helen Twelvetrees as the gambler's neglected wife.

Spencer Tracy's performances paints Golden (Rothstein) as anything but an obnoxious character and theatric license tinges fact, yet the story is mainly authentic. A small time gambler, Golden uses Blue Book names to gain prestige. Established, married to Virginia, he promises to quit when he gets $200,000. Never associated with his activities, she demurely stays home and waits. The thrill of wagering on cards, sporting events, anything, is Golden's life blood. A fixed fight gains him Mositer's enmity. A mixup with Peggy, subsequently killed in an auto crash, strangles his wife's faith. Intensely loving her, he forces his right-hand man Freddie, comedy relief, to acknowledge Peggy as his mistress. Eventually his luck fails. His wife, tired of begging him to get out of his hectic dangerous life, goes to Europe, falls in love with another man and arranges a divorce. Befriended only by Freddie, Golden loses a fortune to Mositer. Pawning his wife's jewels, which he always promised to give her, he buys an insurance policy and walks to his doom.

As the picture is neither a character vindication nor apology, its entertainment is that accruing to the color, glamour, thrill of the inside story of a headline personality. Where the Rothstein story is more or less familiar to patrons, exhibitors have a special sales advantage. For general purposes, advance campaigns that combine the realism of the man's life with the names of the picture players who reenact it on the screen appear to be the most effective. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Where Sinners Meet

(Radio)

Comedy

There's lots of entertainment in this picture and plenty in the way of cast name and story values with which to sell it, yet though those qualities seem potent enough, there's still much to be done in selling it. It's always a comedy; but first it's a heavily English atmosphered picture. Dialogue is strongly British accented and the cast is decidedly British tinged. Paradoxically, it's modern American type entertainment. Situations, action and dialogue continually build comedy and as dramatic suspense is applied, interest is generated in the beginning, held all the way through and winds up with a climax that's a brilliant satire on the story's plot.

While the picture is light all the way through, it's essentially an adult attraction. Story intent, while readily understandable to grownups, is a bit too complicated for child understanding.

Latimer, a sort of romantic iconoclast, lives on Dover Road, highway for eloping lovers between London and channel ports. His hobby is to waylay infatuated elopers and by making them his unwilling guests, attempt to show them the folly of leaping before looking. When he entertains Leonard and Anne, he catches a pair of tartars whose stay in his home is one grand series of laughs in which Reginald Owen reveals himself as an A-1 comedian. The situation is complicated as Leonard's wife, Eustasia, eloping with Nicholas, is brought into the house and turmoil ensues that eventually reunites the errant husband and wife, saves Nicholas from what he is brought to realize is the monotony of wedded bliss, yet which ironically starts the anti-Cupid Latimer down the Dover Road with Anne.

With Diana Wynyard, Clive Brook and Billie Burke topping the cast, name values are adequate, but when the picture is over Reginald Owen undoubtedly will be the person of whom audiences talk. Consequently good showmanship dictates that the comedy for which he is mainly responsible should be stressed to the limit. Trick stuff is the material that should predominate in the advance campaign. Even the title, which sounds lurid, should be worked in in such a way that folk will know the show is a unique comedy. Likewise catchlines should be prepared with a light flair that lets patrons know that fun is the show's essence and that romance, given an unusual twist, is the element that makes the whole thing go.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Witching Hour

Melodrama

Give this picture the support of energetic ingenious showmanship, as family entertainment. Though short of outstanding cast names, it presents unusual interesting and novel story values. These elements, suggesting unique exploitation possibilities, are supplemented by acting quality. Nevertheless, while possessing much unusual entertainment value, the show will not be easy to sell to the business it justly merits.

Using preview audience reactions as a basis, "The Witching Hour" belongs in that class to which the trade term "sleeper" sometimes is applied. Basically, it is a melodrama. But as story telling motif makes vivid, intriguing use of hypnotic influence as a narrating medium, the love interest, drama, comedy, thrill are given unusual twists. Yet the problem is to create the interest in advance that will make word of mouth advertising a forceful factor.

Short in running time, the picture packs a wide variety of novel amusement. Unaware of his hypnotic power, gentleman gambler Brookfield brings Clay, in love with Nancy, under his strange power. Endeavoring to rid the boy of his fear of a cat's eye ring, he threatens to kill a welching patron, Hardmuth. Next morning, in a daze, Clay goes to his office and kills Hardmuth. Unable to present a motive, no lawyer will take the boy's defense. Finally, spurred on by Mrs. Thorne and Nancy, Brookfield begs Prentice, retired attorney and friend of metaphysical discussion, to take the case. Only the vision of Clay's grandmother, a girl whom Prentice once loved and lost, impels the old man to take the case.

In the court room, the prosecution circumvents every defense argument. Against his wishes Prentice is forced to put Brookfield on the stand and reveal his hypnotic powers, which the defense claims were transmitted to the boy and thus became the medium of Brookfield's killing wish. As the jury foreman scoffs at this alibi, Brookfield goes to work on him: brings him under his hypnotic power, forces him to cross the room, grab a gun and shoot at the prosecuting attorney. Then comes the "not guilty" verdict, permitting Prentice to return to his retirement and dreams of the girl of long ago, and opening the way to happiness for Clay and Nancy.

Probably the most forceful advertising factor available is that "The Witching Hour" is vididly different. It puts up on the screen most of the things that ordinary audiences like to see there. To these it adds unusual novelty. Fundamentally, it's a thrill picture, but not one in which fear or terror are even hinted. Rather it is an exposition of a strange power's influence. Yet always it's entertainment, in which the love angle generates human interest; the comedy provokes plenty of laughter, and the drama erects a suspense that holds attention continually.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Double Door

(Paramount)

Melodrama

This melodrama revives the terror thrill entertainment mode. Cold, realistic drama, it utilizes a simple yet powerful technique and motif to generate emotional hysteria. Creation of hatred for the marble-hearted villainess, leading character, is the sustaining element. Comedy, other than that inspired by a natural desire to see the she-devil get it in the neck, is absent. Lightened only by a continually menaced romance, in which the young lovers are recipients of every audience sympathy, fear of what this cruelly bitter woman will do next to bend every one to her iron will, builds chilling suspense.

As thrills grows to definite horror, the appeal of the show is difficult to estimate. In the general field, where lighter, gayer, less stark pictures are the demand, its successful presentation most likely will prove a test of constructive showmanship.

Timed to about 1905, all the action takes place within the walls of an old Fifth Avenue mansion. Victoria, tyrannical mistress of the Van Brett millions, despising lovely, work-a-day Anne, turns her marriage to Rip into bitter travesty. Making rabbit-willed sister Caroline the particular object of her viciousness, Victoria adapts every possible meanness to frustrate the marriage. Failing to prove Anne unfaithful, seeing her spiteful reign crumbling as Rip would take his bride from the house of horror, she lures the girl to her room under kindly pretext and shuts her up in a soundproof vault. Finally, under the prodding of Lawyer Neff, Caroline cracks under the strain, tells that Anne was last in Victoria's room, tells about the secret soundproof vault, and Victoria is forced to open the doors. As the others leave her alone, she goes to the vault, looks in, stops as she hears a noise and then, accidentally touching a hidden spring, is forced inside to suffer the doom she so devilishly plotted for Anne.

The fact that cast names are none too potent detracts nothing from the merit of their performances. In the new screen personality, Mary Morris, audiences will have a villain they can enthusiastically hate, as they pull for every other member of the troupe. Without kidding the picture, it seems reasonable that the thrill-terror should be accepted in such a way that it will give folk an opportunity to hiss, hoot and cheer. Yet, understanding of local likes and dislikes is the most vital consideration. If they like stern melodrama, give it to them. If lighter romantic drama, to which they can apply their own comedy is desired, present it in that way. In this way the subtitle, "The Play That Shocked Broadway," can, without being burlesqued, be used to good advantage.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Tarzan and His Mate

(MGM)

Jungle Fiction

Once again Tarzan, in the person of the physically powerful and amazingly athletic Johnny Weissmuller, comes to the screen, and it is a Tarzan picture which can be ballyhooed to the skies.

A sequel to the "Tarzan, the Ape Man," of 1932, also with Weissmuller, "Tarzan and His Mate," is far and away superior to its predecessor. It is wide open for the biggest exploitation possible, and is just as much a show for the adults of whatever age or disposition as it is for the youngest or oldest youngster. It most emphatically should be circused from start to finish, with its hordes of elephants answering the trumpet call of the great white boss of the jungle, its dozens of fiercely prowling lions lured to the kill, and its innumerable chattering apes, protecting and fighting for their human king.

The romance of the jungle man and his western white girl is there more strongly than ever, with Maureen O'Sullivan once again the mate of Tarzan, appealing as ever, springing from tree to tree with him and diving from lofty branches into his arms with all the reckless abandon and all the lithe grace of an adagio expert. Tarzan, with his mouthings of English words and his physical power, is yet every inch an ape man. Neil Hamilton and Paul Cavanagh are the menace to Tarzan's happiness with his mate in the jungle, the other players being unimportant.

Let the exhibitor ask his audience to open wide their imagination and revel in the wide flung panorama against which Cedric Gibbons, director, has set his strangly romantic jungle adventure. It is fiction of the purest die, just as the original Edgar Rice Burroughs stories were purest fiction. With almost amazing effect have been conducted Tarzan's rescues of his mate from a fighting crocodile, from a tearing lioness, from a leopard, from a maddened rhinoceros, doing successful battle with only a knife for weapon.

The plot finds Hamilton and Cavanagh striking into the jungle bound for a deep lying elephant burial ground, in search of a fabulous wealth of tusks. Hamilton is in love with Miss O'Sullivan and hopes to bring her back with him to civilization. Cavanagh, when he sees her, has the same idea, but with a different sort of personal interest. When Tarzan refuses to guide them to raid the cemetery of his friends, Cavanagh wounds an elephant, and the party follow him to the burial ground. Tarzan marshals his horde of thundering pachyderms to smash the invaders, but by a ruse Cavanagh causes their dispersal, then shoots Tarzan. An ape saves him, nurses him back to health, while the safari treks out with the ivory. Miss O'Sullivan, believing her mate is dead, goes with them. But the little ape who is Tarzan's constant companion, brings him word of the trapping of the party by savage blacks, who have ingeniously called a pack of lions for a Roman holiday. Tarzan races to the rescue of his mate, leading a herd of elephants. They arrive in time to see Cavanagh and Hamilton killed, rescue Tarzan's mate and the elephants trample the lions.

It is entertainment of such caliber as to offer one of those rare opportunities when the showman may go the limit. Dress up the front of the theatre, pre-sell the picture with all the stunts possible and plan a heavy campaign.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Cedric Gibbons. Based upon the characters created by Edgar Rice Burroughs in his "Tarzan" stories. Screen play by J. Kevin McGuinness. Adaptation by Howard Emmett Rogers and Leon Gordon. Photographed by Charles Clark and Clyde DeVinna. Art director, Arnold Gillespie. Film editor, Tom Held. Release date, April 20, 1934. Running time, 116 minutes.

Beyond Bengal

(Showmens)

Jungle Expedition

Harry Schenck, screen veteran, obtained the hearty cooperation of the Sultan of Perak, in the Federated Malay States, and accompanied by a host of natives, mounted upon huge Indian elephants, marched into the Malayan jungle with many guns, fourteen cameras and sound apparatus. The result of that expedition, "Beyond Bengal," is a strong drama of nature's own making, with many a real thrill.

Many months were spent in the making, and the highlights of the long trek through the jungle were selected with intelligence and a thought to dramatic content. It is a film of definite interest, of wide appeal, and certainly may be sold. If in spots it seems almost a bit gruesome at least it is real. The exhibitor selling the film should emphasize the ring of authenticity. The opportunity for ballyhoo and exploitation is there, with the use of appropriate lobby decorations, marquee displays and the like.

Woven into this record is a romance, that between Mr. Schenck's young native servant and the unusually attractive native girl who acted as maid for Miss Joan Lowell, a British scientist who accompanied Mr. Schenck. Named Ali and Bee, both are appealing characters.

The other leading players introduced are Badri, the native interpreter; Captain Nain Sei, number one gunner and a crack shot, and Tao Biin, number one native.

In chronological order the expedition goes first into the lion country, with the beaters driving the lordly beasts into the faces of the numerous cameras. Incidentally are caught many amusing scenes of the monkeys racing through the trees and others not so amusing—a python catches a monkey, also wraps its tremendous coils around a native servant. In many a close shot the lions and tigers are caught by the camera, some shot down by Nain Sei just in time to protect the cameraman. From there the expedition trails its way to the wild elephant country, and there is the amazing picture of natives, in tiny frail boats, pursuing the great pachyderms, forcing them into the eye of the camera, until they become annoyed and toss over men and boats.

Critics Acclaim "20th Century"

DICK MOOK—Picture Play. "'Twentieth Century' should cop the Academy award for 1934."

GENE CHRISMAN—Fawcetts. "It looks like the comedy hit of the year. Columbia has done it again! Barrymore and Lombard were never better."

DOROTHY DONNELL—Motion Picture Publications. "Hard to find words enough to describe 'Twentieth Century'. A director's picnic—an actor's holiday—and a vacation from care for the audience."

BARBARA BARRY—New Movie. "One more rung up the ladder for Columbia! 'Twentieth Century' is superbly hilarious and Barrymore displays an almost forgotten flair for comedy. Lombard gives a top-notch performance."

TED SMITS—International News Service. "It's the smartest comedy I have seen in I don't know how many years."

ALICE TILDSLEY—Philadelphia Ledger Syndicate. "Best performance Carole Lombard ever gave. We were rolling in the aisles. I can hardly say enough for it."

HUBBARD KEAVY—Associated Press. "It's sure a grand comedy—ought to be a smash hit."

DOUGLAS CHURCHILL—New York Times. "One of the gayest and most intelligent comedies of the season."

JACK GRANT—Motion Picture Classic. "Again Columbia has done it! 'Twentieth Century' is a worthy successor to 'It Happened One Night'."

WALTER RAMSEY—Western Editor of Modern Screen. "Exceptional entertainment! John Barrymore must have imbued Carole Lombard with some of his enthusiasm for she does her best job to date."

DAN THOMAS—N. E. A. "'Twentieth Century' is a very amusing picture which brings John Barrymore to the screen in a type of role which he should play more often. Carole Lombard also gives an excellent performance as the temperamental actress."

JERRY HOFFMAN—Universal Service L. A. Examiner. "Not in a long time has Barrymore had a role better fitted to display himself as a splendid farceur."

ELIZABETH WILSON—Silver Screen. "A laughing, brilliant comedy, brilliantly acted. Lombard and Barrymore are the BEST!"

the expedition, via telescopic lens, has caught the sladang, declared to be the most dangerous animal on the earth and combining fighting instinct with ability to think. Miss Lowell comes down with jungle fever, and it becomes necessary to make all haste to civilization if her life is to be saved. A short cut is undertaken, with the necessity of crossing the Boya (Crocodile) River, infested with numberless man-eating crocodiles. Natives are sent ahead to attempt to clear the river in their small boats, but first one, then another, is upset. Here is the real highlight of the picture, although there may be even a little too much of the crocodile sequence, thrilling as it is. The boy, Ali, volunteers to assist, is caught by a pursuing crocodile, and barely escapes with his life, as Bee nurses him to health. The return to civilization is made in time.

The picture, though it is of the type that has been seen before, offers something different and for the most part highly dramatic.—AARONSON, New York.

Stand Up and Cheer

(Fox-Sheehan)

Musical

Fox offers a musical production which, with much fanfare and trumpets, revolves about the efforts of the federal government to get the country "out of the red" via song, dance and entertainment, and the appointment of a Secretary of Amusement in the national cabinet, whose duty it becomes to change the national disposition from darkness to light.

Around that novel if slightly far-fetched focal point has been built a series of musical numbers, most of them tuneful, most of them effectively entertaining, as the Secretary of Amusement goes to work on his assignment from the president of the United States.

The fact that Fox has done considerable preselling on its big musical should be the point from which the exhibitor starts his campaign. Loudspeakers in the lobby may be used, broadcasting the film's outstanding musical numbers. The title is open to exploitation, and the film's theme strikes a timely note. That should make the selling comparatively easy. There is no reason why local organizations may not be drawn into the campaign, especially such as the American Legion. The whole family may see the picture, since it is as clean as a hound's tooth, and has the additional value of numerous children, especially the tiny Shirley Temple. Special billing for little Shirley should be worthwhile. She is a full fledged star in her own right at this moment, or should be, and reflects that in her act with James Dunn, who sings and dances in appealing fashion.

Besides these two are Warner Baxter as the great producer who is named Amusement Secretary; Madge Evans, who completes the rather inconspicuous romantic phase of the film's story with Baxter, as the assistant in charge of children's entertainment, and such figures as John Boles and Sylvia Froos as a singing team; "Aunt Jemima," Mitchell and Durant, who, as a pair of investigating senators, slap each other about in their own amusing fashion; Nigel Bruce and Stepin Fetchit, who provides several amusing moments.

Baxter runs into obstacles when dignified senators resent his laugh-provoking plans, and insidious business interests attempt to ruin him by spreading harmful propaganda. He is ready to quit, but Miss Evans, in love with him, makes him stick to the job, and he finally puts it over, the film concluding in a blaze of triumphant chanting as representative workers from all walks of life march across the screen, shouting, and a dim Paul Revere-like figure rides a white horse across the skies.

The film has dash and vigor, entertainment and numerous laughs, tuneful music and bright dance numbers, and despite its concentration on other elements than plot development, should be sold well and easily as full-bodied entertainment.—AARONSON, New York.

Wharf Angel

(Paramount)

Drama

Verging rather on the melodramatic and conveying a story time-honored on the screen, "Wharf Angel" is rather more effective from the standpoint of atmosphere than in plot strength, either basically or in development. The atmosphere lends to the exhibitor an opportunity for what should be effective lobby decoration.

For the marquee there are the names of Victor McLaglen, Preston Foster and Alison Skipworth, while Dorothy Dell, a newcomer, has the leading feminine role, and David Landau and Mischa Auer, two familiar players, are in minor supporting roles.

The selling campaign will have to concentrate for the most part on the story itself, since there is little opportunity for exploitation of any unusual sort inherent in, or suggested by the development. A hunted soapbox orator, who is befriended by a flippant girl in a wharf saloon, with their mutual love broken into by his necessary escape and the fact that a hulking stevedore also is in love with the girl, will be the theme around which the selling copy will revolve. Miss Dell may be worth attention on the part of the exhibitor for future appearances since she gives evidence, in a not particularly inspiring role, of ability as an actress.

Foster, whose box oratory in the San Francisco of years ago has led to a riot in which a policeman was killed and who found a gun in his hand, seeks refuge from the pursuing police in the sailors' saloon of Mother Bright, played well by Miss Skipworth. At the behest of McLaglen, hulking sailor in the place, she hides him and he finds himself in a room in which is Miss Dell, quickly established as a girl of the place. She is taken by his cultured speech and inoffensive manner, and saves him from the investigating arm of the law.

In order to make good his escape, without her knowledge he goes with McLaglen aboard ship for China as a stevedore. Before sailing, McLaglen has been much taken with Miss Dell, and Foster and she have promised each other the completion of their romance when he returns. Aboard ship Foster carries on his oratorical method of persuasion concerning the rights of man, and he and McLaglen become fast friends. They talk to each other of their "girls," though the pural is actually the same singular. They return to San Francisco, where the girl, still making desperate efforts to go straight, is awaiting her man. Hiding from the police, the couple need money badly, Miss Dell gets it from the hopeful McLaglen, and when the latter finds it out, he reveals Foster's hiding place to the police, believing Foster has stolen his girl. Then, torn with remorse, he uses the large reward he had received for Foster's capture to assure his acquittal.

The "only for adults" admonition holds true here, of course, with somewhere in the midweek suggested as the best playing position. Sell the story and the names to whatever extent they will be of value in the individual case. The title may be made attractive, as well.—AARONSON, New York.

A Modern Hero

(Warner)

Drama

Out of a story by Louis Bromfield has been woven a screen drama of a sort which must be highly familiar to the bulk of motion picture audiences, the story of a young man of the circus who lets nothing, including love, stand in the way of an all-consuming ambition in the direction of financial greatness. He achieves his goal, but by reason of that blind ambition, comes eventually to utter ruin.

About that brief resume of theme will have to be built the selling of the picture, combined with the starring appearance of the long popular Richard Barthelmess, and the chief support of Marjorie Rambeau, trouper who gives another of her outstanding performances as the mother of Barthelmess, and Jean Muir, who is being pushed toward stardom by Warner. It would appear that drama of the type that should appeal to women especially would be the selling point of attack. The circus atmosphere is merely in the opening sequences; there is comparatively little of that. Something of the romance connected with the development of the automobile industry is suggested, that being the manner in which Barthelmess strikes his wealth, but these are no more than background phases.

The women who come into his life, attracted by his wealth and his physical appearance, are dropped when they seem to stand in the way of his achievement. Only one, his first, for whom he has an unforgetting affection, has any real hold on him, chiefly because she was the mother of his son. Into the picture has been brought another of the illegitimate child developments which are at the moment meeting with exhibitor disapproval. However, it is a central factor of the story.

Barthelmess, a bareback rider, is informed by his almost perpetually inebriated performer-mother, who once knew fame as an animal trainer before she lost an arm, that his father was a European person of importance years before. He meets Jean Muir. She is to have a child, but will not marry Barthelmess, prefering the local boy who promises her a home and dependability. A circus mechanic has a mind full of automotive ideas and the two, against Miss Rambeau's wishes, open a bicycle shop. Success comes to them and Barthelmess forges ahead, into the automobile field, with Arthur Hohl, whose daughter he marries, then proceeds to forget. His son, William Janney, a young man, is promised by his father all the things Barthelmess lacked as a boy. The only thing he really cares for in the world is the boy. Success looms bright before him, and he diligently keeps his secret from Hohl.

Then suddenly the world collapses about his head. The boy, Janney, is killed at school in an accident to the car which Barthelmess had given him. The money he had invested in stock on the market proves to have taken wings, and with it the accumulated wealth of his automobile partnership with Hohl. Beaten, with nowhere else to turn, he finds his way back to an elderly, slatternly crystal gazer in a boarding house back room. There he returns to his mother, having lost everything he had and wanted.

I Like It That Way

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama with Music

There is a bit of tuneful music, and a song-and-dance number or two injected herein to liven proceedings, but the film is not a musical production. The music helps things along considerably, and is made an integral part of the story development.

Without outstanding names for marquee purposes, the film has nevertheless a cheerful, forthright manner of getting itself told with a goodly portion of humor and enough drama to sustain interest in the central plot structure.

The fact that the leading masculine role, taken effectively by Roger Pryor, is that of a rapid-fire, ever smiling super-salesman of insurance, should suggest an exploitation line to the exhibitor, while the theme phase which finds the girl working as a featured singer in a gambling hall-night club in order to support an incapacitated brother, offers an opportunity to lend color to the selling of the story itself. The music should not be overlooked, though too much stress thereon might provoke the erroneous impression that this is a musical comedy production.

The best name unquestionably will be that of Gloria Stuart, who combines an ability to sing a song with an attractive personality and performing ability. In addition are Marion Marsh, as Pryor's young sister, and several other familiar names, all in unimportant roles.

Pryor, the super-salesman, accidentally runs into Miss Stuart, and after an avid pursuit, during which he dons various guises in order to approach her, she consents to go out with him. He is a bit surprised when he finds her unlike other girls of his acquaintance, with her desire to attend symphonic concerts and her aversion to the forms of mutual admiration usual on the part of young people recently met. Pryor, then, ignores Shirley Grey, of whom he saw much before meeting Miss Stuart.

Pryor exercises a strong paternal and somewhat dictatorial influence over Miss Marsh, which she, naturally, resents. Working as a night telephone operator, she knows little, but wants to know much about things entertaining. She is drawn to the glamorous picture Miss Shea paints of her life as a night club hostess, and accepts a like position, without her mother or brother knowing. There she meets Miss Stuart, the headliner on the bill, who saves her from the attentions of Noel Madison, owner, by staging a scene in which she protests her love for Madison. Later, when Miss Stuart and Pryor are to be married, Miss Marsh meets the girl at Pryor's home and reveals her manner of occupation, which smashes the romance.

Finally Miss Marsh discovers and tells her brother the reason for Miss Stuart's action at the club, and Pryor goes to her apartment, to find there the blind brother for whom his fiancee has been working as a night club entertainer. The couple are reconciled.

It is fare for adults, has its moments of comedy, song and dance and a reasonably effective story of misunderstanding and complication.—AARONSON, New York.

The End of the World

(Harold Auten)

Drama

In an American adaptation, socalled, that extends chiefly to the superimposition on the screen of subtitle translations of the dialogue, this French picture, depicting with graphic reality the stuning consequences of the end of the world, should it occur by collision of a far distant comet with the planetary body which is the earth, presents a problem.

Militating against pleasure-going entertainment is the depiction of the stark terror into which the population of the world is thrown when the prediction of the leading scientist comes true.

To lend force and a semblance of reality to the possibility of such a dire happening as is pictured, this American adaptation is foreworded with a brief address by Dr. Clyde Fisher, Curator of Astronomy of the American Museum of Natural History in New York, in which the savant calls it an "extraordinary film," one provocative of "intent" thought. He makes the logical point that the earth had a beginning, and must surely have an end. He poses the question: "Will the earth grow cold, with life disappearing, or will the end be the result of a collision with some other heavenly body?"

The film's producers have utilized many tricks of motion picture technics in creating, in impressionistic fashion, a mood of initial disregard and scoffing laughter at the warning of the scientist, which turns with increasing speed to wild excitement, culminating in a fearful spectacle of a world gone mad with fear of death and destruction.

That is the film, and it may be used by the exhibitor as a special, different kind of showing, with the appeal to adults only, and those of the more sophisticated type.—AARONSON, New York.

Mediterranean Blues

Interesting Scenic

The use of color, through the Cinecolor process, definitely enhances the pictorial value and interest of this travelogue subject, one of the Romantic Journeys series, with Claude Fleming as the narrator. Algiers, Casablanca, and other noted towns and harbors which border the blue Mediterranean are beautifully pictured, while the explanatory dialogue discusses in intelligent manner what is seen. As a travel subject, this should be found interesting and of wide appeal.—Running time, 9 minutes.

What Not to Do in Bridge

(RKO Radio)

Entertaining

For the fans of the bridge table, and they must be legion, this number in the series "My Bridge Experiences," featuring the expert Ely Culbertson, should be distinctly of major interest, and one which should attract them to the theatre. For the non-bridge players the subject offers entertainment and amusement as the most common sort of bridge pests are pictured in the act. Culbertson explains a little of the psychology of studying the partner and opponent, and introduces his wife, also a noted bridge expert. —Running time, 15 minutes.

Pure Feud

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

The youngsters, and the adults as well, should be entertained by this Edgar Bergen ventriloquist act, in which Edgar, visiting a southern home in the mountains for his health, runs straight into a feud between the Jenkinses and the Murphys. With his dummy in this case taking the guise of a local boy, Bergen and "he" carry on an entertaining conversation anent the feud. Time is called for dinner, after which the local residents go back to "work" with a bang. Bergen is clever.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Big Bad Wolf

(United Artists)

Splendid

Here is Walt Disney's sequel to "The Three Little Pigs," which has passed into something very like screen immortality. And the sequel is the equal of the original, with the addition of Little Red Riding Hood, herself immortal. In color, in subject matter, in development, it emerges as a treat for youngsters and oldsters, a brilliant job of animated motion picture making. This time, with the Disney variations, the story of Little Red Riding Hood and the Big Bad Wolf is reenacted, with the brick-house oldest pig coming to the rescue of the little heroine. Enormously clever is the shot of the wolf playing the part of grandma. The music, again, has a delightful lilt, with the "Whose Afraid" number again employed, and the other tuneful bits wholly in keeping with the production value of the rest of the subject. Give it top billing. It is worth it.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Undieworld

(Radio)

Comedy

The introduction of a new comedian, Grady Sutton, is the chief point of interest in this subject. He is, actually, responsible for the laughs that crop up rather frequently in this subject. Sutton, violin teacher, is mistaken for a gangster, his violin case being assumed to carry a machine gun, by June Brewster in particular. Big Boy Williams employs Sutton to play the John Alden for him with Miss Brewster. In a night club, Sutton is again mistaken for a gangster and cleans up the mob in a rough and tumble.—Running time, 21 minutes.

"AN INSTITUTION AS GREAT AS THE INDUSTRY IT SERVES"

THE PRINTS THAT BUILT LEADERSHIP

IT is not by chance that Consolidated is recognized as the world's most important producer of film prints. The quality of "Certified Prints" has steadily built up this prestige over a period of twenty-one years. As the art of motion picture production developed, and finer prints were needed, Consolidated established film printing on a scientific basis to keep pace.

Out of our research laboratories have come original technical processes that unfailingly reproduce every action and sound in the original negative. We have designed and built our own machines that have changed film printing from a haphazard art to an exact science.

And Consolidated continues to pioneer. At Consolidated Park new and better methods of manufacture are ceaselessly being sought to improve the quality of "Certified Prints."

SAFEGUARD YOUR INVESTMENT

Cut-price prints mean cut-price quality—inferior materials carelessly processed on obsolete equipment—poor screen results.

It doesn't pay to jeopardize your entire investment for the few pennies saved on cut-price prints. Make sure of good results. Send your productions to the screen on "Certified Prints." They're made by science to provide the finest possible expression of the sound and action in your negative. Twenty-one years' experience and a loyal devotion to the highest ideals of service are always evident in every frame of "Certified Prints."

Use Air Express for Films, Equipment, Parts

THE WORLD'S FASTEST multimotored Passenger-Express Service

Twenty-four hours a day, United Air Lines Air Express is helping producers and exhibitors cut down costly delays in shipping. Film, exciter lamps, props, everything the industry needs is being delivered almost as fast as if the source of supply were across the street.

The cost is a third of the rates three years ago—and shipments travel 50 miles an hour faster. This means delivery overnight from 2,000 miles away—with loss of only half a business day from coast to coast. This established, dependable service links 85 principal cities over the country's leading air routes—becomes nation-wide through fast, coordinated rail schedules to 23,000 other Railway Express Agency points in North America.

Pick-up and delivery service without extra charge in principal cities. Rates include liability up to $50.00 on shipments of 100 lbs. or less. Single bill of lading covers both air and air-rail shipments. Packages may be sent C.O.D., collect or prepaid.

A phone call is all that's needed to put the world's fastest shipping service on the job for your business. Call your own Railway Express Agent or the nearest United Air Lines office for rates and schedules. Ask for free booklet, "How to Send Packages by Air Express."

Typical speeds and rates for packages flown on United Air Lines multimotored passenger-express planes: Los Angeles - New York . . . 20¾ hrs., costs $5.50 (for 5 lbs.); San Francisco - Chicago . . . 13½ hrs.—$4.71; Chicago - New York or Philadelphia . . . 5 hrs.—$2.14.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Glenwood, Minn., is a right smart town located on the banks of a beautiful lake that is about a mile wide by six or seven miles long and it has a worldwide reputation as a fishing resort. The main trouble with the town is that the authorities are a little slack in their watchful duties, for they let A. J. Longaker slip in there three or four years ago and acquire possession of their popular playhouse, which he has been operating ever since.

A. J. has just sent us a postcard with a picture of 20 black bass that we judge would weigh around four pounds each, and he tells us that the doctor says that if we will eat plenty of fish it will reduce our blood pressure. He winds up by saying, "If you will come up I will catch you all the fish you can eat."

Did you catch that last remark? He says "I'll catch you," just as though we would allow any one to catch fish for us. That remark makes us "regusted." The fact is that our greatest difficulty is in finding enough people to whom we can give our fish to handle the surplus.

We called on H. J. last summer and we found him out in the back yard on the bank of the lake playing mumblepeg and with a picture of "Arsenic Annie" sitting in front of him and he was singing—

I will love you in the summer
Just the same as in the fall.

We hope to get back up there again, for Mrs. Longaker is the champion fish frier of Minnesota, but we wouldn't want to say that H. J. is the biggest fish liar in the state, but we have our opinion, which we are not voicing.

Tough on Bullhead Fishing

You may have heard of the terrible flood they had at Johnstown, Pa., several years ago, and what a terrific amount of damage it did. Well, that's a common thing at Johnstown, and one of the worst features of those floods is that it spoils bullhead fishing for several days because of the high water. Well, a letter comes from down there signed by Robert W. Hornick, manager of the Strand Theatre, and is written on the stationery of the Altoona Publix Theatres, which leads us to the conclusion that they also have a theatre at Altoona.

You may recall also that Altoona was the place where Mr. and Mrs. Bliss, sacred song writers, were on the train that went through a bridge and killed both of them, together with several other people. We mention these incidents simply to prove to you that we've got a pretty good memory.

Mr. Hornick commences his letters like this: "I have been a reader of your Column for quite some time, and I find it very, very interesting. It has a lot of common sense, especially in your discussion of stars and pictures. I also find it very helpful."

Just listen to that boy talk. He says, "It has a lot of common sense." That's the first time any one has ever accused us publicly of having any sense. We were sitting on the sofa once with a girl and she said that she thought we were a pretty sensible chap and we got all swelled up, but we went back the next night to call on her and found her sitting on a bartender's lap.

Mr. Hornick tells us that if the producers will give him good, wholesome, clean comedies he can do business, and that this is the opinion of all the theatremen around him. Not only comedies, but any pictures that are clean. Oh, yeah, Mr. Hornick. We have hammered on that for the past nine years and it hasn't reached Hollywood yet. The mail travels slow out there. a lot slower than some of the females. Thanks very much for your letter, Mr. Hornick, it was indeed inspiring, and we hope you will never have any more floods or bridge disasters back there.

We hear a lot of talk nowadays about Communism in high places and expressions of fear that the government will be overthrown. All of which we regard as a lot of hooey and jingoism. Our government was founded upon the rock of "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness," and all Hades can't shake us from that foundation.

The Other Side

"Queen Christina," with Greta Garbo, John Gilbert and Lewis Stone, is a picture that will be well received by a large majority, but there are a few who will object to it because of the story, while others will not be enthusiastic over it on account of the court scenes and costumes. As we saw it, it is a fine picture.

There are two objections, however, that might be raised to it. Miss Garbo's pronunciation of the English lauguage in many instances is not of the best and will not be satisfying to many listeners. The one who wrote the script did an excellent job until he came to the closing scenes of the picture, and here many will say that he fell down and ran in scenes that should have had no part in the story. They will claim that the picture did not finish right.

But few, if any, critics understand just what Hollywood is up against in trying to make pictures that are beyond criticism. The one who would have been able to make perfect pictures. those that were beyond criticism, died trying to swallow the nipple on the bottle while his mother was attending a quilting party. If those of us who criticize pictures should try to make them, what a mess of it we'd make.

Radio Competition

One man, who stands pretty well up to the top of this industry, says that if stars will broadcast the songs that are used in their pictures it will cause the public to want to see the pictures.

That statement would be important if true, but the trouble is that the most of the songs in pictures and on the radio we hear nowadays "will cause" a man to want to go fishing. If they want to kill the picture business let them put their stars to broadcasting in competition with their own pictures and see how long it will take to do it. When people stay at home to listen to a broadcast program they are not leaving anything at the box offices of the theatres, but then, maybe we don't know anything about it, although we have our opinion.

If you exhibitors have people in your audiences who are continually saying that pictures are no better today than they were ten or fifteen years ago, don't argue with them, but send to the exchange and get six or seven reels of pictures made back in those days and show them for their education. Our experience in the business (which dates back about twenty years) proves to us that there is no business in the world that has made such strides toward perfection as the motion picture business, and they haven't reached perfection yet.

A farmer in our county recently shipped two pigs to market, and when he got a statement from the commission firm, after deducting the expense, it showed that the farmer owed the firm a balance of thirty-five cents to cover all charges. We can't figure out whether somebody stole something in the transaction or the farmer is just a plain sucker. The government processed hogs to help the farmer. Help, help!

To Start New Cantor Film

Eddie Cantor leaves New York for Hollywood this week to begin work on his annual screen musical for Samuel Goldwyn, which will be a United Artists release. The new film is temporarily titled "The Treasure Hunt." Ethel Merman will have the feminine lead and Ann Sothern will be prominently cast.

Wilde Assists Johnson at Fox

Gordon Wilde, Fox art director, has been named assistant to Julian Johnson, head of the story department at the studio. After several months experience in the story division, Mr. Wilde is expected to take over a directorial assignment.

Vitaphone Signs Errol

Leon Errol, stage and screen comedian, has been signed by Vitaphone to star in two two-reel Technicolor musical short subjects to be made at the Coast studio. Either Roy Mack or Ralph Staub will direct.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

CALIFORNIA TRAIL: Buck Jones—An exceptionally good action picture and with just a little extra advertising should do plenty of business. If you can get them in, this picture will satisfy. A little old but much better than most of the new westerns. Running time, seven reels. Played Apr. 13-14.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—If your farmer patrons haven't been coming to your show, book this one and let them know you are playing it. It will please them and every one who comes.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Rural and coal mine patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—Not so hot. A few musical numbers and a mediocre story.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Loretta Young, Spencer Tracy—Good program picture. Not worth the price though. But they called it a special, so that's my bad luck.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young—This picture does not compare with "Lady For a Day." However, it is a very sweet story, but why such dark photography. This was probably the biggest fault found with it. Tracy and Young do very well with their parts and Glenda Farrell improves in each picture in which she appears. Pleased about 80 per cent. Business poor. Played Mar. 27-28.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Loretta Young, Spencer Tracy—I figured big business on this one, but it flopped. It's a deep, moving tale of vagabond Spencer Tracy and his redemption by Loretta Young's love. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Mar. 28-29.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—A good program picture with Bellamy giving an excellent performance. Played bargain night to average business. Running time, 68 miuutes. Played Apr. 3.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralpb Bellamy—A well done picture to average business. Columbia seems to understand how to cast all parts. I sure wish they understood the knack of making pictures that draw. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 3-4.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Rural patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell—One swell picture, old enough, but it's entertainment. The censor board don't bave to whittle on it, and any man can take his family to see it. This was a return engagement, and I am not sorry. A mighty good picture for football season. Trade one of the new punks for it, you won't be sorry. Running time, eight reels. Played Apr. 13-14.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—Here is an out of the ordinary thrill and adventure drama. A little more production value and it could easily take its place with the real big ones, but as it is, it is plenty good enough. Drawing power above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

First Division

ROAD TO RUIN: Helen Foster—This is another picture of the sex type showing the dangers in the path of the young girls. This is much better than most shows of this type and went over good here. However, the story is very sad, but will act as a warning to the young girls and their parents in any community. We played this on a midnight show and had a very good business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

First National

DARK HAZARD: Edward G. Robinson—Too much crudeness or whatever you would call it. If a picture can't be high class it should at least be clean. The business isn't helped by lowbrow cracks. I've had plenty of complaints on dirty stuff and if it continues I'll look to different product. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Mar. 22-23.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Rural patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—A very good picture from First National, which seemed to please nearly one hundred per cent. Joe E. Brown very good. Played Apr. 3-4.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre Dante, Va. General patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis—One of the greatest pictures we ever played. A good story, lots of comedy, wonderful settings, too big for me to comment on. Buy it and play it. They will all like it. We did a poor business on the picture, but we do on all of them nowadays. Every one said it was the greatest picture they ever saw. Played Apr. 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis—Good show but the fashion title kept some business away. It didn't click here, but we didn't get much of a break in weather. Had a good tieup with merchants, witb a full page and five windows.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FEMALE: Ruth Chatterton—Very fine acting done by Ruth Chatterton in this one. Also a fine picture. Played it one day and did good business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Apr. 5.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—A wonderful picture with a very unhappy ending. Ruth Chatterton is superb, but couldn't the ending be handled with a little more happiness? Played Apr. 6-7.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Pleasing but not quite up to expectations.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis—Another good fine picture from Kay Francis. Did good two day business on this one. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Excellent. Picture received more favorable comments than any picture played during the month. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Mar. 30.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—Did very good on this one. Barthelmess is an educated Indian and returns to his reservation from the World's Fair when his father becomes ill. Ann Dvorak helps squaring matters with crooked government agents. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Mar. 23-24.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—If you can get them in to see this, it should please, for it's a big story, well made, with fine work by Muni and all the cast. Played Apr. 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage

Fox

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—Exhibitors should thank the present management of Fox for splendid, clean pictures like "Carolina" and "David Harum." They come like a tonic. After ten pictures in which neurotic decay is portrayed, after senseless tragedies in which all the cast die hut the cameraman, these pictures revive dving trade. Thanks, Fox.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante, Cliff Edwards, George White—A picture that is better than the stage shows of the same name. It is a little rough in places but as the people who come expect it there will be no objections. The musical numbers are excellent, and Rudy Vallee certainly makes a hit with his singing. He is far ahead of some of these other music makers. Alice Fay scored a triumph in her initial appearance on the screen here and she should prove a drawing card in her next picture. Jimmy Durante gives his funniest performance and Cliff Edwards stays right with him. This pair are the best comedians White ever had in one of his shows. George White is not bad as an actor and played his part well. Some very catchy tunes and musical numbers make this first class entertainment. A group of kiddies are very, very good in their brief bit of an abbreviated "Nasty Man" number. Pleased everyone and proved good box office.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster—A much better picture than most exhibitors have given credit. Clara Bow is just as good as she was some time ago, and all she needs is a real break, which would put her in the star class. This picture is not a record breaking attraction, but is plenty good at that.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Did fair, nothing to get excited about. Back to the ranch for Clara, I guess.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE! Lilian Harvey—Something out of the ordinary tbat was very well liked by the few who came to see it. Had a great many favorable comments on it and if there was any money in circulation, the picture undoubtedly would have built up well to the last night. The title militates against the picture, but if you step out and boost it, you need bave no fear of a comeback. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Mar. 29.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Sask. General patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—If you have a movie house that caters to the family trade, by all means play this. It has comedy and interest. Played Apr. 4-5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy—Fair gangster picture, the kidnaping racket.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—A type of story well adapted to Rogers' homespun philosophies. Gives him a great chance to show his ready wit and he does it admirably. Naive picture, lots of comedy, but we played it during Lent and not do so good. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Mar. 23-24.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—Used this as a school benefit. It satisfied tbe majority. Nice shots of scenery. Good comedy by Rogers. Worth playing in any small town. We still say that Fox has the best pictures for our crowd and we are using product from five companies. Played Apr. 11-12.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey—The ladies like Harvey, but the men didn't seem to care so much. But what's the difference what the men like, it's tbe women that bring the men along with them.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—Very well attended by the young peple. The foreign accent does not go over so good at our village. Well worth playing. Box-office says OK. Nice music. Played Apr. 7-8.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—A nice musical comedy with an Austrian background, with the comic opera king and court room scenes. But they do not give either Harvey or Boles enough chance to show off their talents to advantage. Only fair business resulted. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Mar. 28-29.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman—Slow moving heavy drama that seemed to please those who came. Well acted picture but flopped after the first night. Not the kind that will loosen up the nickels these days. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Apr. 5-6-7—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Sask. General patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—Not for small towns because it's too heavy. Not many favorable comments and if the code will let you cancel it, scratch it off the list.

Played Apr. 5.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—An extraordinary western with plenty of action, a well told story and clean as it can be. It is about as good as anything Fox has delivered this season. Unusually beautiful scenery. Played Mar. 30-31.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Liberty

RAINBOW RANCH: Rex Bell—A very satisfactory western of which all of Liberty's have been. "West of the Divide," "Trailin' North," "The Fugitive" and "Young Blood" all have been very good pictures and seemed to please. Played Mar. 29.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes—Good acting but very slow action. Will not satisfy those looking for pep or comedy.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—Blah! Blah! Blah! and a couple of more Blahs. The noisiest thing we have ever played next to "What, No Beer." Harlow and Tracy in a series of arguments that lack even fair entertainment. Played Mar. 29-30.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—A great show. One of those surprise program pictures that is not ballyhooed but comes to you as just another picture and you receive a most pleasant surprise. Frank Morgan and Alice Brady are great. Played Mar. 16-17.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Ramon Navarro, Jeannette McDonald, Charles Butterworth, Frank Morgan—A gorgeous production that has everything. The music is good and as in all Metro product the technical elements are perfect. Butterworth was the hit of the show here. Pleased everyone and drew well at the box-office.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Ramon Novarro, Jeanette MacDonald—And still another good show from Metro. This is a romantic light opera and should appeal to all classes of patrons. It is good clean entertainment for the entire family. The music is beautiful, the acting splendid, the settings superb and the direction perfect. Need I say more? You must see it to appreciate it. We played this two days to a very good business and pleased about 90 per cent. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 16-17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This picture is a revelation. The average motion picture fan did not realize until now the many charms and exceptional ability of Crawford. She certainly boosts her stock 100 per cent and the patrons were so delighted with this picture that they told others, for the second night was better than the first. Don't pass this up. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Apr. 2-3.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—Here is a good drawing card. We used the newspapers on this and had exceptionally good business. The theme and locale are different and the people get to see something besides Hollywood. It seems the wife trading episode is one of the big topics for discussion. Had many here who we hadn't seen for a long, long time. We're running it again. Running time, 12 reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—So different it is a real treat to see a picture of this kind. My patrons thought it fine some came to see it the second time. Running time, 117 minutes. Played Apr. 15-16.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FUGITIVE LOVERS: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—Here is another good Metro picture that is different in story from any other picture ever played here. Practically the entire picture is taken on board a transcontinental bus bound for Los Angeles. Ted Healy furnishes the comedy and there is plenty of entertainment and a good love story that you will have to see to appreciate. We played this only one day to a very good business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies, Bing Crosby—This seemed to be what the cash customers liked. It drew above average and seemed to please. This gives a good idea as to what the people like, pleasant, cheerful, happy ending entertainment. The customers can take away with them some pleasant memories.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Jimmy Durante, Madge Evans—Plenty of action in this one. It's very good. It also has a good plot. Business was just average on account of the picture being too old. Running time, 93 minutes. Played Apr. 2-3.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART: Marie Dressler, John Barrymore—This would have done better if they had left the original title, "Christopher Bean," and might have appealed more through the book. As it was it was a box-office flop. Such a sweet picture and well acted, but it just didn't click here. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Mar. 26-27.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Every one liked this picture, and patronage increased during the engagement. A semi-gangster type of story and a good one. Be sure and play it.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Rural and coal mine patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert, Lewis Stone—Garbo at her best. She gets excellent support from the rest of the cast. The picture drew fairly well here and was well liked. It was appreciated by my audiences, as being college people, instructors and students, they like historical pictures. The settings, photography and sound are perfect.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—A Garbo picture which could have been a splendid one by changing an unclean love affair into a clean one and giving it a happier ending, even if it deviated from historical facts perhaps. The only logical thing about it was the ending, which shows that you cannot violate the moral laws and not pay up for it. This story could have been easily cleaned up as the dirt was just dragged in. Public opinion in my territory is getting more and more insistent that pictures be morally improved. I believe a few directors are beginning to take heed, if not of the public's protests, at least the sound of shekels in the box-offices when clean pictures are shown such as "Little Women" and "It Happened One Night." Let's hope for more like them. Ran Christina two days just following Lent, with fine weather, and barely split even. Rather heavy for small town patronage.—H. H. Ramsdell, Lyric Theatre, Gaithersburg, Md. General patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable—This one did average business although there is nothing too good about it. It will do for one day play. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Mar. 26-27.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery, Herbert Marshall—Magnificent entertainment. Norma Shearer at her best in a story that is ideally suited for her. Robert Montgomery gives one of his most enjoyable performances. He is gaining rapidly in popularity and certainly pleases here in everything. The Literary Digest critic stated in his review that the time was wasted in making this picture. Everyone here thought it was marvelous and I certainly have a critical patronage. These socalled critics are doing the exhibitors and producers quite a bit of harm. It seems that some of them have personal grudges against the producers. They are certainly keeping many people away from shows that they would enjoy much more than the ones that are recommended by some of the critics.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—The Barrymores are fine actors but they now appear in all pictures made by all producers. They have been killed as draft stars and are getting on the public's nerves. I expect to see John Barrymore cast as "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and Lionel Barrymore play the title role of "Smoky" yet. Below average business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Monogram

FIGHTING CHAMP: Bob Steele—A very good western. The boxing sequence looked very real. All of Monogram's westerns are very good and seem to please. Played Apr. 12.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

FIGHTING TEXANS: Rex Bell—A good western, with plenty of action. Running time, six reels. Played Apr. 6-7.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—Here is another good western picture to the credit of Wayne and Monogram. They certainly are putting out good shows this year and they are going good. This one has plenty of action, thrills, fighting and everything that a western should. A few more like this for Wayne and he will be leading the western stars. Here's hoping he will. Played one day (Saturday) to a good business. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Apr. 14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne, Virginia Faire—A good western story and well acted. None of them has a thing on this man in westerns. He can act, fight, ride and that is about all any of them can do. The girls say he is easy to look at, and that is something.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—I saw this during its first run. The attendance at the first run was very big capacity audiences and big crowds waiting for second matinee shows. That was between Christmas and New Year. I looked for a good attendance when it came my turn to show it, but to me it turned out a prize flop. We did not even have our usual average of children, and adults were way below average, so I guess they do not want this kind in a working class neighborhood.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighhorhood patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Very fine picture from every viewpoint, although there will be a few who will not like the rather unhappy ending but as it can hardly end any other way, it was not objected to here. There is some swell dancing. Sally Rand gives her fan dance in a beautiful manner and it was certainly not thought risque by my patrons. Raft is a great dancer and gives a good all-around performance. Director Wesley Ruggles deserves quite a bit of credit for this grand entertainment.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—A nice Easter picture for the art lovers but no box-office attraction. Played Apr. 1-2.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Had a big turnout for this, and seemed to please all. Had an extra good night the second night.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

FOUR FRIGHTENED PEOPLE: Claudette Colbert, William Gargan—Story laid in South Sea Island jungle. Our patrons seemed to enjoy this. Interesting, and work of stars good. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIS DOUBLE LIFE: Lillian Gish, Roland Young—Perfect acting by these stars in a story of wistful whimsicality, but I can't cash wistful whimsicality at the box-office. Played Apr. 8-9.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—A sweet kid picture. Played to best midweek business for a long time. Held up well second night. Running time, eight reels.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Mae West—We traded one of the new washouts for this, because of the argument betwcen Mae and George on her new picture. It was a good picture and pleased, generally. Running time, eight reels. Played Apr. 6-7.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Pretty good musical but could be improved. Has some snappy tunes that have been heard over the radio so could be used to plug this picture in advance. Lent played havoc with us, only fair business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Mar. 30-31.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Well liked, though not the type of offering most Saturday night audiences look for. Business very good and picture brought in many midweek type persons. Played Apr. 7.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott—A good Saturday bill. Did fair business here. Played Mar. 30-31.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Pleased most of audience, though some think less of westerns than in the past. Business as usual. Played Mar. 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Principal

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—We have run seven episodes of this serial and it is a good one. A very good picture and pleases the western fans. It is a good drawing card.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—Have run two chapters of this so far, and it promises to pick up right along. Entertaining. Lots of action.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—A well made and entertaining picture. Fair business for these times. Played Apr. 6-7.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patrouage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—A poor small town picture. What a flop for me. Why can't they make pictures without someone having a baby. Ann had them all beaten, she had two. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Apr. 13-14.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—A very good musical comedy. Business above average on this picture. By all means play it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7-8-9.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio—A good musical but did a terrible nose dive here. I guess my patrons are fed up on these singing, dancing pictures. Running time, twelve reels. Played Apr. 8-9-10-11.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—This is a dandy musical, not as stupendous as "Footlight Parade" and "Gold Diggers," but produced on another slant than backstage stuff. Your patrons will talk about the "Carioca," a feature dance number, for months after you play the picture. It is a hot number. Played Mar. 22-23-24.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Ginger Rogers—Not the best musical of the year but very good. You can't afford to pass it up. Pleased all who saw it. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—Played this one Easter Sunday to nice business. Our patrons like Wheeler and Woolsey. Good entertainment. Running time, 70 minutes.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

INDIA SPEAKS: Native Cast—If you want an interesting picture of India this one has them all beaten. Very interesting. Played on double bill all liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Nothing I can say will add or detract from the wonderful box-office draw of this picture. Personally, and as a movie fan who takes his screen entertainment as it comes from the talking screen and not from what other people say, I would say that this picture is tiresome and boring, though women and the folks who have read the book will say it is wonderful. Play it and cash in. Played Mar. 8-9.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Mighty good. Drew well even after all the Sunday towns around me had played it and one key town had returned it. We really expected more business on it and were entitled to it. Played Apr. 1-2-3-4.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LONG LOST FATHER: John Barrymore—This one was not so bad, our patrons liked it. Running time, 65 minutes.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer, Elissa Landi—Story about half Arctic locale and half London society. Our Friday and Saturday patrons found this photoplay interesting and were pleased. Running time, 92 minutes. Played Apr. 13-14.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding, Nils Asther—A woman's picture. Had a number of walk-outs. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Mar. 28-29.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding, Nils Asther—Pleasing romantic drama of the beauty surgeon, who starts searching for romance and adventure. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Apr. 15-16.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—Don't hit this one too hard, as it is merely a picture that will give the kiddies a nightmare and adults a dull evening's entertainment. Not to be compared with "King Kong." Played Mar. 5-6.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—This one was terrible. I was afraid they would walk out on me. One fellow asked me, "When are you going to have the grandson of Kong?" Running time, 70 minutes.—Robert Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown—You and your patrons will like this show. Play it after "Little Women." A down-to-earth story, and an interesting one, even to hard-boiled coal miners. Played Mar. 19-20.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

State Rights

EN GLAD GUT: Norwegian—If I could book a Norwegian talking picture once every six weeks I could keep the big bad wolf from the door. Scandinavians for miles came to see it. Filmed in the beautiful valley of Gudsbrandalen, Norway, with a cast of native players, it proved to be a great show for those people who came from that country and understand Norwegian. Released by Elliott Film Co., 1111 First Ave. North, Minneapolis, Minn. Played Apr. 4-5.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Rural and coal mine patronage.

United Artists

CATHERINE THE GREAT: Elizabeth Bergner, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Beautiful picture. The most elaborate of the historical dramas and very entertaining. Bergner is a little hard to understand in places but she is a great actress. Fairbanks gives his best performance. College boys did not care particularly for it but others were pleased. Business was disappointing.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—Played this one awfully late, and found the print none too good as the recording seemed to be partly washed out. However, it is a great show and proved to be a good drawing card. If you haven't played it, get it and ask for a good print. It is a dandy picture.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie, Constance Cummings—A fast, snappy picture that certainly entertained everyone. Plenty of comedy and thrills.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

NANA: Anna Sten, Lionel Atwill, Phillips Holmes—Anna Sten is certainly beautiful. The story has been seen on the screen before but the great acting and beautiful photography and settings help put it over. It pleased only a few who saw it. Believe Sten will be liked more when she gets a better story. Drew only fair.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Stuart Erwin—Plenty of action and comedy in this prizefight story. Drew well here and pleased everyone.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—A lively bunch of nonsense. Played Apr. 3-4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—Second night better than first, due entirely to the merit of the picture. Made friends by playing this one but made very little dough. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Mar. 27-28.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Rural patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—Beautiful story, and stars did great work. Pleased, but drew no extra business, younger element preferring something warmer, very likely. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe, Shirley Grey—This is only fair entertainment of the mystery drama type. Practically the entire picture is taken on board a train bound for Bombay, India. The two murders in the show are never cleared up to the satisfaction of the audience. This is weak in star names and also story value but will get by on one day showing. We played this only one day to only fair business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Paul Lukas, Elissa Landi—Not so hot for a little burg in the sticks like ours. Not of interest to the kids. Might go good in a big town. Played Apr. 4-5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore, Bebe Daniels—Considered by practically entire audience as one of the finest productions screened. Many influenced by Barrymore name, of course, but aside from that, the performance was topnotch. If we had played this a second night, undoubtedly would have pulled bigger audience than for the first night. Played Apr. 14.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, Alice White—Bad weather decreased number of patrons, but picture pleased 90 per cent. Played Mar. 31.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HORSE PLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine—Just another comedy that is far from being a hit. The best thing in the picture is the horse. It is lively and entertaining with plenty of comedy and a bit of romance, but will not draw any business in the small towns. Personally, I did not like the picture and would recommend that you play this one on bargain day. It is a western but will be good family entertainment. Business poor. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Apr. 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—Just a fair program picture. Running time, 67 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—A very good picture of the semi-musical type with several good song numbers. Pryor, in the role of a high powered salesman, is a pleasant diversion from the pretty boy type of leading man. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 4-5.—Cle Bratton, Stella Theatre, Council Grove, Kan. General patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—This is a box-office natural. We broke records with this picture. The first night we had the house sold out before we started and held them out until the second show and filled it again. The second night came up to expectation, too. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Apr. 4-5.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—This is a wonderful picture that words cannot express. It is a typical John Boles' story and is very sad at the end. Too bad that such a great actor should always play these parts. My patrons would like to see him get a break once and I would also. Miss Sullavan is gorgeous and puts in some great acting. This is great entertainment and we played two days to only fair business. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Apr. 9-10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—The audience cried and wept. Sad, but beautiful. Wonderful direction. Was disappointed on box office end, however. Running time, 105 minutes. Played April 1-2-3.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—Another football yarn that has a very exciting finish, which will suit your teen age patrons. Should go over in any college town. Business just fair. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Mar. 23-24.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—This is a very good western. The horse fights stole the picture. Also some very good music and songs. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Mar. 21-22.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall—This is a special, the best western ever made. Like all Maynard pictures, clean with plenty of action and thrills. Great for children and will please the adults also. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Apr. 4.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Warner

EASY TO LOVE: Adolphe Menjou, Genevieve Tobin—Just a story of two couples. One chisels and the other almost does. Not very elevating to the younger folks.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

EASY TO LOVE: Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor, Genevieve Tobin—This is a very good comedy romance that will please all of your patrons and they will leave your theatre laughing, and that is what theatres are for, isn't it. This is a story of lovers and mostly adult entertainment. Included in the excellent supporting cast are Edward Everett Horton, Patricia Ellis and Guy Kibbee. We played this one day to good business and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Apr. 13.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—Excellent drama well done. Pleased all. Better than average at box-office despite the fact that we played it too early. Story is good, drama not too heavy, but strong enough to hold interest throughout. Good ending. Played two-reel Vitaphone subject, "Let's Play Postoffice," with it, which provided well balanced program. The short subject is one of the best ever to go on our screen. Played Apr. 11-12.—Grady Cook, Joy Theatre, Pontotoc, Miss. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—This entertaining musical spectacle ran into a late snowstorm here and took a bad nosedive. Played Mar. 27-28.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon—Nice show by a fine performer. Business average. Warners must use Glenda Farrell in every picture. Surely, they must have some others. She is plenty good, but you can't work 'em to death. Some crudeness in every picture. Small town patronage doesn't go for it. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Rural patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—One of the best newspaper stories ever put in a motion picture. It's good from start to finish. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Mar. 30-31.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—An excellent newspaper story with Muni turning in another splendid performance. Glenda Farrell and Ned Sparks supply most of the comedy. Played Sunday and Monday to better than average business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 1-2.—Cle Bratton, Stella Theatre, Council Grove, Kan. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—A swell little comedy with plenty of action. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 11.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney—Cagney pleases here, and "Jimmy the Gent" was no exception. Drew average. This is the only Warner in a long time that hasn't had at least four or five off-color cracks. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Apr. 5-6.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Rural patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Another top notch picture from Warner. A spicy, fast moving comedy that is bound to please any audience. Warner-First National cannot be praised too highly for their excellent product this season. Too bad they can't adopt and revise Buick's slogan to read: "When better pictures are made Warner-First National will make them." Running time, 67 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9.—Cle Bratton, Stella Theatre, Council Grove, Kan. General patronage.

LADY KILLER: James Cagney—One of the best shows we have run for a long time. Not a special, but a good programmer, good for any night in the week. Step on it. Played Mar. 26-27.—L. E. Mahoney, New Columbus Theatre, Columbus, N. D. Coal mining and rural patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ENTERTAINER, THE: Will Mahoney—This is a very good comedy, the best that Columbia has made in some time. Mahoney offers good entertainment and will please all classes of patrons. Plenty of laughs, some good tap dancing and some music. Columbia needs more like this and I hope they get them. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OUT OF ETHER: Krazy Kat Kartoons—This is one of the best Krazy Kat cartoons I've ever played. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

UM-PA: Jack Osterman—This is one of the few Columbia good comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

Educational

BIG MEOW, THE: Tom Howard Comedies—The idea is good but as a comedy it's just footage.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FREEZE OUT, THE: Moran and Mack—Fair.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIMME MY QUARTERBACK—Baby Burlesks—The babies stage a football game and it is pretty good.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLLAND DAYS: Terry-Toons—Just another cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LAST STRAW, THE: Terry-Toons —Another cartoon filler. Running time, one reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MR. ADAM: Ernest Truex—Not so hot as a producer of laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RIP VAN WINKLE: Terry-Toons—Another cartoon that just fills a space on the program.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THREE BEARS, THE: Terry-Toons—A good cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

ANIAKCHAK: Father Hubbard—Three reels of very entertaining shots of volcanic craters in Alaska. Sat through it twice and could see it again.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

FILMING THE FASHIONS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—The ladies will be interested and the men will look twice at this. Old, but very good.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FILMING THE FASHIONS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—A good short.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOMENT OF MADNESS, A: Movie Tintype Series—A Tintype that might get a laugh.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SCOURING THE SEVEN SEAS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—These Cameraman Adventures are very good shorts, have plenty of variety and action. Running time, one reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MGM

BARGAIN OF THE CENTURY: Todd-Kelly—Fair.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BUS: Todd-Kelly—Not up to the standard of Pitts and Todd comedies. Kelly will have to show up better than she did in this one if she expects to draw any at the box office. Running time, 17 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—One of the best Our Gang Comedies we have had the pleasure of showing. Spanky is the whole show and is he good? A laugh a minute. Running time, 17 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Musical Revue—A fine two-reel comedy. Well done. Running time, 19 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

BRITISH GUIANA: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—A very interesting and educational one-reeler showing scenes in the beautiful country of British Guiana. The giant waterfalls are beautiful and many times higher than any other waterfalls yet discovered. Good entertainment and very interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CRACKED ICEMAN, LUNCHEON AT TWELVE: Charley Chase—Two mighty good comedies by Charley Chase and a good cast with him. Funny and not silly.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—As good as any they have made to date. They roared their heads off at it. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—One of the funniest comedies that we have run in a long, long time: If the producers could just dig up that old recipe for laughs in comedies, we could send them home from our show in a much better frame of mind. Running time, two reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy—This was certainly a surprise. Pleased my western loving country folks. Yet, quite a surprise.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

FINE FEATHERS: Oddities—A fine colored educational novelty, explained by friend Smith in his inimitable way. Running time, nine minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Actions of the kids are O. K., but we find them hard to hear or perhaps I should say difficult to understand.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charley Chase—You can't beat this one. Not so many laughs, but very clever and clean. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HELLO, POP!: Ted Healy—Color and music are good. The dancing is beautiful. The comedy is punk.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN THE WRONG: Charley Chase—Well liked by our crowd. April 4-5.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

PLAY BALL: Willie Whopper—Good cartoon and that's unusual.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHOW BUSINESS: Todd-Kelly—Just a fair comedy, but nothing out of the ordinary. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Taxi Boys—Good enough to get by.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THROTTLE PUSHERS: Sport Champions—By all means play this, as it's something different. Mighty good shots at racing drivers and the grind on the track.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWIN SCREWS: All-Star Series—I heard a few laugh once or twice. Must have been at the efforts of some one.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD POSES: Our Gang—This is a very good Our Gang Comedy on the new contract and seems much better than the last ones. They improve every year and personally I wish them continued success. They offer good, clean entertainment and most of my patrons like them. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

GOLD NUGGETS: Walter Catlett—Fair comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE (No. 1): Hollywood on Parade—This is just another review of the stars at work and play. Not as good as it should be. I am very much disappointed in this series of shorts. These could be made into good entertainment and I certainly hope Paramount will take advantage of it. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JUST AN ECHO: Bing Crosby—It'll do.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NO MORE BRIDGE: Leon Errol—Fair entertainment.—Roy W. Adams, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAINS: Betty Boop Cartoons—This is a very good musical issue of the new cartoons, with Betty Boop, Cab Calloway and his famous orchestra furnish the music and put plenty of rythm into this seven minutes of entertainment. Will please any audience and should draw extra business. Running time, seven minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

POPEYE, THE SAILOR: Betty Boop Cartoons—Good cartoon and how this guy can sock them. Running time, one reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS (No. 5): Up to the usual standard of these popular shorts. They certainly like them. Running time, 10 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS (No. 12): These are the best of the type on the market. Every one of them has something good in it. Running time, one reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RKO

CROON CRAZY: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Extra good cartoon. All of the Cubbys have been okay, at least so far. Running time, five minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HEY NANNY, NANNY: Clark and McCullough—Fair slapstick. Running time, two reels.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KICKING THE CROWN AROUND: Clark and McCullough—A good advertisement for the Fuller Brush Co., but not for the exhibitor. The Fuller Brush Co. should pay us to run this one. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LION TAMER, THE: Amos 'N' Andy Cartoons—

Splendid. Advertise it heavily. It got quite a few in who had never been to our show. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

ON APPROVAL: Headliner Series—Not a laugh in the two reels. Pass it up.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

QUIET PLEASE: Mr. Average Man Comedies—A funny comedy. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

STEEPLE CHASE: Mickey Mouse—Good enough.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GIANT LAND: Mickey Mouse—As good as any yet made. The kids just eat it up. Mickey and the Beanstalk story. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

GIANT LAND: A wonderful cartoon.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MICKEY'S PAL PLUTO: Mickey Mouse—Of course it's a good cartoon. It's a Mickey Mouse. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS, THE: Silly Symphonies—Fine Christmas subject that an independent gets April 10 after the last big house has forgotten it. Disney should release these a month before Christmas so we could run them without the public marveling at the Christmas film in summer.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS, THE: Silly Symphonies—A pretty little short that appeals to both young and old alike, especially the younger tots—they eat it up. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PET SHOP, THE: Mickey Mouse—Another good Mickey Mouse that is really original. Takes off "King Kong" and does it well. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PET SHOP, THE: Mickey Mouse—Just another Mickey Mouse comedy that will please the kids and make them laugh. I am glad this series of shorts are running out as they are not as good as many others on the market. Look out, Mr. Disney, or you will lose out. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PUPPY LOVE: Mickey Mouse—This is a very good cartoon comedy with Mickey and Minnie Mouse at their best. Full of good entertainment, especially for the kids. The last issues were not so good, but this one will make up for all of the other bad ones. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

CANDY HOUSE, THE: Oswald Cartoons—Another fine Oswald cartoon. Good work, Oswald.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

COUNTY FAIR: Oswald Cartoons—Oswald scores again with another fine cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

NOT THE MARRYING KIND: Sterling Halloway—Another one from this star which was good. The comedy itself was nothing out of the ordinary, but it is the acting and talking of Halloway, who has a style of his own, that makes it good. Otherwise, just an ordinary two-reeler. Running time, two reels—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

ON THE AIR AND OFF (Mentone No. 1): A stuttering radio announcer spoils what might have been a fair short. Tiresome.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

PALSIE WALSIE: Henry Armetta—Good comedy. I do not see why they did not use the name of the freckled young fellow as the star instead of Armetta. He certainly was the star in this two-reeler and you'll agree when you see it. Running time, two reels.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

PARKING SPACE: Oswald Cartoon—Not as good as most of the Oswalds have been, but still above the average cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

PARKING SPACE: Oswald Cartoons—Just fair. The poorest Oswald we have run. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

PIE FOR TWO: James Gleason—James Gleason sure fits in comedies. He sure is good in this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS (No. 31): Fine. These shorts make a nice addition to any program. Very interesting. Photography in those we have played has been exceptionally good. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS (No. 36): Up to the usual standard of this series. Our patrons seem to like them. They are also educational in an interesting way. Running time, one reel.—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

VAUDEVILLE ON PARADE: Mentone No. 6—An excellent short subject made up of about eight acts of good vaudeville. A great short to help build up a weak feature. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

AROUND THE CLOCK: Broadway Brevities—Good music and songs very good. It's a Broadway Brevity. Running time, 18 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

BUDDY'S DAY OUT: Looney Tunes—Just another cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

COME TO DINNER: Broadway Brevities—This one is poor compared to most of the other Broadway Brevities. Running time, 21 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

DOUBLE CROSSING OF COLUMBUS, THE: Charles Judels, Broadway Brevities—An old one. Columbus is greeted with confetti and an invitation to speak into the radio mike when he gets here. Good singing, and some fine acrobatic stunts. Running time, two reels—M. C. Howe, Erskine Theatre, Erskine, Minn. General patronage.

HEART OF PARIS: World Adventures—Another voice from the side travel talk. Just another ride down the main stem.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES FLOSSIE: Big V Comedies—O. K.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JACK DENNY AND BAND: Melody Masters—Wonderful. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JACK DENNY AND BAND: Melody Masters—This one has 10 minutes of swell entertainment. Good work, Jack. Running time, 10 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

KISSING TIME: Broadway Brevities—Not so good.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

LITTLE GIRL WITH BIG IDEAS, A: Broadway Brevities—This is the first three-reel Broadway Brevity I've played and I sure hope they make more of them. This compares as good as some of the features. Running time, 29 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MILD WEST, THE: Broadway Brevities—Not so hot.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND: Melody Masters—These "Melody Masters" are the best one-reel acts on the market today. Play any one and see for yourself.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

NOT TONIGHT, JOSEPHINE: Broadway Brevities—Great. All in beautiful natural colors. This is one of the best of the "Broadway Brevities" subjects. I ran it on an all-Vitaphone short subject program and pleased my patrons. Once in a while, I think it's a good idea to make up a program of all short subjects such as comedies, cartoons, traveltalks, musicals, radio star series, etc. Try it some time and see if your patrons do not like it.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Two and rural patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevities—One would have to see the picture "Grand Hotel" to really appreciate this comedy. It is a little bit too classy for a small town. However, it is very good.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

PICTURE PALACE: Hal LeRoy—Excellent two-reeler that will satisfy in any program. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. Small town patronage.

SEASONED GREETINGS: Lita Grey Chaplin—A pretty good musical novelty number. Has its good points. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

'TIS SPRING: Broadway Brevities—Very fine two-reeler in color. Seemed like they took some of Jolson's "Hallelujah I'm a Bum" and made a short out of it.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

TUNE DETECTIVE, THE: Pepper Pot—Fair. Running time, one reel.—Roy W. Adams, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TUNE DETECTIVE, THE: Pepper Pot—Just a fair Pepper Pot. Not much to this one. Running time, nine minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

YEAST IS YEAST: Broadway Brevities—Another Brevity. Guess I'll trade them for comedies because they're getting tiresome.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MYSTERY SQUADRON, THE: Bob Steele—Just finished the first episode of this serial and it starts off with plenty of action. If they'll only go on with it and not waste one reel of each episode with what happened before, I believe that it will be all right. Running time, three reels each chapter.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WOLF DOG, THE: Rin Rin Tin, Jr.—This is a good serial. Has held up consistently for 10 episodes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOLF DOG, THE: Rin Rin Tin, Jr., Frankie Darro, Boots Mallory—A good enough serial that held up for the full run. I guess I've got a serial town. We run them on a bargain night and it holds up for the length of the run. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WOLF DOG, THE: Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—A very good serial. Started with plenty of action and is keeping it up. Only fault is too many flashbacks.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

Universal

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones—Nobody but Ted Meyers could have made me believe that a serial could increase my patronage on family night. Have just finished showing episode nine of this serial and it is holding up fine. In fact, the serial kept them coming all through Lent, and that is the first time that we have ever been able to hold our attendance through the Lenten season. If you want something to stimulate your business, you won't go wrong on this serial.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Evalyn Knapp, Robert Allen—Am on seventh chapter and it holds interest fairly. Serial is just average. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PIRATE TREASURE: Richard Talmadge—The first three episodes of this are good. Talmadge does a lot of the acrobatic stunts he used to pull in the old silent days.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CAST IT OUT!

Deputy Administrators. Code Authority. Zoning, clearance and grievance boards. Picture producers. Theatre operators' and exhibitors' associations. All occupied with regulation of the industry's future — all absorbed in perfecting a modus operandi to set the business of the motion picture on an even keel. And all, unanimously if not enthusiastically, ignoring the status quo of the theatre manager whose desperate cries are unheard in the din of code construction.

The sicknesses of this business can never be cured while hundreds of able and honest managers are made to cower under systems that belong in the Dark Ages, systems that create poisonous fear and wreck morale.

Banish fear. Cast it out. Let the codists take the whips away from the small time Simon Legrees who lash willing workers with insult and humiliation.

Banish fear. Let the industry's strong men grant some degree of permanence to the manager and his household; protect him from predatory exploiters and recognize his primary importance to the welfare of the theatre.

The code provisions as apply to the theatre manager can never be satisfactory so long as fear is allowed to remain as a weapon in the hands of those only too ready to use it.

THOSE SUPERLATIVES

Our Gert has a peeve. A series of fancy-adjectived half page ads in the book sections of the metropolitan Sunday papers aroused her interest in a recently published novel, whereupon the gal secured a copy from the circulating library and found it much below par.

Not so long ago, book advertising was modest and conservative. But tempted by the success(?) of the superlative in picture advertising, publishers began and now continue to launch their seasonal lists upon the market with the same bing-bang that accompanies the advent of too many screen epics.

It seems that the book people cannot agree upon what's wrong with their business. Mebbe Gert can tell 'em.

MANAGER-PUBLISHERS

Some issues back, we had occasion to remark editorially upon the efforts of certain managers who, not satisfied with their newspaper breaks or for other reasons, were putting out their own publications. The number is increasing steadily.

Last week we reported on the excellent sheet gotten out by R. V. McGinnis, of Russellville, Ark., and the shoppers' guide in Hagerstown, Md., to which Frank Boucher contributes much in theatre stories and art on his coming programs. Just received is another well done "eight-pager" created by Manager Ronald B. Dieffenbacher, National Theatre, Woodland, Cal., who states that the distribution of this medium to a mailing list in 17 surrounding towns is helping to bring in extra business.

Although we are the last to counsel such procedure generally, we do not hesitate to recommend this idea in situations where the theatre is suffering from newspaper undernourishment. The fact that so many dailies devote columns and columns to the screen doings is sufficient proof of widespread and sustained reader interest in the motion picture.

Publishers who think otherwise are not serving their readers properly. And managers in these spots should, wherever possible, turn publisher to satisfy this box-office need.

SOUND TIMBER

Down in Tempe, Arizona, population 2,400, new-member "Red" Harkins manages the State Theatre, of 460 seats. The entire house staff besides "Red" consists of the cashier and the cashier's brother. Between the three they take care of everything from printing handbills on their own press to the janitor work, from projecting the pictures to booking them. And a right smart job they are doing (see page 79, issue April 14).

Scattered through the country are hundreds of "Red Harkinses" on the job from early to late, doing a thousand daily chores to keep their theatres running successfully. Miles away from sound engineers, supply companies and branch offices, with few opportunities for extensive promotion or exploitation, these stalwarts are more or less on their own and ask no quarter.

Theatre executives at all concerned with the problem of new blood might do worse than to investigate the possibilities of developing managerial timber from among the "Harkinses" of this industry.

An athletically inclined Round Tabler was endeavoring to sell the advantages of regular exercise to a brother manager who took most of his workouts at the dinner table. The good eater was curious to know what benefits accrued from attendance at the gym, to which the other showman replied that exercising helped him to work up a good sweat.

"So why should I pay good dough to sweat," piped the non-athlete, "when I have two managers' meetings a week?"

"Men in White" Gets Praise From Medics

The men in the field are getting a lot out of the doctors' tieup suggested in the press book by Bill Ferguson on "Men in White." Wally Caldwell mailed letters on the picture to every physician in town, including the hospitals, on the date at the Valentine, Toledo, and included the reproduction of the official endorsement in the august "Journal of the American Medical Association"—probably the first time in history that this publication has plugged a motion picture. Postcards were sent to all local nurses, bulletins posted at nurses' headquarters and in hospitals, and tabloid heralds distributed in the waiting rooms of every doctor's office in the city.

Double faced beaverboard signs resembling doctors' shingles were affixed to the light poles on the theatre corner. The copy read: "Doctor Clark Gable, Heart Specialist, Hours 11 A. M. to 11 P. M., Loew's Valentine, Now." Doormen and ushers, a week in advance, wore doctors' knee-length white coats, and Gable photos were given away on a radio tieup to those who called at the sponsor's store.

Elmer Brient, at the State, down in Richmond, also went for the doctor letter, sending these out to over 500 medicos, giving the picture a dignified plug over his signature.

"Tarzan" Safety Club Started by M-G-M

Already set in time for general release date, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has inaugurated a national "Tarzan" Safety Club to safeguard the lives of children. In advance of a broadside describing the details of the plan and the numerous tieups, Billy Ferguson, M-G-M exploitation chief, sent out a series of day-by-day bulletins to steam up interest, and followed that up with the three color spread.

Many ideas are set forth. Newspaper and radio tieups, parades and contests, special matinees, PTA endorsements and merchant tieups are all enumerated. Johnny Weissmuller is the first member to enroll, and the broadside carries a wired endorsement from him, to be used as display.

Another gag to be used nationally is a tieup with a prominent auto manufacturer who has constructed a special truck at no cost to accomodate "Mary," the rhino used in the picture. This bally with trainer and crew will tour the country, starting in New York within the next few weeks.

McMANUS FORWARDS THE BEST ANSWER

The original Rosenfeld drawing offered for the best "tag line" to fit his cartoon in issue of April 14 was won by Manager John J. McManus, Midland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., for the following answer:

BOY: "I like him okay, but shucks, he treats his dog just like you do me."

Milt is now completing the drawing and it will go forward to John within a few days.

Members sent in enough replies to encourage us to try it again soon. Watch for the next one.—MIKE.

Flex Plants "Nana" Stickers on Wires

Going a step higher on the telegraph tieup, Manager Jack Flex, Palace Theatre, Indianapolis, promoted his Postal office to provide thousands of small stickers with cut of Sten and theatre date on "Nana." These were placed on all incoming, outgoing messages during the engagement. All branch wire offices also carried window and counter displays.

Many windows were arranged through the distribution of free star stills, all music stores plugged the song hit, as did radio stations, Sten styles were advertised, and book marks distributed at libraries.

Kinzler "Tells" On Roxy Theatre Date

Universal's tieup with United Press on "I'll Tell the World" in which the mechanics of this wire service are depicted was the basis of the campaign at the Roxy, N. Y., put on by ad head Morris Kinzler, working with managing director Irving Lesser.

Extensive tieins were made with the New York World-Telegram which holds the UP franchise. For two weeks ahead, stories and cuts were run in the news sections as well as the picture page, and during the first stage of the run copies of the daily carrying front page stickers were distributed from two special lobby news stands. The paper also contributed baseball schedules, which were also handed out gratis.

The theatre displays were unusual. In the outer lobby a map of the world 14 feet wide was placed, and from each spot that UP services, a red ribbon was extended to a news ticker, flashing news stories from all over the world (see photo) sent direct to the theatre. These bulletins were displayed on panels and changed at regular intervals.

A comprehensive news photo display of outstanding events of the past few years was promoted from the UP and exhibited on the mezzanine. Morris also promoted a 30-inch atlas globe in the rotunda with appropriate tieup copy, lighted from above with baby spots. UP correspondents from all over the world wired congratulatory messages which were posted in outer lobby.

Special News Reel

One week in advance and during the run a special news reel was run compiled and paid for by the newspaper, running about 400 feet. This was in the nature of an additional trailer and in it was also shown views of the paper's plant describing details of making up the paper. All the "by-liners" appear in this reel and Graham McNamee is the commentator. This was further plugged with news stand cards, publicity stories in the paper and breaks in other sheets serviced by U. P. Another unlooked for break was secured by a full page ad in "Editor and Publisher," which was obtained free to the theatre.

Nationwide radio hookup, special screenings for publishers convening in New York and members of local newspaper clubs, attendance by journalism students and faculty of Columbia University and a news story on the premiere sent out over all UP wires were some of the other smart ideas that rounded out as effective a campaign as has been put out in these parts for some time.

McCORD RECEIVES MARCH QUIGLEY AWARD FROM GOVERNOR OF IDAHO

State Chief Executive Presents Third Monthly Plaque to the Winner at Capitol Ceremony; Lauds Nevin's Showmanship

by H. H. MILLER
Special Correspondent

On Saturday, April 21, Governor C. Ben Ross presented to Nevin McCord, manager of the Granada Theatre, Boise, the silver plaque representative of the Martin Quigley Award for March, 1934.

The Idaho Chief Executive paused long enough in the midst of a busy calendar, including the supervision of unemployment relief in the State, to congratulate the Boise manager on the industry and ingenuity which won him the award.

"I want to congratulate you, Mr. McCord," said the Governor, "upon winning this international trophy against the kind of competition you must have met. It is not only a tribute to yourself, but to the great State which can produce such men.

"It is one more indication that Idaho breeds first-class material; it is one more in the list of triumphs which men of this State have won in various fields.

"Idaho, through her chief executive, pays tribute to an outstanding accomplishment by one of her citizens."

There was the flash of a magnesium light as press photographers snapped the scene, while the Governor handed the plaque to the happy recipient.

Nevin McCord is a product of Boise, who has worked his way into the management of his own theatre through his own efforts. He started as usher and his filled virtually every possible job around the theatres. He began with the old Pinney Theatre, still operated by the Paramount-Publix Corporation and early displayed unusual abilities.

After his graduation, so to speak, from the ranks of ushers, he went to Chicago, where he worked for a time; then returned to Boise when the Publix outfit took over the Granada. Since that time his rise has been rapid.

Theatre Program Helps Keep Trade at Home

Manager Ronald Dieffenbacher of the National Theatre, Woodland, Cal., was losing a lot of business to nearby Sacramento, and worked a monthly program that he states is helping to keep the folks at home. It really is more than a program, being in the nature of a magazine of eight pages on light colored book stock, size nine by twelve, called "The Playgoer," with the front page given over to some outstanding article on national affairs. Local stories are also carried.

The month's pictures are advertised by one-column mats and interesting shorts help make the sheet very chatty. Outside ads are conspicuous by their number, and the entire setup is to be commended. Donald has built up a bona fide mailing list of over 2,000 from 17 surrounding towns and cities.

That this member stands "aces" is attested to by a sweet editorial in his local paper which gives the movies a great boost in general, and Dieffenbacher in particular for his efforts in "purveying better entertainment and making people want to buy it at a time when their thoughts might be on their woes." Not only was the theatre mentioned by name but the coming attractions and stars as well with praises for the features.

THE JUDGES FOR APRIL ENTRIES

The following executives of the industry have kindly consented to act as the April Quigley Award Committee:

Messrs. FELIX F. FEIST, General Sales Manager, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; HAL HORNE, Advertising and Publicity Director, United Artists; WILLIAM H. RAYNOR, Managing Director, Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Entrants are requested to remember that deadline is midnight, May 5. Campaigns must be received before or at this time for prize consideration.

Camden Theatremen Plug Four-Weeks Spring Drive

Another well conceived spring business stimulator comes from Camden, N. J., in a campaign put over by Manager Murdock of the Stanley Theatre, under the supervision of the division chief, Ed Callow, reported to Club headquarters by Manager A. Frank of the Lyric Theatre, in that town. Starting with "Wonder Bar," continuing with "Riptide," "Men in White" and concluding with "Death Takes a Holiday," a four-week drive is being put over.

The opening broadside was an 80-line open letter ad on two columns endorsing the four pictures to be shown and expressing the gratitude of the management for the confidence placed in the theatre during the year, and with this, a letter from the Mayor was run giving the theatre a pat on the back.

Following this interview with Manager Murdock was carried accompanied by his picture, the story building up the four programs. In conjunction, the Chamber of Commerce proclaimed a "Greater Camden Month, tying in with publicity, newspaper and radio advertising. Murdock also made daily radio talks on the idea, as did prominent locals. Letters were sent to select mailing list, special screenings were held, and the entire theatre block decorated with flags.

"AVOID POSTER MONOTONY"

So States Tampa Theatre Artist Who Gives His Views in Further Discussion of Good Poster Art

by ANDY BEITER
Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

My views on the subject of posters as discussed by Mr. Donald Andorfer, seem to have been fully covered by the article written by Mr. Hal Kopplin. I consider posters as one of the necessary appointments of a deluxe house and believe that they should be of as high a standard as it is possible for the theatre sign-writer to achieve without infringing upon his many other and frequently more important duties.

I use the word "sign-writer" rather than "theatre artist" because I feel that every man in such employment should keep his mind fixed upon the fact that he has been hired for the specific purpose of writing signs to sell motion pictures. That he has probably been hired in preference to a regular commercial sign painter because he is possessed of greater imaginative powers, which enable him to carry out the varying demands of managers who are striving to gain unusual and oft times startling effects in the exploitation of their pictures, and also for his ability to put out pictorial work of a better quality than that produced by the average commercial sign-writer. He should, however, fully realize that his pictorial work, no matter how good, serves the theatre management merely in the capacity of eye-baiting, and he should make it a point to so arrange his layouts that the eye of the observer will carry on naturally and easily to the message which is to be conveyed.

No Set Rules

One ought not to have to worry about any set rules as to the area to be occupied by the pictorial work and the lettering respectively. The essential thing is to see that the lettering dominates the composition, whether by color contrast, tricky arrangement of layout, or by the actual space occupied on the poster or other sign being made. Personally, I am partial to short paragraphs of catch copy on posters and use them whenever it is practicable. When well worded and attractively blocked in, I think they lend an intriguing, as well as a decorative note to a poster and most people seem inclined to stop and read them.

In order to avoid monotony, we try, here in Tampa, to avoid having two posters of the same type in the lobby at the same time. We have worked out, I should say roughly, about 15 or 16 different looking kinds of posters, using opaque and transparent water colors, oil paints, oil crayons, hard and soft pastels, charcoal, etc., in various treatments of each.

Candidly, while I am certain that posters do their bit in their proper place, I attach much more importance to displays, especially animated ones, to theatre fronts, to banners and in our particular case to our processed street car cards, which are constantly circulating day and night, not only through the business districts but also through the outlying residential districts. We try to make our street car cards individual and snappy, using pictorial work and running them in as many colors as time permits.

Speaking of banners, we are using an animated hanging banner for special occasions at the Tampa. It is doublefaced and about eight inches in thickness. The six-sided center slowly revolves, showing panels on which lettering alternates with star heads or other pictorial designs. The small motor which operates it is concealed within the banner and it is funny to see people stop to ask the cashier whether or not the wind is turning it. I am thinking of getting some panels of frosted glass and having an illuminated center with transparent poster work.

Believes in Stills

All other opinions to the contrary, I am a confirmed believer in stills. They can be used in so many interesting ways and the public never seems to grow tired of them. We sometimes tint them and use them as transparencies. Mr. Andorfer speaks of theatre lobbies which resemble photo galleries or sign shops. To me, it seems that such a lobby would be a serious reflection on the staff sign-writer, for it would simply mean that he had failed to present his stills and his copy in an attractive and theatrical manner.

To sum it all up, I would say that pictorial work is not only desirable, but essential to theatre advertising and should be used where and whenever time and appropriateness permits, not only on posters, but also on banners, one sheets and even at times on rag signs, but never at the sacrifice of the sign work. For after all, the sign's the thing.

Andy is the lad who has been turning out those ace displays, photos of which have been published frequently in these pages. He speaks a meaty mouthful on posters. More on this next week—MIKE.

Hodges' Traffic "Safety" Cards

MOTHERS' DAY

Members are no doubt aware of Mothers' Day which comes this year on Sunday, May 13, and many plans are being made to celebrate this day in the theatre. Some extra effort on this should be profitable, and the following are a few of the things already set by various managers.

Special shorts are being dated, which will be accompanied by "Mother" overtures or organ solos. Stage prologue presentations are also indicated. Florist tieups with flowers given to every woman patron is being put over in many spots, and advance co-op pages tying in merchants on special sales are planned.

Tieups with schools on "Mother" essay contests is another favorite, and showmen are figuring on newspaper breaks with free admissions to the oldest local mothers, mothers of the largest local families and other variations.

Traffic Safety Drive Features Hodges' Date

Profitably localized was Jack Hodges' showing of "Death Takes a Holiday," at the Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., by his campaign that featured an excellent newspaper tie-up. To readers furnishing pictures of actual local catastrophies, such as fires, wrecks, etc., in which no lives were lost, passes were given. The best of these were run in the paper on opening day, the rest displayed in lobby in advance.

The same paper also tied in by furnishing boys to deliver heralds on the street and from house to house, the carriers shouting sensational headlines. Newsboys also wore imprinted cardboard discs for ten days ahead. A classified tie-up and series of single column teaser ads increased interest.

Intelligent safety campaign marked Jack's efforts. Teaser cards were placed on street corners, light poles, safety islands (see photo), copy reading—"Caution! Death Takes a Holiday when you Drive carefully." The same copy was used on cards resembling police tickets, tied to automobile door handles. New auto parade was staged, copy on banners tying title into safety features of new models.

Uses Trailer Prologue

Teaser ones and threes were spotted far in advance carrying the line, "No One Can Die for Three Days," followed by the title, and these were sniped with dates a week ahead. The same idea was carried out on a prominently placed 24. Besides advance trailers at theatre, trailer idea was carried out further via sound truck carrying small screen and portable machine, also with 16 mm. machine in downtown window. Trailer prolog was also employed as follows: house darkened, gong struck, hooded figure stalked down aisle, picked up by green spot. Figure walked across stage, disappearing behind smoke of photographer flash powder at exit.

Milk bottle hanger hookin was also made on morning of opening, Postal Telegraph placed imprinted jumbo blanks in branch offices and windows; all women's drama and literary societies were mailed personal letters, and preview put on for local big shots whose comments were used in lobby and ads.

These highlights are the top line stunts of Hodges' excellent campaign, skillfully devised, ably executed. It well won him the First Mention he received.

Good Results on Madden's "Devil Tiger" Campaign

Excellent was Manager J. J. Madden's "Devil Tiger" campaign for Granby Theatre, Norfolk, Va., that took in many angles. Fully equipped circus wagon for street bally gathered crowds, followed with distribution of circus heralds also placed in laundry packages, metropolitan newspapers and other favorable outlets.

Small envelopes imprinted with copy stating, "For your information, look inside," were given out at theatre, on street cars and ferries—card in each carrying copy and illustrations on picture. Newspaper cooperated on contest in which passes were given to those writing the title the most times on an ordinary post card.

Botwick Plants Mae West Letter in Papers

The special Mae West record he received as a prize in the recent "I'm No Angel" contest was used by Manager Harry Botwick, Paramount Theatre, Rutland, Vt., to break a nice publicity story in his local papers. It ran to a half column which included all the details of the contest, the letter from Mae West and, last but not least, a cut of the smiling Harry himself.

Awards in contests of this nature should be utilized by all managers who receive them for publicity purposes. It isn't a question of "three-sheeting" as the newspaper stories make a good prestige builder for the theatre which can always be reflected at the box office.

Work For A Quigley Award!

Creates Different Herald As Institutional Plug

Manager George Daransoll sends along a sample of the herald used recently at the Camerophone Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., as an instance of what he is doing to get away from the routine of the stereotyper herald with the regulation mats. George heads his copy as follows: "This Is An Entertainment Sharing Coupon!—Don't clip it. Just read it and act on it."

The remainder of the layout has to do with the theatre's new policy, the prices, and winds up by advising patrons to come and collect their entertainment dividends. Current attractions are carried in a special box that stands out nicely.

Cullen's Airport Gag

Cullen Goes Airport On "Moulin Rouge"

Pittsburgh supports a very busy airport. Manager Mike Cullen, of Loew's Penn, spread out his advertising on "Moulin Rouge" to cover the landing field with giant-sized letters spelling title and theatre (see photo) secured to a wire fence adjoining the terminal. Tied into this was a plane flying theatre banner over city.

Other ideas also clicked. Music store and broadcasting cooperation was secured and style hookups made with leading stores. Excellent was Mike's newspaper campaign of one, two and three column ads devised to do a good job of selling the picture.

Work For A Quigley Award!

Lewis Plants "First" Merchant Co-op. Page

Selling his local paper for the first time on the advantages of cooperative merchants' ads on "Little Women" marks a turning point in his exploitation efforts, says Manager George C. Lewis, Wildey Theatre, Edwardsville, Ill. George broke the ice with a story and art layout that related some of the difficulties in filming the picture and on the following day the "first" co-op page was launched successfully.

The great amount of favorable comment that was forthcoming was helpful in persuading the editor that such tieups were profitable and from now on George anticipates little difficulty in putting over further newspaper hook-ins.

The persistence of this member is just another indication that a showman who won't be licked, can't be licked.

Dutkin Gives Away "Live Baby" and Pony

"Uncle Charlie" Dutkin, who keeps Camden, N. J., theatregoers in a perfect dither of excitement with his "goin's on" at the Parkside Theatre, dug way down into the bag a few weeks ago by announcing he would give away a live baby. Strange as it may seem, this venerable old chestnut is reported to have gone over much stronger than Charlie anticipated, what with phone calls, inquiries from the District Attorney's office, etc. Dutkin is keeping the kids on their toes by giving away Shetland ponies, birds in cages and other prizes.

McManus Uses Star Stills in Tieups

Star Garbo stills were used advantageously by John McManus in Kansas City, Mo., for "Queen Christina" date at Loew's Midland. Stores in busy locations received these for distribution to patrons in exchange for elaborate windows and newspaper ads. News stands and drug stores also cooperated along these lines.

McManus secured many extra publicity breaks on this, outstanding being a specially written article on the history of Christina by leading picture critic which ran on two Sundays in advance, totaling four and a half columns, plus a three-column art layout.

On "Palooka," John adapted the flasher sign idea originated on the New York showing at the Rivoli, detailed a few issues back. He used a three-way circuit flasher and reports constant crowds enjoying the display.

Neat Program Turned Out by Fred Hines

For a neat little theatre program we have to credit Fred Hinds, owner, manager and general factotum of the Strand, Whitewater, Wis. Measuring 3½ inches by 6 inches, a two page affair with a gilt cover, Fred manages to get his money's worth.

The front bears theatre name and a small calendar for the month at the top and below an ad. The back has two ads, these covering entire cost of the program. Inside two pages list picture schedule for the month with stars' names and playdates.

Some of the pictures have asterisks next to them with the explanation that those so listed are considered the "Best of the Month" by the Federated Clubs.

Poker Poster Novel On "Six of a Kind"

That was a good poster idea conceived by Manager Gene Curtis and exploiteer Ken Finlay for "Six of a Kind" at the Palace, Montreal. Copy plus poker cards was used to sell it (see photo) along these lines. "You'll have a 'deuce' of a good time when you see 'Six of a Kind, etc., etc.," the card in question carrying out the message. Thus the line "there is a 'royal flush' of fun" was illustrated by that sequence of cards, and the entire poster conveyed the same idea.

Another Smart Lobby Idea from Bill Brown

A newspaper office in the lobby was Manager Bill Brown's smart idea to sell "Hi, Nellie!" at the Marlboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. Undaunted by lack of cooperation from the metropolitan newspapers, Bill promoted a neighborhood printing office and accompanying photo shows the resultant lobby flash.

Copies of all local newspapers were planted in the exhibit, the name of the feature lettered across the front page of each which were tossed around the floor and desks for atmosphere. Marquee board announcing showing dates were pasted over with a background of newspaper pages, to which the cutout letters of the title were nailed.

Quite complete was the idea, expense little. Everything used was promoted, including telephone from local phone branch office.

Black Arranges Welcome For Mickey Mouse

A novel newspaper break was arranged by Manager Harry Black, Rialto Theatre, Glens Falls, N. Y., to announce the introduction of the Mickey Mouse shorts. Seated at his desk, Harry was photographed shaking hands with Mickey, who the artist drew waving a welcome to the readers with his left paw. An interview with the famed rodent followed, in which, of course, the theatre was mentioned and the title of the first short.

On "Love Birds," this member ran a series of advance one column teaser ads, giving them an adaptation of the first Anna Sten ads, with a humorous twist. Using scene mats, Harry planted adjectives over the cuts, such as "alluring," "riotous," "captivating," etc., the scenes showing action directly opposite. The gag pulled laughs.

For "Palooka," Black went for the nose-measuring idea, planting a stand in the lobby to which was attached a ruler on a chain. A life-sized drawing of the famed beak of Durante was used for comparison purposes, the snapper being that any one with the same sized bugle could see the show on the house. Few qualified, if any, but the display certainly gathered amused crowds.

Padgett's Shadow Box Unique and Cheap Idea

A new contributor to our pages, and a welcome one, is F. D. Padgett, Capitol, Clearwater, Fla. He tells us his budget is limited and shows us what can be done despite that fact.

For his "Death Takes a Holiday" run he used a truck carrying six sheets advertising the picture and planted it on the causeway leading to the beach for three days prior to opening. On each side of the screen two large shadow boxes were constructed with cut-out letters masked in with red cloth, title running all the way up on either side of screen. These were turned on as the house went dark and projected through a red color wheel onto the trailer.

In three used-car lots, wrecked cars carried banners reading "No One Hurt—'Death Takes a Holiday.'" Members of a Little Theatre group were called on by their president to see the picture. Library and Chamber of Commerce reading rooms were supplied with literature and two nights before opening folks attending tourist night at the Auditorium for charity, made competitive bids on ten tickets, donated by theatre, to see "Death."

Alper Sets Up Attractive Display for "Rio"

When Murray Alper at the Commodore Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., played "Flying Down to Rio," he built a display of a Rio setting in his lobby that had his customers stopping to take a look (see photo).

He tied up with a local aviation club for the small airplane used. In addition to this, his art department made two life-sized figures in a Carioca pose and planted them and the musical notes at various angles on the display.

At the extreme right, you can see how they built a platform for "Convention City," using cutout figures of the stars and transparent circle with flasher light carrying copy on it.

Jack Lykes' "Marines" Campaign Goes Over Big

For smart showmanship, our old friend and club member, Jack Lykes, of Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, is up front. Jack recently played "Come on Marines" at his house and purposely avoided playing up the "war stuff," concentrating on the marine comedy angle instead.

He tied up with Cleveland's Leatherneck Club, a newly formed organization of ex-marines, who were anxious to gain a little publicity. They put up a registration booth in the lobby with one of the marines in attendance, where "leathernecks" could register.

Needless to say the marine emblem and silk flags were prominently displayed and one of the men in uniform paraded up and down in front of the theatre. A "Can you draw the U.S.M.C. Emblem" contest went over to good results and the band marching to the theatre opening night was the big flash.

Jack promises us his campaign on the Stillman's Mystery Singer, "Mr. X," which sounds pretty good to us, so get busy and mail it in, Jack. We'd like to have it.

Dance Team Teaches "Bolero" Dance

The boys are working hard on that dance step tieup on "Bolero." Manager Bob Paskow and publicist Bob Deitch, Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, were among the most recent to report success with this angle by promoting a local team to demonstrate on the grand mezzanine during the showing, publicity on this carried in local papers.

Special cards, post card size, printed with the step instructions were distributed at the theatre, as were costless heralds made available through the Beck shoe cooperation, used house to house. Music store and radio hookup were effected and other adequate advertising arranged, all of which Deitch reports brought business.

Cahill's Double Bally On Double Program

Manager Joe Cahill, Brockton Theatre, Brockton, Mass., tops the usual street bally on a single attraction with two stunts on a double program of "Last Roundup" and "David Harum" illustrated in the accompanying photo sent on by Myron Shellman of the M. & P. New England circuit ad crew. Besides this, Cahill also put on his annual spring fashion show in cooperation with local merchants, all of which helped immeasurably in building a strong week's gross. Note the banner plugging the style show.

Many Windows on Taylor's "Nana" Date

Fashion's angles on "Nana" were featured by Bill Taylor, at Loew's State, Houston, Tex., with representation in three of the city's best stores on gowns, hats and stockings. Beauty shop tieups brought three co-op ads on the "Nana" coiffure, and free display space was also obtained in a classified tiein with local paper.

Theatre front was given headline treatment, with giant cutout letters over box office spelling out title and star. Large head of Sten was used in center of side panels with background and lettering in rich colors.

MacLevy Plants Much For "Carolina"

"Newspaper-less" neighborhood theatre managers with small ad budgets in highly competitive situations must replace cash outlay with ingenuity, and Randforcer Monty MacLevy's low-cost campaign on "Carolina" at the Savoy, Brooklyn, N. Y., is good example of what can be done.

Apartment-house surrounding section covered with programs delivered door to door made possible by passes to house superintendents. A large front was constructed with 36-inch box letters spelling out title. Circular side panels also carried copy in cut-out letters and tinseled. Crowd gathering was p. a. system broadcasting music and dialog direct from the screen.

Different was organlogue teaser theme song in which the picture was musicalized cleverly by organist attired in crinoline costume who also sang theme song. Monte made florist and dress tieup, for mezzanine display (see photo) with picket fence carrying title, around the exhibit. Models were especially hand painted.

MacLevy's Mezzanine Display

A word-building contest, prizes being term passes, received splendid response, contestants required to build words from star and title. Horse and carriage street bally, imprinted napkins, special children folders distributed at seven nearby schools and prominent windows also clicked.

Charlie Bassin Still Batting 'Em Out Fast

Special "David Harum" letterhead was printed and sent out to his mailing list when Charlie Bassin, Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, Mass., played it at his house. Upper left hand corner of letterhead showed cut of audience with caption "Happy Faces are Oriental Faces," center bore theatre name and right hand a cut of Rogers smiling. Attractively gotten up the letter addressed to the theatregoer contained copy on the picture, giving cast and brief resume.

Taking advantage of every angle, Charlie listed the added attractions and got a plug in for the coming ones and the free parking privileges offered by the theatre.

To supplement his mailing list, he had a postcard printed with room for names and addresses of three potential "customers," suggesting that they be filled in with acquaintances' names desiring program announcements. Reverse side, where theatre and address appears, also carries an institutional plug and parking space mention.

When "Palooka" played there he sent cards out informing the general public in Durante's inimitable lingo that he was being put on the same program with Clark Gable and wondering how "a guy wit me devastating poisonality can compete wit dat Gable guy, de smoothie," etc., etc.

Nichols' Campaign Brings Hold Over

Newspaper tie-ups were prominent in Manager Don Nichols' drive for grosses on "It Happened One Night" at the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. Paper gave Don much free space in exchange for free passes plus ten cents to those running want ads paid for in advance. Other gratis display was secured with scene mats of stars used in "house" ads plugging paper's ad want page. These breaks were run as far in advance as three weeks.

Special front covering lobby (see photo) was used, stars and title sold artistically and concisely. Note absence of many small stills. Comments of critics, one-sheeted, brought attention.

Greyhound bus was used for street bally touring town and drawing area with load of shouting schoolboys and girls. Special screening, sepia enlargements in good windows, extra billing, strong radio plugs, were other of the ideas that aided Don in rolling up a campaign that necessitated hold-over business.

"Palooka" Campaign Put On By Mgr. Golden Is Oke

J. Golden, manager of RKO Palace, Rochester, N. Y., did a pretty thorough job on "Palooka" when it played his city. Through merchant tieups, he was able to plant a seven-foot colored blowup of Durante and Velez in a prominently located window, further plugging the picture with scene stills and additional accessories. Auto tires with copy were placed on all local cabs, heralds distributed and gummed stickers placed in newspapers and magazines.

For a street bally, Golden secured the cooperation of the local trolley company and got out a car pasted with 24 sheets (see photo) on both sides. Car was kept on streets for three days and produced results.

MORE SPRING-SUMMER ANGLES

Various Additional Slants That Should Be of Help to Theatremen In Stimulating Seasonal Grosses

Much spirited activity is in evidence from the Warner Theatres of Louis Lazar's Albany, N. Y., zone. Divisional drives, post-Lenten campaigns, special short shows, excellent street ballys and theatre fronts are being planned and have been put over to stimulate spring and summer business. A number of slants have been reported by District Manager Ralph E. Crabill.

Special Short Shows

In conjunction with the feature attractions, managers are showing a program of shorts that are reported to bring in gratifying results. Crabill states that each of the houses in the territory has at this writing played one to four of these special programs, in all cases clicking strongly. For instance, at the Palace, Jamestown, Manager Doc Westfall showed these shorts. Joe Penner in "The Toreador," the "Little Broadcast," Bing Crosby in "Please" and a "Pop Eye." He did an amazing business.

Wally Allen, Keeny, Elmira, ran a similar program, featuring the shorts over the feature, with approximately three-fifths of the newspaper campaign plugging these units. Other managers report successes.

Crabill, however, advises discretion in booking such shows as the idea loses its force if put over too frequently. With the success that these showmen have enjoyed, there is no reason why the stunt cannot be duplicated in other situations for the same results, for it even drew strongly on Palm Sunday in a territory predominantly Catholic. The credit for a lot of the extra draw has been given to the Joe Penner shorts due to his nationwide popularity.

Managers' Week

A post-Lenten idea participated in by the entire territory was a Managers' Week that started April 15 and for which cash prizes were given. This activity was based on the thought that managers are well known in their towns and can solicit patrons, merchants, civic and social bodies for their aid.

Crabill wrote a trailer for the houses, signed by the manager, which was a direct appeal to the community, and outside of the general plans, no other help was given so that each manager could employ his own.

Some splendid examples of cooperation were noted. In one town, the local musicians staged a testimonial in the form of three free shows on Sunday with an orchestra of 15 pieces and eight vaudeville acts, which drew very heavily. Smart showmanship was also displayed in other situations, such as heralds carrying manager's picture with copy plugging the week, personal endorsement newspaper ads, co-op testimonial pages, statements and interviews with local mayors and prominent civic officials.

General Ideas

All houses in the district staged Easter style shows in advance and egg hunts on the Saturday before Easter. During the Easter vacation, Crabill booked a two-hour short show of cartoons and two-reel comedies, which were run as special kiddie shows being very profitable and not interfering with weekend children matinee activities.

In other spots, lines of from eight to twelve girls have been organized and put into shows every now and then. Local dancing schools are tied in on this and in exchange are given the privilege of using the theatre stage and the opportunity of offering pupils' actual stage experience.

Picture Campaigns

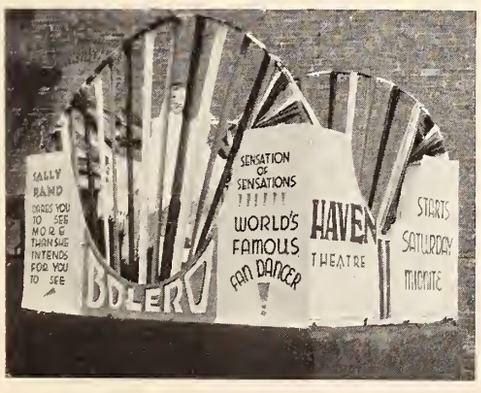
"Bolero" was plugged in many ways, in one spot, a Block Dance being held with a Bolero contest and exhibition. The fan dance was exploited with a girl on a special float (see photo) at night, doing her dance in a bathing suit behind store window with shadow effect. This was tied into a novelty herald, the copy headed by the line, "Is the Fan Quicker Than the Eye?"

Good jobs were done on fronts and lobby pieces on other attractions, two instances of which are illustrated in the accompanying photos, with similar snappy art work created by all the theatremen in the other houses. All the boys had full-page co-op ads on "Fashions" and "Wonder Bar," as well as hard-hitting tieups on these and other attractions.

HERE ARE THE MANAGERS:

The following Warner-ites and their theatres, of Louis Lazar's Albany, N. Y., zone, working under the supervision of District Manager Ralph E. Crabill, were responsible for the execution of the various sales angles detailed on this page:

Nick Kauffman, Haven, Olean; Wally Allen, Keeney, Elmira; Lester Sparks, Diana, Medina; L. Lighthouse, Babcock, Wellsville; Irwin Kay, W. Garden, Jamestown; F. M. Westfall, Palace, Jamestown; Fred Weinberg, Family, Batavia; Dalton Burgett, Capitol, Dunkirk; and H. P. Stone, Majestic, Hornell.



Work For A Quigley Award!

Lewis Puts On Spring Shopping Days

Lewis tied in with his Chamber of Commerce and local merchants to put on a series of "opportunity days" which ran consecutively on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Special section of his newspaper was published, 14,000 extra copies being distributed all over the country free of charge.

All the cooperating merchants advertised in this section and in addition to his own ad, Lewis promoted mention of his attractions in many others. For window displays, star and scene stills and cutouts were furnished all stores desiring these for added decoration, in return for which Lewis was allowed to place his theatre programs in these windows.

A treasure hunt was also put on, wherein 300 awards of $2 in merchandise was given to those whose names were posted in the stores. ames were selected from lists of local residents, nearby towns and rural districts in the trading orea. Lewis also distributed special heralds all through the territory which plugged the shopping days and his current attractions.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 221.—(A) Under what conditions will a small diameter projection lens cause loss of light? (B) Explain, in detail, just why unevenness of screen illumination is set up when a portion of the light beam falls outside the projection lens. I will ask no more this week, as a full, lucid explanation of these two questions will require some space. If you send a drawing, be sure to use black ink or a black pencil.

Answer to Question No. 215

Bluebook School Question No. 215 was: (A) What effect will finger marks, even though invisible when the lens is looked through directly, have on the screen image? (B) What is the effect of an even distribution of dust upon the surface of a lens? (C) Explain the reason or reasons why a lens surface should be highly polished after each cleaning. (D) Tell us just what method you consider best for cleaning lenses.

Before me lies a pile of acceptable replies. The list is for some reason unusually short, however. Incidentally D. Calladine sent in a correct reply to Question No. 214, as did J. L. Banton, neither of which was credited. Those answering Question No. 215 acceptably were: G. E. Doe; S. Evans and C. Rau; T. Van Vaulkenburg; D. Danielson; P. Gaeth, Jr.; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; B. S. Englander; R. J. Arntson; A. F. Sprafke; R. De Totto; D. Ferguson; B. R. Walker; G. R. Squires; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; O. Allbright; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; W. Broadbent; F. L. Granby; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; G. Thompson; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; D. Haber and D. Breaston; M. and J. DeVoy; A. L. Dodson and F. L. Benton; L. C. Northup; D. L. Sinklow; T. T. Golley; D. Sanders; D. U. Granger; J. Jansen and D. C. Lode; G. Harrison and F. Harlor; L. N. and C. B. Traxler; H. R. Baldwin; R. and K. Wells; L. R. O'Leary; T. Malleby; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; L. Grant and R. Geddings; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; L. M. Richards; M. F. Fallon; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; T. H. Morton, L. Klar and F. G. Klar.

I have selected the answer of H. Edwards to section A. He says: "The effects of such a mark would be: (1) They would to some extent cause misdirection of such light as passed through them, therefore the definition of that portion of the screen image carried by that light would be injured, the injury being of course in proportion to the exact amount of deposit and its kind. Such marks may ordinarily be presumed to consist largely of oily matter. (2) Such a mark would increase light reflection and this effect would be progressive, because dust would be likely to collect more quickly and to a greater extent on the deposit than upon the surrounding presumably clean glass surface. It then follows that loss of light would be increased and that portion of the screen image carried by the light passing through the finger marks would be somewhat less brightly illuminated than surrounding areas."

Quite some answer, I believe you will all agree. In the name of us all I congratulate friend Edwards, who, incidentally, is located in a village and works in a little theatre seating only 340 persons.

(B) Our old Chicago friend G. E. Doe says: "If the dust coat be very evenly distributed the effects will be, first, loss of light through increased reflection and stoppage of light by opaque dust particles, hence decrease in screen brilliancy. Second, because the dust particles will cause a certain amount of light dispersion, white light will be directed to dark portions, and therefore the picture contrast will be diminished. Third, I believe there will also be some slight tendency to injury of definition, though of that I am uncertain."

Another excellent answer. I too am of the opinion that definition will suffer, though this effect will, I believe, not be sufficient to be noticeable unless the coating be very heavy.

(C) B. R. Walker says: "I believe the correct answer to this is the fact that if the surface of glass be highly polished there can hardly be anything left upon it. In other words a high polish means the surface is as nearly as possible perfectly clean, and certainly a perfectly clean surface will act with maximum efficiency in every way."

Dale Danielson puts up an argument which I can neither commend nor condemn. I don't know! Here it is: "In consideration of the large difference in amount of light loss through reflection from a clean and polished and from a clean but unpolished lens surface, it is evident that much electric power might be wasted by failure to polish the lens surfaces."

Up to that point all is well. As to what follows—well, I dunno. He continues: "The high luster imparted to a lens surface by polish results in a decided decrease in light loss by reflection. We know glass is not a solid but a liquid, for the reason that it lacks crystalline formation. Polishing tends to place the glass molecules in systematic formation with relation to each other and the outer surface of the lens, and because of that fact the light more easily penetrates the lens surface."

Well, that's a new one, Yours Truly. Possibly it is right! Unfortunately there was not sufficient time left when I ran into this to consult glass men. However, crystalline or not, I am unable to understand on what basis glass could possibly be defined as a liquid. Will friend Danielson be good enough to point out the basis of that "liquid" statement.

(D) This will be omitted as it is almost an exact repetition of one section of question 214. Apologies.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

REVIEWING PICTURES

PROBABLY the most debated single aspect of the journalism of the motion picture is the reviewing of product. A recent and sharp criticism of the reviews of a certain production by Mr. Darryl Zanuck brings the subject and its issues to mind, not that one would choose to single out Mr. Zanuck but rather because his views appear representative of one school of thought in the production community. In the case in point Mr. Zanuck objected because the review under consideration pointed to some definite possibilities of censorship difficulties for the exhibitor and because the review also remarked among other informative statements that the production was a "costume picture."

It is our contention that when a motion picture has been completed and is presented to the market as merchandise its content is no longer entirely confidential.

Inventory of the box office elements of a production does not imply condemnation. There can be no service to the industry in reviewing which does not set forth in clear terms just what the merchandise is, with as much information as may be to the showmen who retail it that may be calculated to guide their course toward a successful exploitation.

Many factors, and all of them obvious, enter into the writing of reviews of motion pictures. Some are written to entertain and beguile the producers and distributors, for reasons needless to define. Some are written with a thinly concealed design to have them and their authors conspicuously quoted. Some are written to vent grudges or to serve personal purposes.

There is, however, only one policy of reviewing which can be of consistent and continuous service to the best interests of every element of the industry, and that policy is merely the business of honestly representing as accurately as may be the approach of interest of the buyer of the amusemnt merchandise.

It is to be assumed and understood in this industry that the motion picture exhibitor hopes that all pictures will be perfect. He knows they will not. He knows that none will be. But he has pictures to buy and to sell to his public. As he succeeds the industry succeeds. As he fails the industry fails.

If you would understand the spirit in which the exhibtor approaches both the product and reviews of the product, turn any week back to the department in Motion Picture Herald entitled "What the Picture Did for Me." There you will find enthusiasm for the winners, regrets for the good pictures that did not win, hope for the next one, all quite as ardent as the condemnation of the poignantly bad ones.

If a producer does not want his picture to be known as a "costume picture" it would be well to leave the costumes out of it. If he does not want to incur reference to obvious hurdles of censorship he might edit his script. It may be possible that these and other elements are deemed vitally necessary to the product. If so they are part of the merchandise which the exhibitor buys and which he has to sell, and assuredly he will do a better job with information than without it. The word "costume" is not especially a curse. Some "costume pictures" have set high marks in this industry. Also some elements which some of the several and sundry censor boards do not like may yet be proper parts of a picture and assets at the box office, but that does not mean that there is any service to the industry in their concealment.

We know of course exceedingly well that in Hollywood on its preview night every motion picture is perfect, every producer is a genius and all that. That is the night of the blossoming. But the harvest comes at the box offices of the nation.

The motion picture job is not done until the picture has gone to its public and until the home office accountant has written in the figure which completes the amortization of the negative. The processes which take place between the preview night and that final entry have to be carried on with some candor or everybody is cheated.

The review which tells the exhibitor what the product is about in such a manner that he can make up his own mind about it and what to do with it is an integral part of the business of the motion picture. No manipulation of the review aimed at keeping the exhibitor in the dark will help the final gross.

LE COQ REDIVIVUS

A BACKWARD glance at the day, now some three years past, when with the sale of its production assets Pathe Exchange, Inc., appeared to be on its rapid way to final liquidation and oblivion, makes the current lusty picture of the famous old corporation interesting indeed. The upward movement of Pathe securities and stocks in the market in the last year is a dollar index of the general estimate of the job that has been and is being done by Mr. Stuart Webb, president, who entered the service of the corporation in 1928 and subsequently became the successor of the Joseph P. Kennedy administration.

It is interesting to reflect that the rise of the Pathe concern in the United States was based quite as much upon its technological position, with its own-made motion picture raw stock and pioneer machine processing, as upon its dramatic output. Pathe, broadly speaking, was basically mostly a maker of film prints.

Today, by result of various whims of destiny, and its technological alliance and partnership with the DuPont film interests, Pathe enjoys its survival, health and hopes as a heritage of that same raw stock and laboratory foundation. The aggressive Gallic gamecock that symbolizes Pathe was the screen's first trademark. He's cocky yet.

DOUBLE FEATURES

Unanimous last week were members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association in condemnation of double featuring. They split, however, on method of elimination, some favoring an immediate and complete termination of the policy, others urging gradual reduction, eventual elimination. Further discussions are planned. . . .

MERGING CHARITIES

Under way is a movement in New York to merge the Film Daily Relief Fund, Motion Picture Charity Fund, ITOA Fund, three local film charities. A combined annual $25,000 to $35,000 is foreseen, with a resulting elimination of duplicated relief, experienced in the past. The recent AMPA dinner netted $15,000, destined for film charity. . . .

THREE LITTLE PIGS

In Pare Lorentz's "The Roosevelt Year" (Funk & Wagnalls), just published, in which the highlights of 1933 are pictorially recorded, two pages have gone to Walt Disney's "The Three Little Pigs," which with the theme song "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf" made screen history. The recent Toy Fair in New York and the antics of Barnum & Bailey's annual clowns are cited as new evidence of the popularity of the Disney creations. . . .

SECOND FIFTY

Via a new long term contract with MGM, May Robson, elderly trouper of stage and screen, has embarked on her second half-century of histrionics, having celebrated recently her fiftieth anniversary as a performer. . . .

BUCK AT THE FAIR

To the 1934 Century of Progress World's Fair in Chicago this summer will safari Frank Buck, trapper extraordinary, who goes in for something bigger than muskrats, and there exhibit a host of wild animals in a huge "camp" now under construction. . . .

UPTURN

Based on an increase in theatre receipts, L. J. Schlaifer, western division manager for United Artists, sees business heading upward, following a trip through Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho. . . .

RKO STUDIO BUILDING

Projected at the RKO Radio Coast studio is a building program which, with the expenditure of $500,000, calls for a four-story structure with a two-story tower which will house the National Broadcasting Company's Coast station. . . .

DAMAGES SUSTAINED

Sustained last week by the Colorado supreme court was a lower court decision which awarded to Mrs. Clara Moidel damages of $4,290 in her suit against Mr. and Mrs. F. Micheletti, on losses incurred in her purchase of the Comet theatre in Denver from the defendants. A "padded" house was the misrepresentation of attendance which Mrs. Moidel alleged in her suit. She had paid $6,000 for the house. . . .

CRIME DETECTOR

Francis X. Bushman, once the silent screen's matinee idol, appeared this week in Chicago as the sponsor of an invention of the motion picture which he claims will do its share in crime detection. Attached to the barrel of a gun is the tiny camera, which, in the event the arm of the law misses his target, will make a photographic record of what he would otherwise try to tell the sergeant. The inventor: Owen W. Atkin, Los Angeles. . . .

MISS CASTLE RETURNS

Back to the screen after an absence of 12 years has come Irene Castle (Mrs. F. T. McLaughlin), who first achieved notability as the dancing partner of her first husband, the late Vernon Castle. Under the Warner trademark Miss Castle will resume her screen career. . . .

"THUNDER" STILLED

The Union of Motion Picture Employees, which includes the personnel of all film houses in the federal district of Mexico City, has declared a ban on the Serge Eisenstein-Upton Sinclair "Thunder Over Mexico." Action of the union, based on the picture's alleged insistence on derogatory material, caused cancellation of a booking by one of the city's largest houses. . . .

RECEIVERS' FEES

To Jesse W. Barrett and Walter H. Nohl, who acted as receivers for Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., St. Louis, to November, 1933, circuit judge Henry Hamilton has allowed $6,000 each in fees, which followed a $2,000 payment. To Harry S. Rooks, attorney, went $10,000 full payment. . . .

BAD BARGAIN

In New York supreme court last week was filed a suit by Serge Ury Shiskin, asking $100,000 from Princess Irena Youssoupoff, recently awarded a verdict of $125,000 against MGM in London over alleged libel in "Rasputin and the Empress." Shiskin charges she failed to carry out their bargain that she split 50-50 in the MGM suit, if she won, in return for his assistance in the action. . . .

MPTO AND ALLIED SPONSOR PROTEST SESSIONS AGAINST SALES POLICIES

Each of 49 Exhibitor Organizations Asked to Consider 3 Conventions Within 2 Weeks; Allied Meeting May 12-13

With motion picture theatre owners fearing that the producer-distributors intend to pass along to them the costs of the motion picture code through higher rentals, larger percentages and demands for increased playing time in 1934-35, both Allied and the MPTO this week were organizing individual concerted protests.

Each of the country's 49 territorial organizations of theatre owners took under consideration the advisability of rallying to a "call to arms," which had been sent out independently by the militant MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, against distribution prices, practices and policies, "regardless of whose they are."

The call was in the form of a suggestion that each of the 49 exhibitor associations send representatives to one of three "film buyers' conventions" to be called within the next two weeks at New York, Chicago and on the west coast.

Immediately answering the call were a group of independent exhibitors in the east, led by Dave Barrist, Philadelphia, and Harry Brandt and Louis Blumenthal, New York, who, acting as a committee, decided that the first meeting will be held in New York next Tuesday, at the New York Motion Picture Club.

At the same time, Allied States Association broadcast from its headquarters at Washington an appeal to every exhibitor leader of Allied to be on hand at a special meeting at the Congress hotel, Chicago, on May 12 and 13, for the same purpose.

The keynotes of the MPTO and of the Allied messages were virtually identical.

Meanwhile, in distribution circles, both large and small companies were proceeding with the drafting of 1934-35 production schedules and sales policies, to be presented at their regular sales conventions.

Directly relating to 1934-35 merchandising practices are the problems of double features, 5 and 10-cent admissions and premiums, which will be disposed of by an executive committee of the parent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at a special meeting shortly in New York, to carry into action the decisions and policies adopted at the Los Angeles convention.

The MPTOA would curb double bills by one of three plans, the first through the aid of distributors, who would be asked to insert into sales contracts a provision giving single bookings a discount, or imposing a penalty for showing another feature with a single booking. The second proposal is to obtain unanimous exhibitor approval of a double feature ban in the principal territories. A third plan would make the practice prohibitive, through a special code clause, when a majority in any territory so rule.

Urging exhibitors everywhere to seek relief against "confiscatory rentals," the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, in its message to the 49 territorial exhibitor organizations, issued over the weekend from headquarters at Philadelphia, charged that the various sales conventions now being called by the larger film companies are for the avowed intent of passing the whole NRA costs on to the exhibitors in increased film rentals, and, therefore, it is imperative that the independent theatre men of the country immediately call a "national film buyers' convention" to take effective measures for protection.

"Higher percentages, increased numbers of percentage pictures, 'stiff' guarantees with overages, preferred playing time, right to interchange, score charges—all of these have created a lop-sided and intolerable condition that is fast diminishing our income, causing our theatre investments to dwindle," said the statement from the Pennsylvania MPTO group.

"Film costs have reached the breaking point," they charged, adding that "exhibitors today are working for the film companies, the landlords, and the unions."

The statement did not divulge any definite plans for relief, but indicated that such plans had been drawn. The group recommended:

"1. The calling within the next two weeks of three section 'Film Buyers' Conventions': In New York, Chicago and the west coast.

"2. Each organization to be represented by two delegates, equipped with facts and figures regarding their territory, and qualified to speak on behalf of their constituents regarding purchasing power and the measure of cooperation that can be counted on from their territory.

"3. Each convention to be strictly non-partisan, non-political and to be confined solely to devising an effective program against ruinous film prices."

The association urged the exhibitors to act quickly, because of the proximity of the new buying season.

Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia is the president of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, which seeks to bring together all independent owners in protest against distributors' alleged excessive rental prices.

George P. Aarons, secretary of the Pennsylvania MPTO, said that "failure at this time to protest, will only serve to confirm the major film companies in their belief that there is no limit to what the exhibitors will pay, and the next season will find still higher film rentals."

Allied Sounds Alarm

"Unless exhibitor organizations can rally and lead their members in this crucial campaign they had better disband," said the statement from Allied, urging attendance by all leaders.

"It is commonly accepted that the producers will demand higher rentals, increased percentages and extension of preferred playing time," said Allied, adding, "Whenever labor made a demand during the code proceedings the producers waved the flag and agreed, knowing that the burden could be passed on to the exhibitors. Moreover, they propose to pass along the entire cost of administering the code, as well as the cost (if any) of the so-called 10 per cent cancellation clause," said Allied, calling the MPTOA Los Angeles convention a failure from every point of view save eating.

The Maryland Motion Picture Theatre Owners board of directors met at Baltimore, late last week, and resolved that the organization voice vigorous disapproval of exhibitors engaging in the production business and producer-distributors engaging in the exhibition business. Allied States has under advisement a plan for producing features for 1934-35, and will decide the question within two weeks, or thereabouts.

Theatre Owners Envision Intent to Saddle Code Costs on Them by Higher Rentals and Increased Playing Time

The Cleveland Exhibitors' Association was preparing to decide the fate of dual features, while in New York the Independent Theatre Owners' Association had held meetings with RKO sales officers to straighten out differences between the two over RKO sales policies.

In California, 350 exhibitors and several producers attended a special mass meeting in Hollywood and the exhibitors decided that duals would end in southern California within a few weeks.

Representing the exhibitors was Ben Berinstein; the large producers, B. B. Kahane, and the independents, I. E. Chadwick.

The meeting took a standing vote to abolish duals, after I. E. Chadwick denounced block booking.

Distributors' Sales Plans for 1934-35

The following distribution developments were announced this week:

Audio Productions was lining up 13 to 14 two-reel Technicolor shorts for 1934-35, three having already been completed by Robert Bruce.

Monte Brice was preparing a feature on the Coast for independent distribution.

Sidney R. Kent, president, and Winfield Sheehan, Fox production head, were discussing 1934-35 plans in Hollywood, with the tentative schedule set at 58 features, four to be made in England by Gaumont-British. Mr. Sheehan will oversee all production, it was said, but concentrate on nine features. Jesse Lasky again will make eight; Al Rockett will have four and Sol Wurtzel will make 19, of which John Stone will produce nine. There will be eight features in Spanish.

Some of the proposed Fox product includes: "The World Moves On," probably to be released as a special two-a-day roadshow; "Marie Galante" (Sheehan production), Henry King directing; "Servants' Entrance" (Sheehan), starring Janet Gaynor with Frank Lloyd directing; "Cassanova" (Lasky production); "The Red Head" (Lasky); "The Apple Tree" (Lasky); "The Flight of the Swan" (Lasky), based on the life of Anna Pavlowa.

Others will be: "Judge Priest" (Wurtzel production), starring Will Rogers; "County Chairman" (Wurtzel), also with Rogers; "Caravan," first by Erik Charell, with Charles Boyer; "Music in the Air," Erich Pommer producing.

Additional Wurtzel productions will be: "State vs. Elinor Norton," with Helen Twelvetrees; "Dante's Inferno," to be made as a special; "Wanted," with Hugh Williams; "Love Time," starring Lilian Harvey; "Charley Chan in London," "Charley Chan in Paris"; "Twenty-four Hours a Day," with Claire Trevor; and, "365 Nites in Hollywood," also starring Miss Harvey.

John Stone will make 8 Spanish pictures with Raoul Roulien, Jose Mojica, Rosita Moreno, Catalina Barcena and Conchita Montenegro. E. W. Butcher, now Fox production

Exhibitors Do Something

Ever since the feature length motion picture was graduated from its roadshow novitiate and became the dominant element of screen theatre programs, mid-picture admissions resulting from the continuous exhibition policy have been a problem. Down the years it has been debated—and nothing done.

Now the rise and evolution of the sound picture, with its vital sequences of dialogue, has made the old problem a new one with new acuteness.

As the motion picture has grown more complex and involved in form and technique with its acquisition of the spoken word, and with the characterizations of parts supplanting the automatic narration which the silent picture achieved by casting, it has become increasingly necessary to see the picture from the beginning to give it meaning.

In an article presented a fortnight ago Mr. Martin Quigley re-presented this large problem of showmanship in the pages of Motion Picture Herald, with a resulting response of discussion from showmen all across the nation, and from metropolitan first runs to "the sticks," and from Hollywood to Broadway.

Meanwhile, most interestingly, not a few of the exhibitors have started to do something about it all. The result is coming into evidence in various forms, in newspaper advertising of exhibition hours for the feature picture, in editorial presentations of "movie clocks" giving starting times, and in various expedients in lobby displays calculated to inform the public.

The showmen of the land are interested, again an evidence of the creative functions that pertain to exhibition and the very real partnership of the theatre in all that pertains to the destiny of the industry—this despite the frequent Hollywood assertions of the priority and dominance of the production department.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

In the following expressions exhibitors, producers and distributors set forth their own viewpoints:

DARRYL ZANUCK

The producer of Twentieth Century pictures has had a wide experience in production. In 1928 he became associate executive in charge of Warner Bros. Pictures, and in 1931 chief executive in charge of all productions of the Warner and First National studios, in association with Jack L. Warner. Last year, with Joseph M. Schenck, he formed Twentieth Century.

Your article "The Public Be Damned" was stated with such fullness and so articulately that there is little left to be said to amplify it—and certainly nothing in refutation.

You have laid the point of your pen against one of the severest burdens against which the producers of films must labor.

My only criticism is your contention that Hollywood does not realize the evil of a system wherein the film public is permitted to see a picture from any other point than the start of the story. We are fully cognizant of the harm done us—but what can we do about it? It is not our problem.

We make the pictures. The exhibitors show them. If the exhibitor makes the argument that insistence on the public being present at the start of the picture would cut down the aggregate of his receipts, he is ignoring the fact that he in the long run suffers with us. For, since it prevents the fullest enjoyment of the picture, and can also make a good story seem bad, it tends to lessen the drawing power of films. And, as the public must see the picture in the theatre, the theatre sufferes in receipts. The exhibitor should see his argument lacks foundation.

Certainly we try our utmost to give the fullest value of entertainment and quality in our productions. We hazard many thousands of dollars to gain added quality in mere details of our pictures where we could save money by being slipshod. Our motto is: "The Public Be Served." The exhibitor could well afford at least to try to follow our example.

A. B. JEFFERIS

Manager of the New Piedmont Theatre at Piedmont, Mo., Mr. Jefferis comments from the standpoint of the exhibitor in the smaller community.

My sympathy is not with the late comers, but rather with the people who have come in on time, and are disturbed by the late comers crawling over them for seats. We advertise two shows each night, at 7 and 9 P. M., with a continuous matinee Sunday, starting at 3 P. M., with shows starting at 3, 5, 7 and 9 P. M.

Of course, our town is small, and we are not confronted with the continuous inflow of people during the showing of the feature that the city theatres have. . . .

HERMAN J. BROWN

Mr. Brown, of the Inland Amusement Company at Nampa, Idaho, operating the New Majestic and the Adelaide theatres, is a frequent commentator on pertinent developments of show business.

Not long since I read the bitter complaint of a producer that if he made a picture, he wanted it run at such times, and under such conditions, that people saw it from beginning to end.

Now it will probably be a shock to him to hear that every exhibitor in America has spent hundreds of hours on this problem, and has often taken heavy losses in experiments to help the situation. Not only that but every exhibitor in America heartily sympathizes with the gentleman and will underwrite every word he says.

BUT, we poor benighted exhibitors have had long experience, and, what the gentleman has not had, we have had many experiments, and the reason we run as we do is simple; The Americano forces us to run as we do, or penalizes us with a money loss if we don't.

As to the why of this, regard, if you please, these facts in American psychology. Motion Pictures have always lacked dignity. The producers, I call the producing gentlemen's attention, have always emphasized the fact that it was a trifling business —remember the "Film Manufacturing Companies," of 1910— the "Movies" of silent days, and now huge concerns with many millions at stake call their product in their press sheets "Talkies." The kind of man and the kind of brain that calls "Cimarron" and "Back Street" and "All Quiet on the Western Front," a Talkie, is the man that has created the background psychology of this business. It, by the way, is the thing that has brought us to double and triple billing in enormous deluxe theatres whose very press agents, in a last clutch for dignity, are called "Publicity Representatives" and similar pompous titles. No matter how they talk of "Managing Directors" they are riff-raff if the thing they do is to show "Talkies" or run a "Film Manufacturing Company." I think that gives the psychology forced on the public, by the industry itself, that lacks brains to realize that it purveys a great and vital art, that fails to realize that "Cimarron" and "All Quiet on The Western Front" are masterpieces in any art's valuations.

Now, please, consider the Americano. The holy public we are told, is always right. That is all right to tell the public— but it is untrue. The American public as often as not is foolish, greedy, and entirely unfair, and above all it has low cultural standards.

If you doubt it, consider the restaurant. Good food in real restaurants was once common in America. First they moved the tables out of the restaurants, and America mounted stools in restaurants; then they served vile food in drug stores which the Americano gobbled sitting on stools; finally came the sandwich shops with their beastly mayonnaise on roast beef, and whipped cream in the soup. America now ate not food but slops, in drug stores, markets, boot black parlors, etc.

Now eating is an art. Cooking is an art. It requires time, culture and brain to eat right, and genius of the first water surpassing by miles any other art, to cook right. Watch your Americano coming for his grub. He eats or gobbles at all hours, the crazier the better, and his whole idea is to eat at the place where he can be served fastest, where the girls wear fancy caps, or where the stuff is messed up in plain sight by a man who should be washing autos, and is called a cook. Now let's get back to cold cash and the show business. The public thinks of itself as going to "Movies" made by "Film Manufacturers." They go when they want to go. They figuratively mount the amusement stools, gobble their "talkies," and go.

Advertise starting hours and what happens. The phone rings—you tell the starting time asked. They hang up. They tell those present with them that the show starts at 9 p.m. (they have called, say, at 8:30). They then take four more drinks around—they look at the clock—it is 9:45. They go to your competitor whose time they don't know.

The same thing happens. If they don't call up, they look up the time in the paper. If you are lucky they come. Unusually, in the nature of things, they can't hit the moment, they go to your competitor who saves advertising money and don't tell his starting time. Now let me again say, that this does a wrong to the best class of patrons. Those who take their Talking Pictures (poor name, and a cheap witless name—the industry has never evolved a good name) seriously, would, if need be, wait a whole hour to start the show right; they come to see a work of art. These people are cheated by the sandwich eaters in drug stores who also come, and who are America.

I would like to run one dignified show a night at a fixed and advertised hour. If I do I will go broke. Why? Because it is out of step with the tempo of the age.

JACK COHN

Vice-president of Columbia Pictures, Mr. Cohn dates his connection with the industry back to 1908 when he entered the laboratory of Carl Laemmle's Imp Company.

There is no denying that Martin Quigley's presentation of the evil outlined in "The Public Be Damned" is both masterly and logical. Unfortunately, however, there are times when logic and the motion picture business do not seem to go hand-in-hand. Like the Chinese, we frequently give the impression that we like to do things backwards, but as a general rule there is always a good reason for the "modus operandi."

Motion pictures obtained a firm hold upon the affections of the public because they are a moderately priced amusement and because the public realizes that the show can be seen at any reasonable time of the day or night. In the course of the years the motion picture patron became accustomed to dropping in at his and her own convenience and this habit is now ingrained.

Let's look at the facts from a practical angle. If a picture is good, the average patron doesn't care when he comes in to see it, and this is demonstrated every day by the long lines that assemble outside a theatre where a hit picture is playing. The audience does make sense out of the attraction, no matter which part of it it views first, and in no way does this seem to injure its appreciation of good entertainment. On the other hand, bad pictures remain bad whether viewed from the beginning, middle, or hind end to. Consequently, as I see it, the argument Mr. Quigley advances that the present mode of presentation is the cause of bad business is not in accordance with the facts.

I happen to be an inveterate theatre goer, and I give my patronage not only to the Broadway first run theatres, but to any theatre, wherever located, which happens to show a picture I want to see. Because of this, my own observation has made it plain that if a picture is good, people will crowd in to see it at any time—and still like it. . . .

I totally disagree with Mr. Quigley in his belief that the present method of showing pictures represents a "Public Be Damned" attitude, because the showman, in my opinion, is much smarter than Mr. Quigley gives him credit for being. The present policy has been tested and tried by time. I venture to state that many of these theatre owners have upon various occasions endeavored to educate the public into attending the theatre in accordance with Mr. Quigley's beliefs and the fact that the public still continues to follow its own sweet desires in the matter indicates that as a problem it is not existent.

There is just one way in which either the truth or the fallacy of the arguments advanced in the article in question can be definitely determined and that is by a careful and conscientious survey, which can be held right here in Greater New York. . . .

GEORGE W. TRENDLE

The president of United Detroit Theatres Corporation, operating nine houses at Detroit, Mich., has long been a leading voice in exhibition in the Northwest territory.

I can agree with Mr. Quigley that it is not the ideal way to see a picture. From a practical standpoint it is utterly impossible, in my opinion, to operate motion picture houses on the policy that he suggests. It has been tried in Detroit on several occasions, both at high prices and at low prices.

The public has become so accustomed to dropping into motion picture theatres at all times of the day that setting a specific hour for the opening of the picture makes no difference to the patron.

We endeavor to advertise the opening times of all features in all houses but they persist in dropping in at all hours of the day and I believe that it would take more than a concerted movement, at the present time, to change their habits. It would not only require that every exhibitor definitely schedule their shows for certain performances and prohibit people from coming into the show after the performance started, but it would mean such a terrible loss in revenue while that sort of plan was gathering weight that I don't think an exhibitor in the country at the present time could stand the loss that the inauguration of such a plan would entail. I am still sold on the thought that the motion picture business, except in very rare instances, should be carried on as a continuous performance available to the public at any time during theatre hours.

IRVING MACK

The sales manager of Filmack Trailer Company, Chicago, writes that his company, within a week after the publication of the original article, had received seven inquiries as to trailers on the subject.

There seems to be a belief that people don't read Editorials—but they must have read the one that Martin Quigley wrote on "The Public Be Damned."

Since the paper came out, we've had seven inquiries regarding trailers on this subject.

KOHN RESIGNS FROM PARAMOUNT PUBLIX

Richards Will Head Saenger Theatres Under New Plan; Paramount Broadway Reorganization Plan for Court Approval

Ralph A. Kohn resigned this week as vice-president and director of Paramount Publix Corporation in charge of all theatre operations. He had occupied this position for exactly eight and one-half months, succeeding Sam Dembow, Jr., who had taken the post after the resignation of Sam Katz late in 1932.

Mr. Kohn's resignation is effective at once. No successor has been named.

With Paramount 20 Years

Ralph A. Kohn has been associated with Paramount Publix and its predecessor companies for the last 20 years. Immediately following his graduation from law school in 1913, he became a member of the law firm of Elek John Ludvigh, then counsel for Famous Film Players Company, of which Adolph Zukor was president. In 1914 Mr. Kohn was elected assistant general counsel and assistant secretary of Famous Players.

On organization of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in 1916, Mr. Kohn was given identical positions in the new company and served in these capacities until 1918, at which time he was given a leave of absence for the duration of the War. He enlisted as a private in the Signal Corps, and later was commissioned as a second lieutenant.

After the War, Mr. Kohn returned to Famous Players in his former duties and in 1922 was elected a member of the board of directors and also assistant treasurer. On the formation of Paramount Productions, Inc., Paramount International and Paramount Distributing Corporation in November, 1932, he was elected a director, vice-president and treasurer of each of these three subsidiaries.

When Mr. Kohn was placed in charge of Paramount theatre operations last August, Walter B. Cokell, formerly asistant treasurer to Mr. Kohn, was elevated into Mr. Kohn's position.

Richards To Head Southern Circuit

At the same time it was announced that E. V. Richards, operating receiver for Saenger Theatres, will head the large southern circuit as a Paramount operating partner under the reorganization plan which soon will take the circuit out of receivership.

The proposal is understood to call for the issuance of new stock in a company to be organized in accordance with the creditors' plan. Paramount, with investments in and advances to Saenger amounting to approximately $7,500,000, is the largest creditor. Paramount will exchange its claims against Saenger for stock in the new company, it is understood, and will continue Mr. Richards as operating partner of the circuit.

A plan of reorganization for the Paramount Broadway Corporation was agreed to on Monday, prior to announcement of Mr. Kohn's resignation, by a protective committee for the holders of the bonds and by the Paramount Publix trustees. Paramount Publix controls Paramount Broadway. The plan will become effective as of Monday if it is approved by the bankruptcy court.

Under the plan, arrears of taxes and penalties on the Paramount Building, which houses the Paramount theatre and the company home offices, amounting to $540,331, were paid Monday, Peter Grimm, chairman of the protective committee, announced. The taxes are for 1933 and the first half of 1934.

All capital stock of Paramount Broadway is owned by Paramount Publix, and the Broadway corporation has a funded debt of $8,875,000 first mortgage 5½ per cent 25-year sinking fund gold certificates. The Stock Exchange lists $6,193,500 of the bonds and $2,681,500 of the certificates of deposit issued by the Chemical Bank & Trust Co.

The Paramount Building originally was leased to Paramount Publix for 25 years from January 1, 1926, at an annual rental equal to the largest amount required for interest and sinking fund on the building's 5½ per cent certificates. The lessee also assumed payment of all operating expenses and taxes.

The plan of reorganization agreed upon, according to Mr. Grimm, includes a provision for conversion of Paramount Broadway bonds into new bonds of the same denomination, with fixed interest of 3 per cent per annum until 50 per cent of the $8,875,000 principal amount are retired, and thereafter at a fixed interest rate of 5½ per cent per annum. Included is a payment of an additional 2½ per cent annually as yearly interest, if earned by the Paramount Building, on which the bonds are to be a first mortgage lien.

Space Lease Involved

The plan provides for a lease by Paramount Publix of a large amount of space in the Paramount Building for a term of 10 years, or until the payment of one-half of the bonds, whichever is done first. A lease on the Paramount theatre will be guaranteed by the new Paramount Publix Corporation—which under reorganization will acquire the assets of the present Paramount Publix Corporation—on a minimum fixed rental, subject to a graduated scale dependent on gross percentages.

A sinking fund of $200,000 annually will be provided for until half of the bonds are retired, and thereafter all income after payment of 5½ per cent yearly interest on the bonds will be applied to sinking fund purposes. The bonds will be callable at any interest date at par with accrued fixed interest and accrued additional interest provided.

The new Paramount Publix Corporation, according to the plan, is to deliver a guarantee of 3 per cent annual fixed interest within a year and of the retirement not less than $100,000 par value bonds during each year. In the event of failure to meet the guarantee, the corporation will deliver to the trustees of the bondholders 50 per cent of the stock of the company which is to own the Paramount Building—that is, 50 per cent of the equity of that building.

Representation of Paramount Broadway Corporation on the board of the new Paramount Publix Corporation also is included. The plan provides for a general release of claims between Paramount Publix and Paramount Broadway.

William Clark an Assistant Sales Head at Educational

Appointment of William J. Clark as assistant sales manager of Educational was announced Tuesday by President E. W. Hammons. Mr. Clark recently returned from Australia, where he had served as managing director of Paramount.

manager, will make two, and possibly four, after his elevation to the associated producer class, which is expected shortly.

Fox completed the production of its 1933-34 feature schedule this week, and, at the same time, advanced its 1934-35 sales convention to May 30-June 1. It will be at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, with John D. Clark, general sales manager, and William Sussman, his assistant, presiding over 260 delegates.

Nat Levine's Mascot Pictures announced 10 features and two specials, as follows: "Crimson Romance," "Confidential," "One Frightened Night," "Waterfront Lady," "Headlines," "The Marines Have Landed," "Man from Headquarters," "Streamline Express," "Along Came a Woman," and "Anything Once," and the specials: "Young and Beautiful" and "Harmony Lane." At the same time, Mr. Levine engaged as associate producers: Louis A. Sarecky, Martin Cohn, Louis Baum and Sig Neufeld.

Monogram Regional Meetings

W. Ray Johnston, president, announced during the week that Monogram will conduct three regional sales meetings in the field, beginning May 26, at Salt Lake, and to be followed on June 2, in Cincinnati, and June 29, New York.

Other Monogram activities included the signing in Hollywood of Robert Welsh, former general manager of Universal Pictures and former Paramount producer, as executive producer under Trem Carr, vice-president in charge of Coast activities. Norton Ritchey sold the entire Monogram product of 1933-34 for distribution in Italy.

The resignation of Lou Ostrow as Monogram production executive will become effective on June 1, and Mr. Ostrow will then enter independent production.

Henry Ginsberg, general manager for the Hal Roach short subjects organization, which distributes through Metro, said this week that the program for 1934-35 will not be definitely established until June.

Paramount Sales Executives Meet

Paramount's sales executives were in Chicago for a two-day regional discussion of 1934-35 sales policies and plans, including the company's stand on double features, minimum admissions, percentage playing and other topics.

Mr. Schaefer said the company's theatre associates will attend the national convention in Los Angeles June 18-20, at which will be announced titles of 1934-35 releases, to include 60 features, 100 one and 24 two-reelers.

Radio Pictures' 1934-35 feature program may be augmented by eight pictures which Richard A. Rowland may make. One would be made in the East, with Mr. Rowland having already started in New York to look over story possibilities. The company will probably announce 50 features at its sales convention, to be held in Chicago, beginning June 18.

Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor, will arrive in New York on May 8 for a discussion of next season's plans.

Twenty features probably will constitute the 1934-35 release schedule of United Artists, with Darryl Zanuck's 20th Century contributing eight or ten, as compared with 12 this season, and Samuel Goldwyn making four. Three each are expected from Edward Small, Reliance and London Film, of England.

Universal's product next season will have the benefit of a regular studio stock company. The sales convention will be in New York June 5-7, regional sessions to follow. Planned are 36 features, 26 two and 51 one-reelers.

Warners will continue to release Leon Schlesinger's cartoon comedy shorts.

CHASE SELLS TENTH OF FOX FILM INTEREST TO ATLAS AND FLEMING

$3,000,000 Sale to Investment Trusts Includes Option to Buy 15 Per Cent More, at Figure Exceeding $6,000,000

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The financial overlords of Wall Street this week viewed with more than passing interest, and no little speculation, the sale by Chase National Bank of a 10 per cent interest in Fox Film Corporation, which it controls, to two of the world's largest investment trusts: the Atlas Corporation, New York, and the Fleming group, of London. Reasons given for the transaction varied, none official.

The sale price was $3,000,000, and with it went an option for the purchase by the same interests of another 15 per cent of Fox, likewise held by Chase, for a sum to exceed $6,000,000. Execution of the option would make the Atlas-Fleming combination the second largest holders of Fox stock, next to Chase.

First Divestment by Chase

Marking the first divestment by Chase of its large holdings in the Fox motion picture production and distribution corporations, the deal was accomplished with some suddenness over the weekend, when the British banking house of Balfour, Boardman and Company, London, purchased for the Atlas and Fleming interests 200,000 shares of Fox Film Class A stock from the Chase Bank, paying $15 per share, and, at the same time, secured options to purchase later, at a substantially higher but unnamed figure, two additional blocks of the Fox A stock, each of 200,000 shares, from the Chase holdings.

Floyd B. Odlum, president of the Atlas Corporation — which has enormous public utility investments, together with substantial holdings in Loew's and Warners—said publicly that the Fox stock purchase was purely an investment and was not made with the view of obtaining control of the motion picture corporation from Chase. In any event, there were no indications that the new arrangement will immediately disturb the personnel of Fox, or the corporate setup.

However, with announcement of consummation of the deal, Wall Street, Broadway and Hollywood Boulevard, and the motion picture and financial sectors of foggy London, began to hum with reports, private opinions and reputedly "inside lowdown" on the why and wherefore of the disposal by Chase of a part of the $23,240,000 of Fox Film Class A stock which it holds. A harvest of these fertile fields of speculation netted the following supposed "reasons" for the Atlas-Fleming deal:

1. That it marked the first step in a gradual disposal by Chase of its entire Fox Film holdings, along with other investments, in order that Chase might meet federal banking regulations.
2. That it was merely an ordinary investment by the Atlas and Fleming investment trusts, and will have no bearing on future Fox control.
3. That Chase was disposing of a part of its holdings to both the American and British investing public in order to realize some cash on its heavy investment in Fox.
4. That the purchasers were acting for the powerful Ostrer banking group of London, which controls Gaumont, and which was said to be intent upon obtaining Fox as an outlet for Gaumont pictures in this country.
5. That the Chase interests, anticipating rigid stock market regulations from Congress, want the Fox stock off the New York Stock Exchange and intend making London the future trading center.
6. That Atlas and Fleming are seeking to purchase control of Fox as a step in widespread motion picture expansion.

The Balfour, Boardman banking group negotiated the purchase solely as intermediaries, and, so far as is known, had no intention of retaining any part of the Fox stock. However, the identities of Atlas and Fleming interests as the real buyers did not become known until after the deal had been consummated.

British headquarters of Balfour, Boardman, in London, refused to discuss the matter, dismissing inquiries with the vague reply that it was "purely private."

Walter Hutchinson, managing director for Fox in London, said that Balfour, Boardman acted independently of Chase, even though both Messrs. Balfour and Boardman are the Chase-Fox nominees on the directorate of Gaumont British, and were both previously associated with Chase, Harris and Forbes, of London, the British security affiliate of the Chase interests.

In Wall Street, it was generally believed that the deal merely represented the placing of a portion of the Fox stock in British investment hands, with London, too, believing that the shares will be sold gradually to the public.

Isidore Ostrer, head of the noted Ostrer banking group, was not available at his London office.

Fox Shares on Sale in London

What appeared to be partial confirmation of the opinion that the deal was made to satisfy an ordinary British investment demand came over the weekend, in London, when a line of the Fox shares was placed for sale and a report was heard that others will be offered in Paris and Amsterdam in a few days.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, has been in Hollywood talking over 1934-35 production ideas with Winfield Sheehan. He admitted Tuesday that he had received a long-distance telephone call about the sale from Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase board. Mr. Aldrich asked Mr. Kent if he had any objection to the sale of the shares to the British interests, and he replied negatively, he said.

Mr. Kent said that the probability was extremely strong that the British deal was engineered by Chase as part of its plan gradually to reduce its holdings in Fox, and that it would result finally in removal of Fox securities from listing on the New York Stock Exchange and their listing on the London stock board. Mr. Kent would not discuss this aspect any further, but it appears that one important reason for effecting such a plan would be the anticipation by Chase of rigid stock market regulations by Congress.

Mr. Kent indicated that, so far as he knew, Gaumont British interests had no participation in the arrangement whatsoever, and, therefore, the deal does not presage a closer tieup there.

Asked whether the stock transfer to the Atlas-Fleming groups might mean future British financing of Fox Film operations, Mr. Kent replied: "It may mean many things, but all of them are in the future right now."

Another turn was given the somewhat perplexing situation when unofficial spokesmen for the Chase interests in New York pointed out that the federal banking laws require Chase to dispose of its common stock holdings in Fox ultimately, and that Mr. Aldrich, as board chairman, has variously said in public that it is the bank's policy to relinquish such holdings within a reasonable time, after which it would concentrate exclusively on ordinary banking activities. It was intimated that under this policy Chase's entire Fox holdings of 1,549,507 shares, remaining after the sale to Atlas-Fleming, will eventually be disposed of.

Chase recently disposed in the open market of some 130,000 shares of Loew's, Inc., acquired as its equity in defaulted notes of Film Securities Corporation.

Too, Chase proposes to give the receivers of General Theatres Equipment an option to purchase some 325,000 shares of Fox Film Class A stock, at $15 per share.

In any event, the stock purchase last week by the Atlas-Fleming interests had the following effect on the structure of the Fox Film Class A stock:

	Number of Class A Shares	*Valuations (Based on $15 a Share)
Total Shares Outstanding.....	2,419,759	$36.296,385
Chase Holdings (Including Options Secured by Atlas-Fleming for 400,000 Shares).....	1,549,507	23,242,605
Atlas-Fleming Holdings (Not Including Options for 400,000 Shares)	200,000	3,000,000
Shares Held by Miscellaneous Interests	670,252	10,053,790
Chase Holdings if Present Options of Atlas-Fleming Are Executed	1,149,507	17,242,605
Atlas-Fleming Holdings if Options Are Executed.....	600,000	9,000,000

(*) Present average market price of Class A shares. Fox Film Class A shares have been quoted as follows: October 1, 1933, $15 a share; November 1, $14.25; December 1, $14; January 1, 1934, $13.75; February 1, $15.75; March 1, $15; April 1, $15.50; May 1, $16.

The transaction, giving effect to the future execution of the Atlas-Fleming 400,000-share option, would leave the Chase group holding less than a majority interest, with 1,149,507 Class A shares, as against 1,270,252 shares which would be held by Atlas and Fleming and other minority holders.

However, and even if the receivers for the bankrupt General Theatres decide to execute their option for 325,000 additional shares, the Chase interests would continue in control of Fox Film.

The Class A stock controls Fox, with nine of the 12 directors elected by the A shareholders. Four consecutive quarterly dividends of $1 a share must be paid on the Class B stock before the B shareholders can get control, electing seven out of 12 directors, A electing only five. The last payment made on the B stock was for 62½ cents a share for the quarter ended July 1, 1931. Chase is also the owner of virtually all of the Class B, some 16,650 shares.

Regardless, the entrance of the British Fleming interests in the Fox-Chase picture this week aroused considerable conjecture in motion picture circles in London over the English ramifications involved, in view of the large Fox-Chase interests in Gaumont British Pictures, Ltd., one of the largest producing-distributing organizations in the Kingdom, and operator of some 300 theatres throughout England.

CHASE DEAL IN ENGLAND

Investment in England

The Fox-Chase investment in England, as reported on the last balance sheet, consisted of $17,087,618 in Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company, Ltd., of London, which holds the Fox-Chase interest in Gaumont British. This interest is said to approximate about 50 per cent control of Gaumont. In addition, there is a Fox-Chase investment of some $551,000 in Hoyt's Theatres, Ltd., consisting of advances to the company only.

The Fleming investment trusts are among the most important in England, controlling approximately 15 large companies in a group built up by the late Robert Fleming. Several American investment trust groups, including the Atlas Corporation, have maintained close contacts with the Flemings in London for several years. The Fleming trust is said to be close to the Ostrer group in Gaumont British.

Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas Corporation, has been building up a powerful investment trust continuously during the depression. Wall Street estimates the investments of the corporation in stocks and bonds of many industries, as well as in railroads and public utilities, at $125,000,000, reputedly built from $15,000,000 in a few years.

$5,000,000 in Film Corporations

Its present holdings in motion picture corporations approximate $5,000,000, not including its $3,000,000 of Fox options acquired last week from Chase.

The general opinion held by financial experts is that Atlas and the Fleming group evenly divided the 200,000 Fox shares purchased for $3,000,000, giving each $1,500,000 in Fox holdings. The options for an additional 400,000 shares would represent an investment of at least $3,000,000 for each group. Besides these, Atlas holds $3,000,000 of Warner Brothers convertible 6 per cent bonds, due in 1939, and 18,434 shares of common stock of Loew's, Inc., worth about $608,322, based on average market valuations for the week.

Atlas was one of the principal note holders of Film Securities Corporation, which held 660,900 shares of Loew's stock. When Film Securities defaulted and its assets were taken over, Atlas received its proportionate share of Loew holdings, of which Atlas still retains 18,434 shares.

Close British Connections

The Atlas Corporation has close British connections through its two subsidiaries, the American British and Continental Corporation and Atlas Utilities and Investors Company, Ltd.

Mr. Odlum's directorial and executive posts have extended from the Electric Bond and Share Company and National Power and Light Company, into numerous European, Cuban and South American public utilities. He recently told stockholders of the Atlas trust that the company's policy would be to make a number of investments of a diversified nature in fields ordinarily neglected by investment trusts.

Balfour, Boardman and Company, Ltd., which negotiated the purchase of the Fox stock and secured the options on additional shares for Mr. Odlum's Atlas company and the Fleming group, is one of the largest investment banking houses in England, where it represents large financial and industrial interests. Oswald Balfour is head of the corporation and is a member of the Lord Balfour clan. Mr. Dixon Boardman, a Fox-Chase representative on the Gaumont British board of directors, formerly was in charge of the London security office of Chase.

The whole deal involving the Atlas-Fleming purchase of the Fox shares was being studied by the British Treasury authorities, who may possibly voice opposition as it is said technically to violate the government's ban on exports of capital. The ban has been in effect since 1931, and, despite repeated refusals, the government has refused to rescind it.

The powerful Chase National Bank obtained its large holdings of Fox Film Corporation and subsidiaries as the result of a series of highly complicated financial transactions that began when the Fox corporation was threatened with receivership, early in 1930. On April 7 of that year, General Theatres Equipment, Inc., headed by Harley Clarke, Chicago public utility power, bought control of the Fox interests from William Fox, the founder, for $15,000,000 in cash and other considerations, which eventually amounted to $6,000,000, according to testimony given last November before the Senate Banking Committee at Washington, in the course of its stock market inquiry into Chase financing of the Fox and General Theatres.

General Theatres had entered into extensive financing in which its holdings of Fox Film were placed as collateral. The equipment corporation went into receivership in February, 1932.

In addressing Chase shareholders at their annual meeting on January 9, last, Mr. Winthrop Aldrich, board chairman, said that substantial headway had been made in improving and protecting the interest of the bank in the various Fox Film and General Theatres corporations. He said that Fox was then operating profitably.

Reorganization Last Year

When the threat of receivership again menaced Fox Film last year, the Chase controlling interests effected a reorganization. This was put into effect last August, and involved a drastic scaling down of the company's debt, realized in part through the acceptance by creditors of Class A shares.

Testifying at Washington before the Senate Committee, last November, Mr. Aldrich said that the Chase investment in Fox, which had cost nearly $90,000,000, had been written down to $20,000,000, showing a loss of $70,000,000. He indicated that Chase was carrying its holdings of 1,749,507 Class A Fox shares at $10,036,563, after reserves and writeoffs totaling $19,083,000. It was disclosed also that Chase had written off $15,000,000 principal amount of two-year notes of Wesco Corporation, Fox theatre subsidiary, although bank loans of $4,390,000 to subsidiaries of Wesco were being carried at full value.

The net report of Fox Film for the 39 weeks ended on Dec. 30, 1933, showed a net profit of $1,410,793, after all charges, equal to 58 cents a share on the 2,436,409 combined Class A and B shares outstanding. This compared with a net loss of $7,595,100 in the 40 weeks ended on Dec. 31, 1932.

Fox Film on Wednesday reported a net profit, before federal taxes, of $930,000 for the 13 weeks ended March 31, 1934. This compares with a loss of $557,000 for the same quarter of 1933.

After deducting $125,000 for federal taxes, the net for the first 1934 quarter totaled $805,000 and was equivalent to 33 cents a share on 2,439,000 shares of Class A and B stock outstanding. Consolidated earned surplus at March 31 stood at $2,509,000, all of which has accumulated since the reorganization on April 1, 1933.

General Theatres Decision Reserved

At Wilmington, decision was reserved this week, after argument on the petition of United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, for authority to enter into a compromise agreement with the Chase National Bank was heard before Chief Justice Daniel J. Layton in chancery court.

Reduced Claims Provided For

The agreement, among other things, provides that Chase is to reduce its claims against the corporation, is to aid in reorganization and give the reorganized corporation an option on 325,000 shares of Class A common stock of Fox Film Corporation. Senator Hastings contends that the agreement is to the best interests of the corporation.

The Chase bank has filed claims against General Theatres in excess of $20,000,000. To secure this indebtedness there are pledged with the bank various securities, including preferred stock of Film Securities, pledged in connection with a loan of $9,700,000. This preferred stock, according to the petition, has been or is about to be rendered valueless by the sale of the assets of Film Securities, consisting of 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock which had been pledged to secure notes of Film Securities, now in default.

Under the proposed plan, Chase is to reduce its claims against General Theatres by $5,000,000. The receiver is to consent to the allowance of the claim in the reduced amount, to confirm the pledge with the bank of the securities now held by it to secure the said indebtedness and to release from all claims which General Theatres or its receiver may have against Chase Bank, the Chase Corporation, Chase-Harris Forbes Corporation, Halsey Stuart and Company, Pynchon and Company, West and Company, and W. S. Hammond and Company, who were associated in certain financing of General Theatres, with Chase.

Debenture Agreement Made

In connection with such proposed agreements the Chase Bank has made an agreement with General's consolidated protective committee for 10-year, 6 per cent convertible gold debentures, due April 1, 1940, of General Theatres, the more important features of such a proposed agreement being that the bank is to participate in a reorganization of General Theatres, provided the details of the plan of reorganization, including release as aforementioned, are worked out in a manner satisfactory to the bank, and to turn over to the reorganized company its secured claims, accompanied by collateral securing them, in exchange for shares of common stock of the reorganized company, to be issued on the same pro rata basis as to debenture holders and other unsecured creditors.

It is provided further that Chase will give to the reorganized company an option to purchase at $15 a share approximately 325,000 shares of Class A common stock of Fox Film Corporation, such option to be good for one year, and further to lend to the reorganized company a reasonable amount to cover the expense of reorganization and working capital.

Counsel representing minority debenture holders of the corporation and the All-Continent Corporation, holding company of William Fox, general creditor of the corporation in the amount of about $2,000,000, oppose the agreement, contending the corporation has many causes of action against the bank which should be pressed for action.

RCA Quarter Net $1,235,725

The Radio Corporation of America earned a net profit of $1,235,725 during the first three months of 1934, compared with a loss of $478,164 for the same period in 1933, David Sarnoff, RCA president, told the annual stockholders' meeting in New York on Tuesday. An interesting phase of the 1934 first-quarter profit, Mr. Sarnoff said, was that it is $24,448 ahead of profit for the final quarter of 1933, notwithstanding the fact that the final quarter of the year generally produces the larger income.

"It may be significant," Mr. Sarnoff said, "as indicating the extent of this upward trend, to compare further the results of the first quarter of this year with the corresponding quarter of last year. This comparison shows an improvement in earnings this year of $1,714,000. Gross business increased from $13,222,000 for the first quarter of 1933 to $19,134,000 for the first quarter of 1934, a gain of 45 per cent.

Cash Position Improved

"Since the first of this year, RCA has also improved its cash position. Our balance sheet as of December 31, 1933, showed cash and marketable securities of $20,545,000, whereas at the end of the quarter on March 31, 1934, cash and marketable securities amounted to $22,800,000, or an increase of $2,255,000. The ratio of current assets to current liabilities on December 31, 1933, was 5.2 to 1, while on March 31, 1934, the ratio was 5.7 to 1."

Mr. Sarnoff also reported the net profit of $403,616 for Radio Keith Orpheum Corp., for the first quarter of 1934, compared with $1,297,947 loss for the first 1933 quarter.

By an overwhelming majority the RCA stockholders signified their approval of the salaries paid to officers of the company, despite criticism on the part of five of their number. All of the 11,448,396 votes present in person or by proxy at the meeting were cast in favor of directors whose terms came up for renewal this year. Directors reelected for the term of three years, expiring May, 1937, were: De Witt Millhauser, Edward J. Nally, James R. Sheffield and Frederick Strauss. Other directors of the corporation are James G. Harbord, chairman; Newton D. Baker, Cornelius N. Bliss, Arthur E. Braun, Bertram Cutler, John Hays Hammond, Jr., E. W. Harden and Mr. Sarnoff.

Holdings Reported Reduced

General Electric and Westinghouse this week were reported to have reduced their holdings in Radio Corporation of America common stock to only 7½ per cent of the shares outstanding, as compared with 61 per cent held by the two companies a year ago.

Under the consent decree of November, 1932, dissolving the relation between the electrical companies and RCA, 19 months remain in which General Electric may dispose of its 134,516 remaining shares, and Westinghouse its 1,500,000 shares.

Western Electric, it was announced this week, has sold approximately 164,000 shares of Loew's, Inc., stock in the open market, reducing its holdings to 100,000. This stock came into Western Electric's possession as a result of its holdings of Film Securities Corporation notes.

PROGRESS SEEN IN MEEHAN RKO PLAN

Lambert and Leon Goldberg, Understood to Be Meehan Nominees, Supplant Zohbel and Mallard as KAO Officers

Further progress for the plan of Mike Meehan, largest individual stockholder in Keith-Albee-Orpheum, to divorce Radio Keith Orpheum theatre operation from its film activities, appeared more than possible this week when Leon Goldberg and I. E. Lambert, both understood to have been Mr. Meehan's nominees, were elected officers of the KAO circuit. They supplanted two RKO film directors, Herman Zohbel and William Mallard.

Concurrently, David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America—parent company of RKO and its film and theatre subsidiaries—announced that RKO had earned a net profit of $403,616 for the first quarter of 1934, compared with a loss of $1,297,947 which that company sustained for the first quarter of 1933.

"It is encouraging to have RKO in the black again," Mr. Sarnoff told the RCA stockholders.

Goldberg Succeeds Zohbel in KAO

Mr. Goldberg, formerly associated with Goldman-Sachs, New York brokerage house, succeeded Mr. Zohbel in the KAO structure as vice-president and treasurer, while Mr. Lambert, who for some years had been vice-president and general counsel of the RCA Victor Company, at Camden, N. J., is now a KAO vice-president as well as secretary and general attorney for the circuit. Mr. Zohbel will continue as vice-president of all other RKO subsidiaries and treasurer of RKO. Mr. Mallard also will remain a vice-president of all other RKO subsidiaries and secretary of RKO.

The possibility that the 36 KAO theatres might become entirely divorced from RKO operation has been causing speculation in industry circles. Mr. Meehan was generally understood to be the prime mover in the plan for divorcement, and when he recently was reported to have increased his preferred stock holdings in KAO from 26,000 to 29,000—as against RKO's 21,000 shares—the adoption of such a plan appeared certain. One of the first indications pointing toward a physical separation of RKO film and theatre operations was the announcement last week that Robert F. Sisk, who has been in full charge of all RKO publicity and advertising, had been relieved of his theatre publicity duties and henceforth would devote his efforts to the publicizing of RKO Radio pictures. John Dowd, who has handled the RKO theatres' advertising and publicity under Mr. Sisk, continues in that position.

Personal Motivation There

It is the conversational account of the film chatter between Dinty Moore's and Billy LaHiff's Tavern that there is a personal element of motivation in the Meehan program, too. It is related that some time ago, before the stock market began to behave, Mr. Meehan, heavily laden with KAO, for which there was no encouraging market, sought accommodation from the Radio interests and got no encouragement—a matter which he then set down as an entry in his books as something to take care of later. It is now later.

Despite the varied aspects of the situation as it stands at present, it was pointed out this week through unofficial sources that in spite of Mr. Meehan's reputed majority stock holdings of 29,000 preferred shares to RKO's 21,000, RCA undoubtedly has a considerable block of KAO stock, sufficient to retain control of the theatre subsidiary by the RKO interests.

RKO officials this week admitted that a dispute is in progress and openly stated that the cause of it is Mr. Meehan's agitation to effect the KAO divorcement deal, but they denied there is real likelihood that the theatres will be removed from RKO supervision.

At the same time that the election of Mr. Goldberg and Mr. Lambert as KAO officers was announced, it was stated that M. H. Aylesworth will continue as chairman of the board; J. R. McDonough as president; Malcolm Kingsberg, first vice-president, and Major Leslie E. Thompson, vice-president in charge of theatre operations. All are RKO officials.

Maturities Extension Approved

An agreement made with the holders of $13,000,000 of RKO first and second liens extending the maturities on the secured gold notes of the company was approved Wednesday in New York by the United States circuit court of appeals. The agreement was made January 26, 1933, on the day before RKO went into receivership, and its approval by the court this week obviates a foreclosure and sale of virtually all RKO assets.

The agreement provides for payment of $2,500,000 by RCA to RKO, to be applied by RKO to maturing gold notes held by the Chemical Bank and Trust Company and the Commercial Investment Trust. In consideration for these Chemical and Commercial agreed to extend the maturities on the balance of the notes, which total $1,825,000, in order that the remaining notes would not mature before July 1, 1934. Maturities thereafter are $30,000 each on the first of each succeeding six months.

Loew's Makes $3,973,472 Net Profit in 28 Weeks

Loew's, Inc., has reported a net profit of $3,973,472 after subsidiaries' preferred dividend, for the 28 weeks ended March 15, 1934, which compares with a net profit of $2,013,281 for the corresponding 28 weeks of 1933. The 1934 net is equivalent to $2.83 per share on the common stock, which compares with $1.04 per share for the 1933 period.

Operating profit for the 28 weeks of 1934 equalled $6,680,713, comparing with $4,429,244 for the similar period in 1933. Depreciation and taxes for the 1934 period are listed at $2,707,241, comparing with $2,415,963 for the corresponding period of the previous year.

Theatres Protest Code Assessments

The principal developments this week in the administration and adoption of the code structure to the motion picture business were:

1. Independent theatre owners complained that the amounts assessed small exhibitors for code expenses are too large.
2. Ed Kuykendall declared that reopening of the code to stop evasions and subterfuges is inevitable.
3. Seven more headquarters were opened in the field for local boards.
4. Numerous hearings were held and decisions rendered in many code disputes.
5. Clearance Boards were receiving protests over present clearance schedules, preparatory to the re-writing of new clearance.
6. NRA issued new Eagles, opened another drive for enforcement.
7. The nature of the Darrow "little man" report remained a mystery.
8. Code started functioning in Hollywood.
9. Hearing for reopening of laboratory code called off.

Allied States and the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania both called mass meetings to take action against distributors, who, it was alleged, are planning to pass on the code's costs through higher rentals and increased percentages. Details appear on page 9.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana officially protested the assessments as being too large for small theatres. The Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners likewise asked more equitable assessments. P. J. Wood, on behalf of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, protested to General Hugh Johnson, NRA Administrator, and John C. Flinn, Code Authority secretary. Mr. Wood said RKO Music Hall, with over 5,000 seats, will gross $3,500,000 to $5,000,000 annually and be assessed $96 a year, whereas a 200 seat house grossing $50 to $75 must pay $12. He declared that a Columbus first-run with 3,200 seats and a gross income of $350,000, is assessed $36, whereas a 200-seat subsequent run, doing less than $10,000 a year, must pay $24.

Ed Kuykendall, Code Authority member and MPTOA president, predicted in Kansas City that a reopening of the code is inevitable, in order to correct abuses and loopholes for evasion. Another Code Authority member in New York, while admitting that changes were necessary, held that a reopening would bring a stalemate.

Boards Hold Hearings

Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA division administrator, began receiving a daily report on activities from each of the 62 Local Grievance and Local Clearance Boards.

Code activities were reported by the following local boards:

BUFFALO: Headquarters, Beyer Building. The Clearance Board organized last Monday.

CHICAGO: Headquarters, former Film Board of Trade offices. The Grievance Board received an overbuying complaint from the Annette theatre, Ben Bartlestein, Cicero, against Schoenstadt Brothers. The Clearance Board was preparing to publish territorial zoning schedules.

CLEVELAND: The Grievance Board ruled the defendants guilty in the following cases of distributing ten-cent passes in lieu of the 15-cent minimum contract admission: L. and F. Theatres, operating the Liberty, vs. Sam Fine's Manhattan theatre; A. E. Ptak's Lyceum vs. Simon Kaplan's Arion; Gus Danovic's Corlett vs. Slavia Company's Mount Pleasant. The case of A. E. Ptak against Kaplan Southern theatre was dismissed. The Clearance Board received a petition of 20 Cleveland exhibitors that first-run protection be reduced. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association filed a similar petition.

DALLAS: The Grievance Board set May 8 for its first meeting. The Clearance Board meets May 15.

DES MOINES: Headquarters, Suite 224, Iowa Building. The Grievance Board met Tuesday.

DETROIT: Headquarters, Suite 1219, Francis Palms (State Theatre) Building. The Grievance Board meets Saturday.

KANSAS CITY (MO.): Headquarters, Suite 907, Davidson Building. First runs filed complaint against existing zoning schedules.

LOS ANGELES: The Grievance Board found in favor of Pacific Theatres in its complaint against the National theatre, on two-for-one admissions.

MILWAUKEE: Ashley Theatre Corporation appealed to the Code Authority from the Grievance Board's overbuying decision ordering that 30 Warner features be sold to the complainant, Saxe Amusement.

NEW HAVEN: Headquarters, 42 Church Street. Both boards met.

NEW YORK CITY: Headquarters open within a week. The Clearance Board received the first protests against clearance schedules.

OMAHA: Headquarters, Loyal Hotel. Lester Martin's independent exhibitor group protested the Authority's local board appointments.

PITTSBURGH: Charles Rich, exchange manager, was appointed to the Grievance Board, succeeding Ben Kalmenson.

PORTLAND (ORE.): The Clearance Board tentatively suggested new clearance charts be drawn.

SALT LAKE CITY: Frederick Loofbourow, local attorney, was appointed secretary.

The Code Authority meeting for Friday has been postponed to May 11, when it will sit in a judicial capacity on the first appeal from a local board decision, the Ashley case from Milwaukee. Mr. Flinn will report on the Hollywood situation, and the Coast salary status also was slated for discussion.

Self-government through Code Authorities got underway when the first of the new code eagles for codified industries was presented at Washington. At the same time, the NRA opened a militant drive for further enforcement of codes.

Darrow Report a Mystery

Reports in Washington had it that Clarence Darrow, heading the National Review Board, had submitted its report to President Roosevelt, following its "little man" hearings, but in other Washington sources it was denied. Mr. Darrow and John F. Sinclair, board member, attended a private White House conference Monday to iron out their differences.

John C. Flinn, secretary of the Code Authority, was in Hollywood to start code administration in production, and outlined procedure for committees. Dick Lestrange, labor official, complained to Mr. Flinn that the studio-labor committee had failed to act on complaints. Columbia was charged with having reclassified workers, and Paramount was alleged to have paid only $3 a day to extras.

Dr. A. H. Giannini, noted financier and motion picture banker, resigned from the extras' committee and J. P. Normanly, associated with the Giannini interests, was appointed to succeed him.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox and a member of the Code Authority, assisted Mr. Flinn.

Laboratory Code "In the Air"

The National Recovery Administration announced a public hearing would be held May 9, at Washington, on modification proposals for the motion picture laboratory code. Two days later the hearing was canceled, without announced reason.

Laboratory interests had applied to incorporate a standard cost accounting method, also a provision that would fix the reasonable minimum cost of printing 35 mm. positive prints on domestic raw stock at .0175 cents a foot.

Roosevelt Asks New Labor Unit

Legislation for setting up a permanent and effective tribunal for settlement of all labor disputes was being urged upon Congressional leaders in Washington this week by President Roosevelt, and at the same time it was said a new measure would be drafted soon to meet many of the objections to the labor bill sponsored by Senator Wagner.

The A. F. of L. requested of President Roosevelt legislation making a 30-hour work week standard in all industries

In New York work was proceeding on the check-up designed to determine the proportion of service employees in Loew and RKO theatres who are members of Local 118 of the Theatre and Amusement Employees' Union. On Friday a Department of Labor representative from Washington concluded his check on the Loew houses, and a similar check-up was begun immediately in the RKO metropolitan houses.

The Kansas City IATSE operators' union has rejected Ed Dubinsky's arbitration terms in his dispute, claiming his plan is not according to the code. It says Mr. Dubinsky wishes to name the impartial member for the arbitration hearing provided for, insisting on a federal judge.

Swanson-Goldwyn Deal For "Barbary Coast" Off

The deal by which Gloria Swanson was to have appeared in the starring role of Samuel Goldwyn's production of "Barbary Coast," on a loan from MGM, has been called off on the Coast. Irving Thalberg explained last week that Miss Swanson wanted to extend her personal appearance tour beyond the date when "Barbary Coast" must go into work. She will be replaced by Anna Sten.

Special Lobby Displays Issued on ComiColor Shorts

A merry line of special lobby displays, unusual in the exploitation of short product, is being issued for the release of the Powers Comi-Color Cartoon series. It includes a 22 by 28 and four 11 by 14 lobby cards, brilliantly lithographed in four colors.

"We have found a disposition on the part of many exhibitors to give these subjects exploitation of as much prominence as the feature subjects," remarks Charles J. Giegerich, sales manager of Celebrity Productions.

Celebrity Productions is also distributing reprints of the color inserts on the cartoon series as presented in the advertising pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Howard Dietz Is Guest Chairman at AMPA Lunch

Howard Dietz, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity director, on Thursday was guest chairman at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York. This was the first of a series of luncheons at which past presidents of the AMPA, honorary members and leaders of the industry are to preside. Milton Berle, Joe Penner and others were among those present. William R. Ferguson, MGM exploitation head, is the new president.

MAYER TAKING CASE TO EXHIBITORS THE "TEN PERCENTERS"—PRO AND CON EARS ATTUNED TO FOREIGN PROGRESS FORTY IN WORK, 8 START, 10 FINISHED

LOUIS B. MAYER, at the invitation of leading showmen, is soon to make personal appearances in key cities.

Impressed by his remarks at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and in the closed session of producers and exhibitors, theatre owners urged MGM's production executive to tell Hollywood's story to those unable to come to California.

Mr. Mayer will swing around to the important spots, address the showmen, and attempt to weld together those elements which, through lack of personal contact and information, seem to misunderstand the problems of the production center.

Mindful of his forceful vocabulary and eloquence, Mr. Mayer's tour is reminiscent of the days he spanned the country when he entered the ranks of producers, forecasting the exhibition and distribution trends that since have come to pass.

Hollywood's interest in the Mayer march is more than cursory.

Quaint Conceits

Hollywood has its quaint conceits. Directors, writers, actors, even sound men, are afflicted with the virus.

Recently, after a flood of idiosyncrasies appeared in some pictures, the head of a studio ruled them out.

"Is it necessary, when filming a bathroom, to show all the appurtenances?" he asked—and answered: "Well, one of our directors insisted it was realism; the shot got into the finished production because the director's contract stated he had the final editorial okay, but, thank goodness, exhibitors had the good taste to cut the scene out."

Histrionic quaint conceit expressed itself when an actor so intoned a line as to give it a nasty allusion. When the producer ordered retakes, the actor insisted they were ruining his art, strangling his creative impulses.

A producer, after reading a script and seeing in it a conflict similar to one he had had, ordered the scenarist to give the hero (supposedly the producer) the name of a former foreign dictator and give the villain the name of a promoter who wanted him out of the company. The hero in the story (the producer) bested the promoter (in the script), and it happened the same way in reality.

In a big production, an actor advanced the quaint conceit that the mother in the film should be pictured as a real mother, like his mother, who he said was mean and heartless. This lad is now sitting out his contract.

Hollywood's prize quaint conceit caused a soundman to tune up the "mike" to make the he-man hero's voice sound like a tenor.

An Ear to Foreign Progress

Hollywood is perking up its ears about foreign production. Facts, more than ballyhoo, are giving the production center an insight into the competitive influence of English productions.

Statistics emanating from headquarters of "Henry VIII," with Charles Laughton, indicate:

1. It won a gold medal in London as the best cinema of 1933.
2. Four hundred American newspaper critics voted it one of the three best motion pictures shown in the United States.
3. Charles Laughton won, for England, for the first time, the award of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, conferred annually in Hollywood.
4. In London, "Henry VIII" ran 14 weeks in Leicester Square Theatre.
5. The original English version is still running in Paris, after six months.

Topline Hollywood executives readily admit in conversations, not so private, that Alexander Korda did a fine production job.

News Flashes!

John C. Flinn, here, conferred with Grievance and Zoning Board secretaries from all points on the Pacific Coast, outlining routine of their duties, instructions on how to fill out forms, and so on.

The executive secretary of the Code Authority is going to Kansas City and Chicago for similar meetings.

His contract with Radio expiring May 26, Lou Brock will not talk new deal with any one until he returns from a three months' vacation in Europe.

Mr. Brock has been a consistent producer for Radio in both short subjects and features the last three years. "Down to Their Last Yacht" looks like a successor to his "Flying Down to Rio."

The new standard release print goes into effect May 1, with certain changes that will affect a smoother show in the theatre. This has been accomplished by including 18 frames on the runout where previously 12 frames were used. This becomes effective after a three-year exhaustive research conducted by the Academy Research Council in conjunction with the Council of the American Projection Society, laboratories and theatres.

BATTLE OF BOLEROS RAGES AT STUDIOS

A battle royal is on between Lou Brock of Radio and Warner Brothers. It seems there are too many boleros in Hollywood.

Brock is staging a South Sea Bolero dance in his current production, "Down to Their Last Yacht," which Paul Sloane is directing.

Warner is using a Hawaiian Bolero in "Dames."

Both are said to be similar, according to local dance masters.

The other day the Radio producer paid a visit to the Brothers Warner in an effort to get them to cut out the Bolero business in their film, but they have other ideas.

Brock says he was ten days ahead with his Bolero and deserves priority.

Forty Pictures in Work

As Hollywood embarks on the 1934-35 program and cleans up the last remnants of 1933-34, 40 pictures are in the work, with eight new ones started, 10 completed. Of the new quota, Radio and Fox have two each with MGM, Foy Productions, Columbia and Paramount accounting for the remaining four. Radio finished two pictures, one each was finished by MGM, Warners, Universal, Fox, Invincible, Harold Lloyd Productions, Beacon and Columbia.

The new ones at Radio are "Let Who Will Be Clever," formerly titled "Arabella," in which Marian Nixon, Joan Marsh, Gloria Shea, Edna May Oliver, Billie Burke, Grant Mitchell and Buster Crabbe are featured under William Seiter's direction, and "The Great American Harem," which George Stevens is directing, with Pert Kelton, Chick Chandler and Stuart Erwin featured.

Michael Arlen Story

MGM's new starting picture is the Michael Arlen story, "The Green Hat," with Robert Z. Leonard directing. Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Henry Stephenson, Mrs. Pat Campbell and Leo Carroll are cast.

Foy Productions started "High School Girls" in which Noel Warwick makes his Hollywood debut, Crane Wilbur directing. In support are Cecilia Parker, Helen McKellar, Mahlon Hamilton and Carlisle Moore, Jr.

Columbia's new one is "Railroad Detective" featuring Tim McCoy, Addison Richards and Shirley Grey.

At Paramount the Charles R. Rogers production "Here Comes the Groom," got under way, featuring Jack Haley, Patricia Ellis, Mary Boland, Neil Hamilton and Isabel Jewell.

The pair at Fox are "Caravan" with Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Louise Fazenda, Eugene Pallette and C. Aubrey Smith, Eric Charell directing, and "She Learned About Sailors," in which Alice Faye, Lou Ayres, Mitchell and Durante and Harry Green head the cast.

A recapitulation of the completed pictures shows the Radio pair to be "Cockeyed Cavaliers," a Wheeler and Woolsey medieval comedy in which Thelma Todd, Dorothy Lee, Robert Greig, Noah Beery and Franklin Pangborn worked under Mark Sandrich's direction, and "Murder on the Blackboard," directed by George Archainbaud, with Edna May Oliver, James Gleason, Bruce Cabot, Gertrude Michael, Regis Toomey, Edgar Kennedy, Tully Marshall and Jackie Searle.

Civil War Background

"Operator 13," with Civil War background, was finished at MGM. Marion Davies is starred with Gary Cooper and the support includes Douglas Dumbrille, Four Mills Brothers, Russell Hardie, Ted Healy, Francis McDonald, Sidney Toler and Robert McWade. Richard Boleslavsky directed. The historical romance, "Madame DuBarry," featuring Dolores Del Rio, Reginald Owen, Veree Teasdale, Helen Lowell and Victor Jory, was completed at Warner.

At Universal, "Little Man, What Now?", in which Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery, Alan Hale and Mae Marsh head a lengthy cast, was completed after eight weeks' production. The Fox unit is "Don Cossack," a foreign version.

Invincible completed "Fifteen Wives," in which Conway Tearle, Natalie Moorhead, Raymond Hatton and Noel Francis are featured. Another independent, Beacon, checked in with "Can't Escape," featuring Lila Lee and Onslow Stevens. Harold Lloyd completed "Cat's Paw," in which he is supported by Una Merkel, Nat Pendleton, George Barbier, Grant Mitchell, Warren Hymer and Grace Bardley. Columbia winds up the list with "Fire Patrol," a Tim McCoy, supported by Ward Bond, DeWitt Jennings and Evalyn Knapp.

Dufaycolor Goes On Market Soon; Carson in Charge

A color process, known as Dufaycolor, which requires no changes in existing camera, laboratory or projection equipment, shortly is to be put upon the American market by the Dufay Co., a newly created American branch of Dufay Color Co., Ltd., of England. The American concern will be headed by Walter H. Carson, formerly vice-president of Agfa-Ansco Corp.

Mr. Carson returned to New York this week from Great Britain, where he has been conducting an investigation into color processes in that country as well as in France and Germany.

"There is nothing new in color processes," he said Tuesday. "They are all basically the same, but no one yet has ever found a really satisfactory application for them. Dufaycolor is a process that can be used in existing cameras without any changes and can also be submitted to existing laboratory practices. Even more important from the standpoint of the exhibitor, it can be shown on existing theatre projection equipment with no radical or expensive changes."

Mr. Carson described the color as a screen process consisting of the three primal colors applied mechanically to the film base underneath the emulsion. On the screen now being used for the process, there are approximately 1,000,000 color units to each square inch.

The nature of the Dufaycolor process—through which the color actually is in the film itself—necessitates the use of a special film stock.

It is Mr. Carson's contention that too many color processes have been thrown on the commercial market before the technicians had familiarized themselves with their applications. For this reason, Dufay Co. is not planning to release its process on the commercial market immediately.

Starting this summer, Mr. Carson will bring in the film for use in the 16 mm. amateur photography field. He also indicated that one newsreel firm was interested in the process and might use several color subjects for inclusion in regular newsreels.

Mr. Carson believes that color, applied scientifically, will constitute the next major change in the motion picture industry.

Ferguson Starts AMPA Regime, Picks Committees

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has undergone a complete reorganization under the new administration started last week by Col. William R. Ferguson, MGM, at the first meeting over which he presided, held at the Motion Picture Club in New York. Paul Benjamin, of National Screen Service, the new treasurer, will be business manager, while, at the same time, Mr. Ferguson appointed the following committees for 1934-35:

Trustees

Walter Eberhardt, Erpi, three years; Kelcey Allen, critic, two years; Si Seadler, MGM, one year.

Auditing

Edward McNamee, National Screen, chairman; Martin Starr, free-lance publicist; Vincent Trotta, Paramount.

Entertainment

Si Seadler, chairman; Edward Finney, Monogram; Marvin Kirsch, Film Daily; Edward McNamee; Terry Turner; Arnold Van Leer, Columbia; Vincent Trotta.

Service Bureau

Marvin Kirsch, chairman; Lou Rydell, Variety; Monroe Greenthal, United Artists; Ray Gallagher, Motion Picture Herald.

Publicity

National Counsellor to U. S. Chamber of Commerce

Hal Horne, United Artists.

Mr. Ferguson started a special Advisory Council, the membership of which includes the heads of advertising of distributing companies, and others. The council will take under advisement various ideas and plans for promoting the AMPA, and includes: Howard Dietz, Metro; Hal Horne, United Artists; Robert Sisk, RKO; S. Charles Einfeld, Warners; A. P. Waxman; Charles McCarthy, Fox; George Brown, Columbia; Rodney Bush; Paul Gulick, Universal; Bruce Gallup, Donahue and Coe Advertising Agency; Bert Adler, Tower Publications; Ed Finney, Monogram, and Edward McNamee, National Screen.

Speaking at the first meeting of the new administration were Major Edward Bowes, Loew's; Si Seadler, Cecilia Villa, daughter of the late Pancho Villa, Frank Scully and Mr. Ferguson, who read the names of some 30 candidates for AMPA membership. Mr. Ferguson indicated that virtually all of the large companies are considering a suggestion that they employ only AMPA members for advertising, publicity, exploitation and promotional work of this nature.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The popular impression that Miss Katherine De Mille is the real daughter of Cecil B. De Mille is incorrect. Furthermore, the young lady, now making her screen debut at Paramount, learned accidentally, the other day, that she's not an American citizen.

Miss DeMille was born in Vancouver, British Columbia, the daughter of Edward Gabriel and Cecile Colani Lester. Her father was killed during the World War battle of Vimy Ridge. Her mother, who brought Katherine to Los Angeles, died a short time later.

Mr. DeMille adopted Katherine from the Los Angeles Orphanage when she was nine years of age. She applied for a passport to Mexico last week, but the immigration officials blasted her belief that the adoption automatically made her an American citizen.

Mae West and everybody who takes part in her productions "should be in the penitentiary," bellows Channing Pollock, playwright of the good, the beautiful.

In merry ol' Greenwich Village there appears to be holding forth a reincarnation of that great prophet, Elijah, of Biblical fame, in the person of Doctor William I. Sirovich, Congressional Representative from New York.

Last year the good doctor got the brilliant idea that federal control of the motion picture would be just ducky, and he so expressed himself quite vociferously, in the expansive legislative halls of Capitol Hill. At this writing he is burning the proverbial midnight oil on a new play. In the last act he will tell what he thinks is going to happen as a result of the Roosevelt Recovery program. So, if we will all be patient for just another few weeks—you, too, Mr. President—we will know where we are heading.

Another Sirovich play, "Thieves' Paradise," will follow. "But this one has nothing to do with Congress," he grinned.

This little piece might be called: Shades of the Bloody Roman Arena.

A typical family motion picture audience was seated, the other evening, in a typical family motion picture theatre, this one in Kansas City. They saw a newsreel, showing, first, a woman being struck by a motor car, the announcer reporting that she had been killed. Next came an accident on a race track from which the driver emerged and staggered across the track, the announcer reporting that he had fractured his skull. A few minutes later the audience was treated to a picture of a cowboy being gored against a fence by a ferocious bull, with the statement that he, too, had been killed.

The rotogravure sections, a few days ago, published a picture of a buxom, matronly woman in the City Attorney's office in Los Angeles at a hearing on charges of disturbing the peace in a dress shop. She was accused by the proprietor of leaving things in quite a chaotic condition because an ensemble that had been designed for her was unsatisfactory. The lady was once a very famous motion picture star. She flashed across the film horizon in the old silent days as Mary Miles Minter, once Miss Juliet Shelby, playing opposite Farnum in "The Littlest Rebel."

Mr. Smith Wildman Brookhart, former United States Senator, crack rifle shot and one of the best Congressional inflamers against motion pictures, is now the Agricultural Department's "Eastern European Trade Expert." The $6,000 a year job, we are told, was created especially for him.

"You're murdering my jokes, you ham!"
The angry playwright cried.
"Perhaps," the actor answered,
"But it's not infanticide!"

Dal Devening

From the land of the cod near Boston comes a fresh success story about Louisa May Alcott. When the agent of the late authoress replied to the inquiring producer that Miss Alcott could be addressed at "Houseboat on the Styx," the producer—who was impressed with the box-office grosses of her "Little Women"—thundered: "That's the trouble with these new writers. They turn in one hit and then go off on a boat trip." ("Little Women" was published in 1869.)

Omigosh! The motion picture business, just getting on its feet, lost some seventy billions of dollars, on paper, the other afternoon, through sheer carelessness—and the way the boys in Hollywood are struggling to make both ends meet.

Mr. Ed Finney, a paid up member of the AMPA, and head of the advertising department of Mr. Ray Johnston's Monogram Pictures, had called in some statistical experts to compile for his article in the annual AMPA Souvenir Journal, a string of pertinent facts and figures.

The experts set to work, but, like a pair of plumbers, they misplaced their decimals, and, instead of accurately reporting seven hundred millions as the approximate yearly gross at theatres, they blandly told Mr. Finney that the correct gross was just a shade this side of seventy billions of dollars for the year!

Mr. Finney concluded that his experts must have worked for the Chase Bank people before the depression.

36,000 FEATURE TITLES REGISTERED IN A YEAR

4,500 Registered Last Year, Says Julia Kelly, Secretary to Hays, in First of Broadcasts by Women Film Executives

Thirty-six thousand titles of feature motion pictures have been registered during the past nine years by the Title Registration Service of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, according to Miss Julia Kelly, secretary to Mr. Will H. Hays. Miss Kelly last week initiated a series of eight motion picture broadcasts by feminine film executives, to be heard over NBC's key station, WEAF, to bring to public attention various motion picture subjects of general interest. Her broadcast was on "How Movie Titles Originate."

Last year alone the number of feature titles registered was around 4,500, although this does not mean there were 4,500 features produced. The number of features produced in a year runs between 600 and 700, said Miss Kelly, but title registrations of pictures in production or planned totals in the thousands.

Register Each Proposed Title

All the large producing companies register each proposed title with the Registration Service, explained Miss Kelly, in order to abide by Mr. Hays' plan of self-regulation. Producers frequently lost many thousands of dollars before the idea was adopted, when they proceeded on a motion picture and prepared advertising campaigns and the like, only to find out that some other company had the right to that title.

The most frequent reason for the necessity of changing titles is the discovery that there has been a copyright issued on some book or play bearing the title being considered.

To avoid legal complications, titles considered for original stories are checked first by the legal departments of the companies through the Copyright Bureau at Washington, and accredited publishers' lists. This is because, while a title is not subject to copyright, if a book or play has obtained wide enough circulation its title acquires a secondary value which has some legal recognition.

Explains Registration Machinery

In explaining the machinery of the title registration plan effected by the Hays organization, Miss Kelly said:

"Warner Brothers had a picture which was nearing completion. The story featured a popular radio artist. It had been titled 'Rhythm in the Air' and so announced in the trade papers. Meanwhile the Fox company bought the operetta, 'Music in the Air.'

"There was a degree of similarity in these titles which threatened to be confusing and harmful to both pictures. The Fox title gave value to a substantial investment in a copyrighted property. The Warner title was attached to an original story. So Warner Brothers — although it meant considerable expense—obligingly withdrew their title in deference to the purchase by Fox. Thus 'Rhythm in the Air' was renamed 'Twenty Million Sweethearts.'

"One might think that experience would have developed certain basic rules—that there would be a successful formula for titles. There is not. Few titles contain over four words and most of them consist of three words or less.

"But there was a motion picture based on a book called 'The Clansman.' That would appear to meet all the requirements of a good, short title. Well, that title was expanded to 'The Birth of a Nation'—and you know what happened.

"The 'House of Connelly' was retitled 'Carolina' for two reasons. First, the word house had been associated with many mystery stories. Second, the picture was a vehicle for Janet Gaynor and it was felt that the name should carry a suggestion of such things as honeysuckles and romance.

"Sometimes a title is changed because words do not have the same connotation in other English speaking countries that they do here. Certain words, when exported, may have no meaning whatever.

"That musical, 'Moonlight and Pretzels,' went very well in this country. But when a salesman undertook to sell the picture in England, he might as well have been talking Chinese. A lot of the theatre owners over there knew all about crumpets and muffins, but they either didn't know what pretzels were—or they didn't like them, anyhow.

"The result was the Universal Company began to receive a flock of cablegrams from its English sales representatives asking that the title be changed. 'Muffins' made no more euphonious impression over here than 'pretzels' did over there. So they went from the appetizing to the fragrant and changed the name to 'Moonlight and Roses.' Nobody could be dissatisfied with such a combination as that!

"Our registration of titles, as part of the association's plan of self-regulation, is based, of course, upon a gentleman's agreement—but, in its elimination of anything undesirable, it is also a part of our Production Code.

"The Committee on Title Registration is composed of a representative of each producing company. These representatives are lawyers, heads of production departments and other executives."

Dill Asks Inquiry On ATT Activity

Demand for a sweeping Senate investigation into the activities of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, its subsidiaries and affiliates, as a means of assisting the commission to be set up by the Administration's communications bill, is before a committee at Washington, in a resolution by Senator C. C. Dill.

Meanwhile, settlement of the anti-trust suit brought against A. T. & T., Western Electric and Erpi by the Stanley Company of America, General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio has been materially advanced by agreements on virtually all basic points and may be consummated some time within the next ten days, it was learned this week.

What practically amounts to an agreement is said to have been reached with General Talking Pictures and Duovac, while all but the final phases of a settlement with Stanley Co., a Warner subsidiary, remain to be determined. The first proposal of a settlement with Stanley is understood to have revolved about the withdrawal of all litigation now pending against the electrics and involving any of the Warner companies as complainants. Such an agreement, were it carried through, would end the long-standing Vitaphone-Erpi litigation over royalties. In addition, a cash payment for a comparatively small amount, said to be less than $500,000, but sufficient to cover major litigation costs of the Warner companies against the electrics during the past few years, is reported to have been in the settlement.

Franklin Ready For Production

Harold B. Franklin, former president of RKO Theatres, said this week on his return from England that he had completed arrangements for making several pictures at the Fox studios in Hollywood and starring Elizabeth Bergner, who will play "Escape Me Never" on Broadway this fall.

Mr. Franklin, in conjunction with Arch Selwyn and Gifford Cochrane, will also sponsor and produce on Broadway Noel Coward's "Conversation Piece," with Yvonne Printemps, and "Old Folks at Home," with Marie Tempest, British stage star. The three plays are set for autumn and winter opening, Mr. Franklin said.

Pictures Leading In Re-employment

Increased employment in the motion picture industry in California led that of the state's 14 leading industries during the past month, as compared with one year ago. The increase in film work approximated 101.7 per cent, while motion picture payrolls increased 90.4 per cent, running second to the increased payrolls of the leather and rubber goods industry, which had increased payrolls of 164 per cent. These figures were reported late last week in the annual market planning survey by Sales Management.

AIR EXPRESSED SCRIPTS EXPAND FILM SERVICE

Motion Picture Industry Plays Large Part in Movement of 1,660,000 Pounds of Express Over Air Lines in Year

Motion picture business provided one of the large shares of the 1,660,000 pounds of express which were carried over the air lines last year, reflecting the rapid development of this arm of transportation which began in 1926 with 6,467 pounds transported.

An increasingly noticeable use of air conveyance by the industry, this year, concomitant with movement of film, is the handling of scripts for review between New York and California. More familiarly known is the fact that pictures completed in Hollywood are shipped to New York with the loss of only one-half of a business day, so that they can be shown in Manhattan approximately 24 hours after leaving Southern California. In the field of the newsreel the applicability of the rapidity of air express daily is attested.

Coordination with Rails

Coordination of nationwide service, to which is attributed the speed of expansion of air transportation, dates from 1927, when the first step was taken with the affiliation of United Air Lines and several other airways with the Air Express Division of the Railway Express Agency, with the agency acting as the ground pick-up and delivery medium. That year the poundage doubled, reaching a 12,495 total. More coverage, and the volume reached 286,798 in 1930. The million-pound mark was passed in 1932.

Three developments pointed to by the air services as factors in that advancement were the steady gains in speed of schedules and the linking with the Railway Express Agency to coordinate air-rail service to points not directly served by the aviation lines. The present speed of transmittal up to 170 miles an hour follows a progressive pushing up of schedules since 1930, when the average cruising speed of express planes was 110 miles an hour. The average climbed to 115 miles by the fore part of 1933, but during the summer of last year the average speed was increased 50 miles an hour when United Air Lines inaugurated multi-motored plane schedules with a fleet of Boeing twin-engined, low-wing, passenger-cargo monoplanes. Then, too, with the increase of speed the rates have been reduced one-third from those in effect three years ago.

23,000 Cities Served

The traffic arrangement with the Railway Express Agency has made possible air express coordinated with rail schedules, to 23,000 cities. The method of procedure is this: Shipments from New York, for example, to a western city not on an air line are flown to the airport nearest destination and transferred to the fastest train service to complete the trip.

At the present stage of development of air express service, Chicago is an overnight flight to Los Angeles and San Francisco, and Hollywood is 21¼ hours to New York. The schedule for United Air Lines, as typical, is: Los Angeles to New York, 21 hours; San Francisco to Chicago, 13½ hours; Chicago to New York, 4½ hours; Los Angeles to Seattle, 8½ hours; Los Angeles to San Francisco, 2 1-6 hours; San Francisco to New York, 19½ hours; Detroit to Los Angeles, 21½-4 hours.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

16—COMPELLING EXCHANGES TO SELL PRODUCT

QUESTION—I have a small second-run house and I desire westerns for use on Fridays and Saturdays. Two exchanges have some second-run westerns that I wish, but I do not play their other features. My contracts are full on other product this year, and I would like to know if the code has a provision whereby these exchanges would have to sell me the westerns, at a fair and usual price, without making me take their other features, which are now being run by a third-run, behind which I cannot run because we have about the same clientele from Monday to Thursday.

Under the code, on new contracts, can I buy a selective list of about 25 features from each of four exchanges, instead of buying my whole yearly program from two, as I now do?—NORTH CAROLINA.

ANSWER—The code does not say to which theatre in a town a distributor must sell his motion pictures, except, however, where the Local Grievance Board upholds an exhibitor's complaint that his competitor has overbought in order to deprive him of product. Then, the Board will order that the exchanges sell to the complaining exhibitor such product that is overbought by the competitor. Otherwise, any distributor may select the theatre in any town to which he desires to sell his product.

17—FREE BASKET TIEUPS

QUESTION—There is a store in town that wants to cooperate with this theatre and give away baskets free to our audience. Would it be against the code if we were to advertise that this store, and not our theatre, is giving away the free merchandise?—INDIANA.

ANSWER—If the baskets are given to each patron, or to each class of patron such as every woman, every child or every man, then the practice is a premium and is permissible.

However, if the baskets are to be given only to some customers through the medium of chances or drawings or lucky numbers, then such awards take the form of a lottery and they are prohibited under the code.

But, if the theatre is absolutely not in competition with another theatre, and is so thoroughly isolated that such lucky number prizes cannot be construed to be unfair to a competing exhibitor, then it is permissible to award the baskets by lucky numbers, or drawings. The code clause which ordinarily outlaws lucky number gifts or lotteries is intended to stop the practice only when it exists in probable or possible competition with another theatre, and when such competition exists, then the practice is unfair.

The fact that the store is credited with making such awards, or supplying the merchandise, does not release the theatre from any responsibilities.

18—FREE SHOW TIEUPS

QUESTION—In connection with my own theatre business, I have for the past 12 years been running free motion picture shows on the streets of small towns that do not have any theatres in them, these shows being sponsored by the business men of these towns. I would like to know if the motion picture code will have any effect on these shows. That is, whether it will stop them or not.—ILLINOIS.

ANSWER—Free shows are in violation of the code if they are operated in competition with any theatre. However, if they are not in actual competition with any theatre and are so thoroughly isolated that they cannot be construed to be unfair to a competing exhibitor, then the practice is permissible under the code, provided, too, that they are not staged in violation of contractual arrangements with exchanges.

19—STATUS OF REGIONAL LABOR BOARD

QUESTION—We were before the Regional Labor Board as defendants in a complaint by three of our projectionists, who alleged a lockout pending arbitration of a dispute between said employees and ourselves.

Will you let us have information as to the manner in which the Regional Labor Board was appointed; what are its functions; if under the code it has authority to arbitrate any disputes which are not mutually submitted by both employer and employee; if a representative of the employees filing a complaint before the board can ask the board to force the employer to be present at a hearing; and, if the employer does not appear, what would be the result of a decision of the board against him?

In the case of a decision by the board against the employer, after they had both appeared, what would be the proper steps to an appeal, and where and to what board would the appeal be taken?—ARKANSAS.

ANSWER—The Regional Labor Boards were appointed by the National Labor Board of the National Recovery Administration at Washington. They were appointed as a medium for settling local controversies in the field without bringing the interested parties to the National Labor Board at Washington.

Regional Labor Boards in the field may investigate labor cases on complaint of either party, that is, the exhibitor or his employees. They have no direct authority to force anyone to appear before them, but, naturally, since the boards are supposed not to be prejudiced, it would appear to be to the best advantage of both sides to appear. As an impartial mediator, the Board frequently can adjust controversies in a manner satisfactory to both sides, and in quicker time than would otherwise be possible.

Any decision by a Regional Labor Board may be appealed to the National Labor Board of the NRA at Washington, by either side.

While the Regional Labor Boards, or their parent, the National Labor Board at Washington have no power in themselves to enforce any of its decisions, failure to comply with any decision may be referred by the Labor Board to the Department of Justice, or to the enforcement agencies of the NRA, for possible prosecution in the courts.

20—HOURS SPENT ON CARING FOR FILMS COUNTED

QUESTION—Are the hours spent by a projectionist in caring for films and machines to be figured in on the working schedule for the week, or is this to be done without compensation?—VERMONT.

ANSWER—The hours that are spent by a projectionist in caring for films and/or projection machines are to be figured as part of the working schedule and are not to be spent freely.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service for all readers. They contain many explanatory points pertinent to the business as its conduct is prescribed by the Code.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

21—CODE THEATRE ASSESSMENT

QUESTION—I have received my assessment for the first half of 1934, which is $9.00. I had signed the code under the impression that the assessment would be fair. This means a great amount for small theatres which are hardly getting by. It is the same old story, the little fellow pays.

In a nearby city a number of first run theatres are assessed $18, and in the same city a subsequent run theatre of 300 seats is assessed $12, only operating three days a week, as I do.

The assessment to the small town theatre man is unfair. Five dollars per year would have been plenty. I want to know do I have to pay this assessment, and is there any penalty for not doing so?—RHODE ISLAND.

ANSWER—The Code Authority in New York has ruled that unless exhibitors who received the code assessment bill remit the payment stipulated within 30 days, they cannot exhibit in their theatre any motion picture to which is attached the NRA Blue Eagle insignia. In view of the fact that nearly all of the producers release their films with this insignia, it would appear that they cannot show virtually any product unless the assessment is paid within the 30-day period. And if they do show any films with a Blue Eagle insignia without having paid the assessment after the 30 days, they are violating the code, according to the Code Authority's ruling.

However, the exhibitor may appeal to the Local Grievance Board in his territory for an extension of this 30-day period and the Board may grant such an extension.

Jury Decides Bombing Case In Favor of Hartford House

Comedy

Title tone to the contrary, this is a comedy, flamboyantly satirizing star radio broadcast personalities. Fast moving, with dialogue, action and situations contributing equally to the fun, the amusement value is supplemented by a long list of name players familiarly associated with comedy pictures.

Dramatic and romantic elements, while fulfilling a certain function, are subordinate showmanship assets, the whole having values particularly for less sophisticated audiences.

The premise is simple. Moxie and Vera are a team of highpowered broadcasters. Sylvia, with the connivance of Georgie (who shares fun honors with Moxie), eventually makes poor worm Nick the ghost gag writer for the broadcast sensations. Turning egotistic big shot, Nick gets romantic with Vera, a situation compensated by Georgie's staged infatuation for Sylvia. Eventually Nick goes sour and is fired by Moxie. Then pathos and human interest of true husband-wife love, which winds up in glory as Vera, again working with Georgie, peddles a piece of anonymous philosophy to Durante which makes him the last word in air-wave popularity. As the sustaining story holds attention, atmospheric bits are contributed by the Mills Brothers, Holloway, Pallette, Irene Franklin, Stanley Fields and Minna Gombell.

Story, title and cast suggest some flash exploitation possibilities, either in direct tie ups with radio stations or sidewalk sound track reproduction. Comedy, however, is the outstanding selling asset. Push that element to the limit, even to the extent of going burlesque, with hints that a lot of inside stuff will be revealed.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Executive producer, Pandro S. Berman. Associate producer, H. N. Swanson. Directed by Elliott Nugent. Screen play by Maurine Watkins and Ralph Spence. Little Miss Marker

(Paramount-Schulberg)

Comedy-Drama

Using the preview audience's enthusiastic reaction as a gauge, here is quality entertainment and salable merchandise. It's gripping entertainment in which emotion-stirring human interest is not the least factor, yet wherein finely balanced drama, romance, comedy, suspense, excitement and colorful topical familiarity are potent assets, all presented in a coherent, understandable fashion that makes each element a valuable showmanship feature.

It's an adult story, but an all-family type picture, for both the Broadway crowd and the back home folk, and a thrill for the younger ones. It's a yarn of racetrack habitues, a tin horn bookie, slug-nutty hangers on, a torch singing night club queen, big shot gamblers and the legendary characters made famous in the Damon Runyon stories and familiar in "Lady For A Day," all tough mugs, grim but tender and a tiny child, Shirley Temple, is the heroine.

The story is showmanship, a unique idea; so is the acting. Menjou, in an entirely different character, is outstanding. Four-year-old Miss Temple is sensational.

Told in slangy, sometimes ribald but never objectionable style, here's the gist of the story. When Marky's father commits suicide, Sorrowful Jones gets Miss Marker, whom the losing father has left as security for his I. O. U. The shabby bookie doesn't know what to do with the child. However, the gang—Bangles, Regret, Sun Rise, Dizzy Memphis, Buggs, Bennie The Gouge, Canvas Back and Sore Toe—insist that he keep her. The affection Miss Bangles has for the child brings her close to Sorrowful and threatens to upset Big Steve's romance, with consequent dire results to Sorrowful. Marky, who hitherto only believed in King Arthur and the Knights Of The Round Table, takes on the lingo and mannerism of Sorrowful's mob. To preserve the child's belief, Sorrowful and Bangles prevail upon the crowd to dress up in King Arthur knightly costumes and the child's eyes pop at the revelation of her dreams come true as she rides the fully accoutered charger. Big Steve enters, sees that Bangles is slipping away from him, busts up the party, causes the horse to rear and throw Marky.

A blood transfusion is necessary to save the child's life. None of those who would willingly give are satisfactory, until Steve is tested. Triumphantly, because it gives him another opportunity to gloat over the poor worms, he supplies the necessary strength and then steps aside so that Sorrowful and Bangles can marry and adopt the cild.

In every phase, "Little Miss Marker" is quality sentimental entertainment. There's a laugh in almost every sequence, lots of exciting colorful thrill, and plenty of occasions for the women to get out handkerchiefs. And there's the child star to bring children flocking back to theatres.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Handy Andy

(Fox - Sol M. Wurtzel)

Comedy

Showmen, who like to sell their shows, have an exploitation gold mine in "Handy Andy." As fun-crammed entertainment, it's a worthy successor to "David Harum" that should come pretty near matching that picture's box office pace if full advantage is taken of the novel and unique interest-creating available showmanship assets.

It's a different Rogers story. A typical homely, clean and satisfying motivating yarn, to be sure, the kind that has made Rogers a sure-fire attraction for millions, but one that, taking on a slapstick atmosphere, becomes a side shaking comedy. There's showmanship and entertainment in the story of the old-fashioned corner druggist who finally succumbs to his socially ambitious wife's haranguings and sells the store.

But the real fun, the novel and different showmanship possibilities that smart showmen should enthusiastically welcome, is to be found in the specialties. Five sequences are natural for tricky adaptation. First is Rogers as a pigeon fancier, the birds getting loose and turning his wife's soiree into a shambles. As a side issue to this is the great dane busting up the singing lesson. Next is Rogers taking golf lessons, an entertainment and exploitation feature no one can afford to overlook. Third is the New Orleans Mardi Gras, setting for the final two. Rogers as Tarzan, leopard skin, stuffed club, the Tarzan screech and all doing a ridiculously burlesqued Apache dance with Conchita Montenegro that left the audience limp and finally Rogers belting the ladylike gigolo with his stuffed club to wind up in a cell.

Those are the main different merchandizing features supplementing the recognized Will Rogers drawing power. Supplementing them are the presentation of Peggy Wood, noted musical stage star; the romance surrounding and intriguingly presented by wholesome Mary Carlisle, Robert Taylor and the surprising performance of another newcomer, Frank Melton. Then there is the old friendship between druggist Will and old fashioned family doctor, Roger Imhof and the color which Conchita Montenegro, Adrian Rosley and Gregory Gaye introduce into the Mardi Gras sequences.

The show is for adults and kids, both should get an equal boot out of it. It's one that you can claim and expect much for and from. Sold in the spirit in which it is presented, there is every reason to anticipate a continuance of the "David Harum" business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Private Scandal

(Paramount-Rogers)

Comedy

Entertainment in the form of comedy mystery, hokum from start to finish, this picture adapts tried and true oldfashioned theatrics, with exaggerated fun creation, as the motivating factor. Its novelty lies in the effective use it makes of a liberal assortment of gags and situations from the old bag of comedy tricks. There's not a serious minute in the whole picture. While there's drama, romance, thrill, excitement, suspense, intrigue and mystery, the producers have loaded it up with a lot of foolish fun-making, supplied mainly by Ned Sparks but participated in by all—even the dead man—that alternately gave the preview audience the creeps and spasms of laughter.

The story is of the long dormant ten, twenty and thirty stuff, cleverly and smartly mixed up, with surprising developments and unanticipated events interluding.

The start is slow and unrevealing, precipitating the atmosphere that a heavy social-business drama is to follow. A man is shot, yet that's only a prologue for the farce. It may have been murder; maybe suicide. Either is logical. But from the moment Ned Sparks enters to investigate a telegram, to be assisted by all the cast, it's all fun.

At the time Somers was either killed or committed suicide, partner Barry, with whom the deceased had a money-matters dispute, was in the office, and his movements and explanations are decidedly suspicious. Secretary Coates (typical Pitts character) was in the ladies room. Robbins and the wisecracking phone girl, Miss Smith, were in Robbins' office doing a little necking. Terwilliger was sneaking a smoke. Jerome was tapping the till.

Baffled Riordan and his thick aid are more baffled as none will tell what they were doing, but all tell of a mysterious stranger and each gives a different description. Comes the coroner, a gay guy, to set the time of murder as at ten to twelve hours earlier than the time Riordan had set. There's more confusion, further shuffled by Deborah's sudden appearance, the sudden importance of the waiting insurance agent, making hash of all advance conclusions, and then the finale where all who have put the finger on the killer and even the super-Sherlock Holmers, Riordan, are completely upset.

"Private Scandal" is audience entertainment, even if it lacks the fancy wrapping of "big" cast names. It's okay for the youngsters, and it might not be a bad idea to get a lot of them in for every performance, calculating on their enthusiasm to infect the grown-ups. Dialogue is a bit broad in one or two instances, but not sharply so. Smart showmen, alert for something unique to offer patrons, should get behind this with a real interest-creating campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Honor of the Range

Western

With the considerable assistance of Tarzan, the handsome white steed which is his constant companion, especially in trouble, Ken Maynard, this time in a twin brother role, contrives to supply a measure of entertainment in tried and true western fashion. The picture has its bandit menace, its misunderstanding, its romance and its rough and tumble battles, with gun and fist.

The full quota of action is there, with a few slow spots compensated by those particularly active. The selling will be, of course, along direct western lines, making the most of the popularity which Ken Maynard may command in the particular community. With him again is Cecilia Parker, completing the romance, and Fred Kohler as the leader of the bandit gang. The twin brother angle injects a note of novelty into the material, which the exhibitor may be able to use to advantage in selling what is otherwise straight western action material.

Maynard, as the town's sheriff, runs into difficulty when the safe in his brother's store is robbed of $30,000 in cash placed there for safekeeping by Maynard, holding it for Miss Parker's father. Despite the fact that the brother is found tied up in the back room where the bandits have put him, he is implicated, since the combination of the safe is found on a slip of paper near by. The audience is witness to his perfidy. Maynard attempts to cover his brother, at least until he can get to the bottom of the theft, but the hard heads in the town strip him of his badge and lock him in the saloon back room, where the performers are quartered.

Meanwhile his brother, going to meet the bandits at their hideout for his share of the stolen cash, rushes to Miss Parker, engaged to Maynard, and persuades her to go with him, on the pretext that they are going to Maynard, who, his brother says, has been hurt. The brother and Miss Parker ride to the hideout, which is a cavern deep under a mountain, and are prisoners. The brother has taken Maynard's horse, Tarzan, as a further means of substantiating his story. At the same time, Maynard succeeds in getting loose from his fastenings, and dressed as the old stager who sings a few numbers, goes on the stage, holds up the roomful of people and makes good his escape on Tarzan, which has been sent back to get him by the brother, and is bearing a note in his saddle.

Tarzan guides him to the opening in the mountain, and Maynard, going in alone, finds Miss Parker being annoyed by Kohler, and the two come to grisp in a two-fisted encounter.

Straight western material, to be sold and played as such, the selling should be directed to the youngsters and western fans, and the film played in the weekend position.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Alan James. Story and screen play by Nate Gatzert. Photographed by Ted McCord. Release date, April 16, 1934. Running time, 61 minutes.

The Line-Up

(Columbia)

Drama

Drama which tends chiefly in the melodramatic direction. "The Line-Up" moves rapidly as it delves, from the police angle, into the fur-stealing racket, with the clever methods of the crooks and the eventually successful battle of the police.

Action drama is the selling tack to take, combining that with the romance of the young detective and the pretty young girl who becomes quite by accident a suspect. The expected misunderstanding occurs to disturb the even path of the romance when the girl is arrested, but she turns her wits to outguessing the crooks.

From the police line-up the film acquires its title, and there is some little use of that type of investigation in two sequences. In the leading role is William Gargan, a fairly popular player, and opposite him is Marian Nixon, who is known and capable. For the rest there are several familiar names, including Paul Hurst, as the dumb detective who supplies the comedy relief; John Miljan, Noel Francis. With the cast, then, showing no names that are outstanding marquee value of themselves, it will be necessary in the selling to concentrate on the story. There is no necessity of stressing anything of the gangster variety, selling it rather as action melodrama, with romance interwoven.

Hurst and Gargan are assigned to the fur-stealing racket, and Hurst's method consists in standing everybody in the daily line-up and asking questions. Miss Nixon is the hat-check girl at the hotel where the fur companies hold a fashion show. There, through a clever check-switching ruse, the crooks obtain an unusual coat from a visitor. When she complains the police are brought in and Gargan befriends Miss Nixon when Hurst would arrest her.

Meanwhile it is revealed that Miljan, with Miss Francis, is working the repository for the stolen furs in connection with his legitimate fur shop, operating at night through a tailor shop connected with the fur store. Gargan, who has taken time off to fall in love with Miss Nixon, and she with him, of course believes her innocent. When Miss Nixon takes a job with Miljan, whom she had previously met, Miss Francis gets out of trouble by sending Miss Nixon on a fictitious errand with the stolen coat. She is picked up and jailed, she and Gargan breaking when she refuses to believe he is trying to help her. Gargan obtains her release and, on a hunch, sets her on the trail of the gang.

There is fast action in the closing sequence, when the gang is trapped, and Miss Nixon is saved by Gargan from the ammonia fumes of the fur storage vault, where she had been thrown by the escaping gang, all of whom are caught.

Midweek is perhaps the best playing position. —Aaronson, New York.

Thirty Day Princess

(Paramount-Schulberg)

Comedy

Comedy entertainment, through which runs a unique and exciting romantic theme, is the predominating audience and showmanship value of this picture. Big enough from a story, production and cast viewpoint, necessary for first run quality, it is also full of that natural clever humanness that makes for popular all-family attractions.

Modern, semi-topical in atmosphere, located in New York, the yarn deals with familiar matters and situations in a smartly novel fashion. Fast moving, action compensating dialogue, the comedy, romance, light but sharp drama, political and newspaper excitement are logically worked into the premise of a commoner playing princess and a princess yearning to be a commoner. Sylvia Sidney, in a dual role, appears to better advantage than in any of her recent pictures, Cary Grant is effective and the remainder of the cast perform in the story's gay spirit.

The plot has two kinds of appeal. As comedy is the primary consideration, there's catchy romance for those who must have their love interest. Just as valuable, in view of present conditions, is the hectic semi-satirical sustaining element—a mythical foreign kingdom trying to float a bond issue in the United States. This, in itself, is an exploitation feature which, smartly tied-up with daily breaking news headlines anent war-debts, and nations defaulting on their bonds, should continually create timely interest.

Princess Catterina of Taronia gets the mumps as she arrives in the U. S., ostensibly on a good-will mission but actually to create favorable public opinion for a proposed bond issue. A substitute necessary, banker Grosham has hordes of detectives search New York until Nancy Lane, third rate actress and perfect double for the stricken Princess, is found. Nancy is unleashed to take Madison, publisher of the town's most influential paper and A-1 foreigner-baiter, for a sleigh ride. Over the fervid, patriotic protests of the managing editor, Madison softens his rabid editorial policy. In love with the girl, but awed by the fact that she's a Princess, and the girl in love with him awed by the fact that he's a big publisher—far beyond any show girl's dreams—the jealous protestations of suitor Count Nicholaus, plus the vitriolic opinions of the managing editor, create laugh-packed amusement. But in the climax, things work out as ordinary audiences like to see 'em work out. The real princess recovers to pass out bushels of decorations, and even though Madison is chagrined to think that he had been so successfully duped, he's satisfied to love Nancy Lane.

So many effective ways are available for selling this picture that picking out the best seems to be the hardest job. Names, theme, timeliness and comedy punch all are worthy of consideration. However, an advance that accents the picture's gayety appears necessary. Using the title as a basis, it's possible to go cleverly provocative and ask—"What Girl Wouldn't Like To Be a Thirty Day Princess?" "What Man Wouldn't Like To Fall in Love With a Princess?" and so on. Supplement the appeal by newspaper contacts and by taking advantage of news story breaks, particularly what happens in Congress regarding foreign loans.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Journal of a Crime

(Warner)

Drama

An atmosphere of heavy tragedy becomes the chief distinguishing factor of this weighty drama in which once again Ruth Chatterton portrays the suffering soul. Only a "happy ending" termination to the picture, which in itself appears a little illogical, saves the situation insofar as the exhibitor and the probable reaction of his patronage to the film is concerned.

The story, from the play by Jacques Deval, is virtually a character study, employing the pictorial art to depict the wearing mental effect of a murder suspected only by her husband, the manner in which she slowly goes to pieces despite a desperate effort to retain her self control, until she is ready to give way, when an amazing combination of accidents serves to enable her to take a fresh start.

It is that story which indicates this as a women's picture, almost exclusively, and forewarns what will be perhaps the best method of selling, a concentration on the story's elements with the electrical display pinned on the appearance of Miss Chatterton, supported in particular by Adolphe Menjou and Claire Dodd and several other familiar names. The individual exhibitor will be his own best judge in his own community of just how much selling attention he should devote to Miss Chatterton. The film is to a large extent lacking in action, naturally, with the exception of the earlier sequences.

Miss Chatterton is the wife of Menjou, a famous musical show author in Paris, where the entire scene is set. Menjou falls in love with Miss Dodd, the show's prima donna, a fact of which Miss Chatterton is too well aware. She is intensely in love with her husband, and at the all-important dress rehearsal comes in backstage and kills Miss Dodd. An escaping bank teller murderer who had sought refuge in the theatre is found there by pursuing police and charged with the crime. Miss Chatterton's guilt is discovered only by her husband, when he finds his pistol backstage.

He condemns her to stay with him in the house, promising with fearful assurance that she eventually will fall a victim to her own crushing conscience and thereby come to her guilty doom. He keeps a diary to record her progressing reaction to her fate. Some months pass, and unaccountably, he slowly experiences a change of heart toward the wife who killed the woman he thought he loved. His contempt turns to pity and he comes to aid his wife in her struggle with herself. When the bank robber is executed she falls ill, and after partial recovery, decides to confess. By this time Menjou is fighting with her. On her way, she saves a small boy from the wheels of a truck, is herself hit, and suffers a form of amnesia which completely destroys all memory of her past. On the happy note of beginning again together the story ends.

The picture is for adults, and women, on whom the exhibitor should concentrate.—Aaronson, New York.

Just Smith

(Gaumont British)

Comedy

As the inaugural feature at the newly opened Westminster theatre in New York, planned as the local home of British motion pictures, "Just Smith" develops values as light comedy affair, done in typically British style, yet containing moments of amusement for almost any audience.

Tom Walls plays the lead and directed the film, which is an adaptation of the well known stage play by Frederick Lonsdale, "Never Come Back." With the exception of one player, Hartley Power, in the role of an American, the cast is English and dialogue is heavily tinged with the accent of the King's English. It is also true that the film for the most part lacks the action which American screen audiences have come to look for in their motion picture entertainment.

Walls may be somewhat familiar to some of the patrons, but the rest of the cast is quite certain to be entirely unknown. It is rather definitely the case of a stage play transplanted, rather than translated to the screen, and as such relies for the most part on dialogue for its pace and action. It is strictly a one-man picture.

That is all on the debit side of the potentiality ledger. On the credit side is the fact that Walls is an engaging and highly entertaining performer as the smooth and subtle crook. The dialogue is for the most part smart and clever and the settings are elaborate and effective. The selling angle should picture Walls as a clever, consummate crook, with light-fingered habits and yet taking ways in other directions, also. He saves the girl with whom he has fallen in love, first from a criminal offense, next from an unwelcome marriage, then fades out of sight rather than permit her to marry a crook with whom she never could be really happy.

Moving from Monte Carlo aboard a yacht which Power, an old confederate of Walls from America, has acquired momentarily, the two wangle an invitation to the house party at the country home of the girl's mother, where they hope also to acquire a large amount of bonds she has in a wall safe. The lady shows her jewels to the other guests, including a brilliant diamond necklace, and later discovers it is missing. The police arrive, Walls discovers that the daughter herself has taken it to prevent her mother giving it away, and takes it from the girl's bag. Eventually and cleverly he returns it—to the unsuspecting pocket of the annoying bridegroom-to-be, and the case is dropped. The girl is equally in love with Walls, but in a few minutes he disabuses her mind, revealing himself in his true identity as a crook.

It is lively in dialogue and amusing comedy. The obstacles noted require the exhibitor's own judgment in handling.—Aaronson, New York.

We're Not Dressing

(Paramount)

Musical Romance

In a musical romance which is tunefully "catchy" and on the whole brightly entertaining, Bing Crosby of radio and screen offers songs almost to the point of satiety, the entire film serving, in its various scenes, virtually as a series of interludes between the vocal efforts of Crosby.

Cast in the mold and mood of the musical comedy, the picture presents to the exhibitor above all else a group of marquee name values which reads like a radio roster. Beside Crosby are George Burns and Gracie Allen and Ethel Merman, while Carole Lombard and Leon Errol are the screen names available. The concentration in theatre selling, therefore, should be on names and music, with Crosby counted upon as the biggest asset the picture possesses.

The story is typically fiction of the musical show variety, meant to be little else than a peg on which to hang the singing of Crosby and Miss Merman and the comedy of Errol and Burns and Allen. The film is fairly well spotted with laughs, with the Burns and Allen material of their usual radio standard. Something in the way of copy may be developed from the theme of the yarn, which concerns the sailor on a large private yacht, who plays the Admirable Crichton on an island in the Pacific when they are shipwrecked and finally wins the attractive owner.

Because of the young set's familiarity with Crosby and the Burns and Allen combination, on the radio, showmen should make the most of the Crosby starring role. For the rest the exhibitor may put over the idea of tuneful light entertainment. The use of loud speakers in the lobby, broadcasting the song numbers, should prove effective.

On board the yacht, where owner Miss Lombard is pursued by a pair of smooth and handsome masculine gold diggers, Crosby is very much the singing sailor in whom the owner has a definite interest. On board, Errol, engaged to Miss Merman, carries on his antics, aided by his fiancee, until Errol's carelessness with a bottle causes shipwreck on a reef. Marooned on the island, Crosby takes charge, much to the expressed annoyance of Miss Lombard, and makes em work if they want to eat. On another side of the island are Burns and Allen, naturalists, and Miss Allen demonstrates her remarkable inventions to Burns the while accompanying herself with chatter in her usual style.

Finally they are rescued, with Crosby bitterly resentful, in the belief that wealthy Miss Lombard is making fun of his serious attentions and intentions. Miss Lombard and Crosby board different rescue ships, but she transfers to his in order to protest, successfully, that she really was not laughing at him.

As musical comedy romance, however fictional in content, "We're Not Dressing" is entertaining, with Crosby, music and comedy to sell and the entire family to shoot at.—AARONSON, New York.

Shame of a Nation

(Du World Pictures)

Drama

This dramatic adaptation of the novel by Ernst Johannsen, "Shame of a Nation," is virtually propaganda against war. As such it is strong material, technically good as far as photography is concerned, and significant in theme and development. But as popular motion picture entertainment, it is lacking in certain vital elements. No semblance of humor of a relieving nature is introduced. Secondly, it is the stark tragedy of war which makes up the greater part of the footage, whether that be at the front, as most of it is, or back home, where the evil consequences of war are depicted.

However well done with effective simplicity, it is at the same time heavy in the extreme, with such sequences as that in a base hospital immediately behind the lines typical. There are seen many soldiers in varying states of physical and mental collapse, and there are heard the screams of the wonded in their agony.

The picture was produced in Europe, the performers all unknown in this country. The English dialogue, which is used for the most part, is to an extent unintelligible. The action in its entirety concerns the German forces with the complication of plot developing in a German town.

The scene shifts from one of carnage in the front line trenches to a billet behind the German lines where a group of soldiers are being served with coffee by the daughter of the house. One young soldier, Stephen, is in love with the girl. The company is called to the front, where he, seeing an opportunity to be with the girl again, volunteers to carry to regimental headquarters a message asking help for the company which is being cut to ribbons by enemy fire. He marries the girl, returns and meets his friend, Carl, who is on his way home on furlough. Carl is happy at the thought of the good food and the pretty wife he is sure will be awaiting him. Instead he finds nothing but poverty and starvation, and his young wife in the arms of a local storekeeper.

Her pleas that she went to him because she had to have food make no impression on him. He refrains from killing them both, but leaves again for the front without a word to her. During his absence Stephen is caught in a shell hole outpost and dies after a hand-to-hand encounter with a French soldier. Carl volunteers for the dangerous job of manning an advanced machine gun, in an effort to stem a French attack. The Germans are defeated, Carl is badly wounded and in the hospital he deliriously asks his wife to forgive him.—AARONSON, New York.

Drama

An exposure of the crooked divorce "business" conducted by not too scrupulous lawyers in New York, this film is the sort of material with which the exhibitor, especially in the outlying sections, should exercise considerable care in the selling. A sensational type of campaign would hardly be advisable, since that might serve to stir objections to the film's theme. Better, perhaps, would be a straight presentation of the story, as drama, making the most of the angle by which a father, through such procedure, comes very close to wrecking the life of his daughter.

The "unknown blonde" of the title appears to be the daughter herself, which offers an opportunity for tying in title and theme in selling. Of names there are few, none being of outstanding marquee caliber. The most will have to be made of those of Edward Arnold, who adds performance value to the production, John Miljan, Dorothy Revier and Barbara Barondess, none important enough to bill high. There is a consequent necessity of selling the story alone. There is little opportunity for outside exploitation. It is suggested that too much emphasis on the title line might well have the unfortunate effect of "scaring away" masculine patronage by reason of a feminine appeal implication.

Arnold, a particularly ethical type of attorney, is deeply in love with wife Dorothy Revier and daughter Arletta Duncan, overlooking his wife's extravagances and unaware of her affair with Miljan, broker. In order to obtain money to cover her stock losses, of which he knows nothing, Arnold consents to work with Clarence Wilson, shyster lawyer, on a framed divorce case for the money in it. When the hired corespondent fails to keep his end of the bargain, Arnold, called at his home, substitutes, with Miss Barondess as the woman in the case. Arnold's wife takes advantage of the opportunity thus offered, appears with witnesses and divorces her unsuspecting husband, taking the daughter with her against her husband's will, and marrying Miljan.

Arnold goes in for the divorce mill, with Wilson as partner, in a big, and eventually extremely successful way. His efforts to see his daughter are futile since Miss Revier has turned the girl against her father. Tired of her behavior, Miljan hires Arnold to obtain a divorce from Miss Revier. Arnold does it, pretends to have regained his affection for his wife, then throws her out. He is called to handle another case, that of framing a young girl, married to a wealthy boy, at the instigation of the boy's mother. As the trick is turned, he finds he has framed his own daughter. When she is on the witness stand, he acknowledges his crookedness, knowing that he will suffer disgrace and disbarment, but thus insures the happiness of his daughter and her young husband.

The most effective selling method should be as straight drama, with an indication of the expose type of material and some inkling of the plot elements of the story. It is adult material, perhaps best played in a midweek position.—AARONSON, New York.

A Phil Goldstone Production. Distributed by Majestic. Directed by Hobart Henley. From the novel, "Collusion," by Theodore D. Irwin. Screen play by Leonard Fields and David Silverstein. Photographed by Ira Morgan. Settings by Ralph Oberg. Film editor, Otis Garrett. Sound engineer, Louis Myers. Release date, April 16, 1934. Running time, 67 minutes.

The Lost Jungle

(Mascot)

Action Serial

Taking the animals of the Hagenbach-Wallace circus in wholesale lots, Mascot has constructed a serial, which, starring the brilliant young animal trainer Clyde Beatty of circus fame, bids fair to offer all the action material which the youngsters especially like and look for in their serial diet on the screen. With spring and circus time hovering near at the moment, this serial has a natural tieup. With Beatty are Cecilia Parker for the romantic interest, Syd Saylor, as a circus press agent, for comedy and Warner Richmond for the menace. Beatty, after putting his large group of diversified wild animals through their paces under the big top, which has its moments of thrill, starts for India across the Pacific in a dirigible, with Richmond and Saylor. Wrecked, they land on a strange island, teeming with wild animals of all varieties. Richmond, separated from the others, comes upon a buried city and treasure, and the other two find the camp of an explorer who has been in search of that city. Beatty's ability to handle the animals provides plenty of action and numerous thrills. If the first two chapters are any criterion, the serial should be a popular subject. Each of the 12 chapters runs approximately 20 minutes. The subject is available either as serial, feature or split as an opening feature and follow-up serial.

Let's Play Post Office

(Vitaphone)

Smart Entertainment

With the novel story idea of a rebuilding of the local post office in the interests of greater efficiency by the installation of girls of the chorus variety, this musical subject is a rather completely entertaining short. The dance numbers are cleverly done and attractive, the auction sale of "dead letter" merchandise injects a note of humor and several specialty performers do their work capably. Highly entertaining on the whole.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Cannibal Islands

(Vitaphone)

Interesting

One of the E. M. Newman Musical World Journeys, this subject carries the screen audience into the savage islands of the South Seas, where, on the seacoast, the influence of British civilization prevails, in sharp contrast to the savage behavior of the native blacks of the interior. Mr. Newman accompanies the subject with a lucid and interesting explanation. The subject should be of general interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Paramount home office executives and district managers met at the Edgewater Beach hotel over the weekend to plan the company's sales policy for the new season. George J. Schaefer, general sales manager, presided. It was revealed that Paramount will release 64 features, 100 single reelers and 24 other short subjects next season.

The first case to come before the local grievance board was that of Ben Bartlestein of the Annette theatre, Cicero, against Schoenstadt's, the complaint being that of overbuying to deprive the Annette of sufficient product.

The code authority offices, with Emma Abplanalp as secretary, have been opened in room 307 Standard Oil building.

Sig Decker, formerly with RKO, is now ensconced behind a desk of Security Pictures.

Charles Mensing has left for Memphis, Tenn., where he will manage the theatre in that city operated by Courshon & Solomon.

Sam Tishman, who operates the Paramount, in Wheaton, has taken over the Tivoli, at Downers Grove, formerly operated by Stern and Brockell.

Henri Ellman has acquired rights to "Guilty Parents" which he will put out as a roadshow.

The Groveland theatre, 31st and Cottage Grove, will be opened in several weeks by the owner of the building.

Roy Alexander has sold the Tivoli theatre in Gary, Ind., to V. Young.

Giveaways are said to be staging a comeback in this territory, with some 50 houses reported using then in various forms.

Plans for formation of a local Variety Club were discussed at a dinner last Monday night at the Medinah Club.

Officers and directors of Allied Theatres Association will hold a meeting in Chicago at the Congress hotel May 12 and 13.

Johnny Mednikow has joined the staff of National Screen Service covering the city territory.

Balaban Reelected As B. & K. President

Barney Balaban was reelected to the presidency of Balaban & Katz at the annual stockholders' meeting in Chicago last week. The nine directors also were reelected.

All other officers were reelected, as follows: Walter Immerman and Sam Dembow, Jr., vice-presidents; John Balaban, secretary-treasurer; Elmer C. Upton, assistant secretary-treasurer. The directors are Barney Balaban, John Balaban, Austin C. Keough, C. A. McCulloch, Y. Frank Freeman, George J. Schaefer, W. B. Cokell, E. Paul Phillips and Ralph A. Kohn.

Ostrow to Universal

Lou Ostrow, executive producer for Monogram Pictures, is understood to be leaving that post to take charge of serial production at Universal.

MGM Plans To Distribute Its Own Trailers

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will handle its own trailer distribution beginning in January, 1935, David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer of the company, indicated last week in New York.

"We are planning such a step," Mr. Bernstein said, "but I cannot say definitely whether we actually will do it."

It was learned this week that actual sales of the trailer by Metro were started this week, the service to take effect with the first 1935 release next January 4th.

MGM has been making its own trailers for features since early in February, the first one to come from its studios being that for "Queen Christina." National Screen Service, however, has continued to handle the distribution for the trailers, MGM supplying one positive and one negative of each trailer, and National Screen making the prints. MGM's trailer production on the coast is in charge of Frank Whitbeck.

National Screen's contracts with MGM expire at the end of the year, and when the plan goes into effect exhibitors will contract directly with MGM exchanges for this service. The company's contractual relations with National have been on a year-to-year basis over a long period.

MGM officials feel the plan offers the opportunity to work farther in advance on this type of advertising and exploitation, and point out that a company handling its own trailer service further finds it possible to begin preparation of a trailer coincident with the start of a film's production, instead of waiting until the feature has been completed. Larger selection of special scenes and music also is offered.

Warner is the only other large company making its own trailers. National Screen Service recently entered into a contract with the company to produce special playlets for use by Warners as trailer novelties.

Rogers To Remain at Paramount Until July 1

Charles Rogers will remain with Paramount as a producer until July 1, although his contract expires next month, it was announced this week. By that date his scheduled 10 features will be finished.

B. P. Schulberg also is completing one year on his Paramount contract for eight pictures, with three now in work, and two yet to be put into production. He expects to finish in August.

Harry Joe Brown, formerly vice-president of Charles Rogers Productions, releasing through Paramount, has been signed to a long term contract as associate producer, by Warner. His contract with Warner becomes effective July 1.

White in Meyers' Place

Jules White has succeeded Zion Meyers as head of Columbia's short subject production on the Coast. Hugh Collum, former private secretary to Harry Cohn, has been named business manager.

1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

ANN CARVER'S PROFESSION: Fay Wray—Ran this a little late but had lots of favorable comments and receipts were ahead of some of the so-called big ones. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones, Diane Sinclair—A good western. All Buck Jones' are good. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook, Reginald Denny—Played this on a double Saturday bill and gave good satisfaction to a country audience. Picture is the kind that satisfies the country people that want action and not art.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Will please your westerns fans 100 per cent and will entertain any others that you can get in to see it. Drew well in my town. Played Saturday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex Small town and rural patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Fine business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Truly a wonderful production, but did not draw at box-office for us. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—Nice family picture. Pleased our entire audience. Ann Sothern looks good and we want to see more of her.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young—This is a very good picture but we found it was very hard to put over in this small town. The acting of Spencer Tracy is wonderful but our patrons do not care for him. Therefore, this was a grand flop for us. Played Apr. 9-10.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Jones comes through as usual with a fine performance. A fast moving western, all action, not a dull moment. You can bet on Columbia's westerns. They will all come through at the box-office.—Fred M. Elking, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Buck Jones' latest and just as good as usual. Buck seems to be the most popular of the western stars just at present and we for one cannot get enough of features with him to satisfy our demand.—L. G. Tewskury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—A good picture of its kind. A hospital picture no good at the box-office. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Bruce Cabot, Mary Brian—A fine program picture. Good story and well acted. Prison pictures as a rule don't give general satisfaction but this one seemed to do the trick. Played on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—Very good action picture with an airplane setting. Some excellent air race shots and several good crackups. Don't fail to play it if your patrons go for action. Played Apr. 13-14.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Jean Parker—Put forth an extra effort on this picture and was amply rewarded. It's one of these program picture that come along once in a while that brings you out of the red caused by last high priced so-called special played. Your patrons will walk out satisfied. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Charles Farrell, Bette Davis—Simple story, fair cast, very good program.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone—Ran this on our Bargain Days and pleased a large crowd. Played Family Days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—Swell comedy to extra business on Wednesday and Thursday.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—Did nice business on this one. Some of our patrons were laughing for a week after seeing it. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

DARK HAZARD: Edward G. Robinson—Not so hot. Played Apr. 18-19.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DARK HAZARD: Edward G. Robinson—Good picture to satisfactory business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell—Did a nice business on Sunday but flopped the other two days. It is a good picture, just a little above the average.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—If you like 'em fast and full of pep with plenty of comedy thrown in, this is it. Drew well for us and pleased. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

I LOVED A WOMAN: Edward G. Robinson, Kay Francis—A very good picture but did not draw for us. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Kay Francis is a favorite here and the picture did above average business. Not so good for small towns but we got by without any complaint.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—A good program picture with a change of cast for this company, also a change in location. Tropical scenes very well done, with excellent photography. Running time, seven reels. Played Apr. 13-14.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—Well liked by those who saw it, but very few came in to see it. Don't know why, it is a swell picture.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—The best Joe E. Brown to date. Business very good and it sure did please our patrons. For the first time in this house, Joe E. Brown got us some business. Played Apr. 14-15.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—The best Joe Brown to date; also got some money for me, and don't that mean something?—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—A dandy picture. Clean and wholesome. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 1-2-3.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio—Very spectacular musical production that did not get the business the previous Warner musicals did. Jolson makes his screen comeback with a very good performance; the rest of the cast also are good. This picture should please every one and if exploited enough it will draw well. Warners are using two trailers on this and I believe these play the largest part in selling the picture. The trailers are excellent; the first one is a short subject in itself. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Apr. 24-25.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—If you can get them in you will send them away satisfied. Personally, I consider this one among the best pictures released this year. But it didn't have the drawing power for us. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—A story that is different, but we do not take in film rental. The picture was okay but the star does not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—A very well played picture, exceptional work on the part of Helen Vinson. An interesting story wonderfully presented. Played Apr. 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Young—Good entertainment. All three players good in their parts. In April 14 issue of the Herald Dad Jenkins reports Janet Gaynor as taking the part of the widow. I thought Dad had quit drinking since he has been laid up, but he must have broken over on his first night out. I would suggest he keep sober if he is going to report on pictures. Played Apr. 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Young—A very beautiful picture; have never seen Gaynor in more facetious picture. Don't let this one pass by. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Apr. 16.—Will Pence, Melba Theatre, Goldthwaite, Tex. General patronage.

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—Holy Week can't hurt my business when Janet Gaynor comes to town. They simply have to see her! Running time, 95 minutes. Played Mar. 28-29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—Will is still the daddy of them all. "David Harum" is a natural for this ace. Some of the younger set were not over-enthused, but who cares for that as long as there were many others to make up for these hair-brains. Rain on the second night hurt business materially. Business above average and that is saying a whole lot, considering that people are still idle and without money to spend for movies. Played Apr. 18-19.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Splendid. Enjoyed by everybody, old and young. Especially the older generation. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Apr. 11-12-13.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

DEVIL TIGER: Kane Richmond, Marion Burns—Evidently, entirely made in the studio. Consider it good for this class picture. Children will like it. Played Apr. 14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—A good show. Holds suspense all the way through. Well produced and well acted. One actor does not take up the whole picture. Business average in spite of snow blizzard. The actress of the Mae West type and style is fine. George O'Brien is always a he-man. The little Jew almost steals the show. Fox leads in the outdoor pictures; they are out of the ordinary. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Mar. 10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster—Not so hot. Fox has many pictures better than this. A few nice shots of the World's Fair at Chicago and some good scenes of carnival life. We played it on a double bill to get by. Played in April.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey—This is a very fine picture. Business above average and everybody pleased. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Mar. 21-22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey, Gene Raymond—A very clever picture that every one should like. Only objection that it is too long and too many puppet shows. Running time, 14 reels. Played Apr. 2.—Will Pence, Melba Theatre, Goldthwaite, Tex. General patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy—Good action picture. Business was below average on Friday and Saturday. The picture will get by.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—The best we have had from Rogers in some time. "Doctor Bull" was good but this one is better. Played Apr. 16-17.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—Swell picture for the small town. Good down to earth stuff, simple and human. Easy money for Rogers and the producer. Played Apr. 1-3.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—Not so bad, but it did not click. Too much foreign atmosphere and too much broken English.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—My town is only 30 miles from John Boles' old home town. Consequently we can always count on a few extra when we have him. Played Family Days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—Most people liked the picture. It is cute and entertaining. Will go well in any town.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

ORIENT EXPRESS: Heather Angel, Norman Foster—A flivver. Played Apr. 6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor—Nice picture to satisfactory business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Fine. People like nice clean drama. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Apr. 15-16-17.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinville, Ore. Local patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—Good program picture. Played Apr. 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans, Alice Brady, Otto Kruger—Very good picture that got a little above average dough at the box-office. Pleased generally.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Excellent story of the stage and movies that drew extra business. This had a wonderful story and some good music.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Ramon Novarro, Jeanette MacDonald—Did not do well for me. The picture has wonderful music and good singing. I could not get them in.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Ramon Novarro, Jeanette MacDonald—Just so-so. Didn't get all the quarters by several, nor did every one who saw it have a good word for it.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—A wonderful cast liked by few. We think it was rotten, and so did most of the crowd. Played Mar. 19.—Will Pence, Melba Theatre, Goldthwaite, Tex. General patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—This was a big disappomtment. It seems all the super specials made by adding the ingredients of big names are not popular. If it had not been for Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow the whole thing would have been one big flop. Of course, the picture was a wonderful production, but it did not please in this town. I did not hear one favorable comment. Running time, 113 minutes. Played Mar. 17-18-19-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—A great picture by a galaxy of high priced stars. The acting is everything one could desire, each part portrayed admirably, but for a small town theatre I am afraid it is too highbrow. Would go over great in big cities, but the small house cannot afford such high priced features that appeal only to one class of patron. Average business. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Apr. 9-10.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: All Star—A grand parade of stars with nothing to do and they spend an hour and fifty minutes doing it. One of my patrons said that it should be against the law to get people's money under false pretense. I had plenty of walkouts and refunds on this one and barely got film rental out of it. The best part of the whole silly thing was when John Barrymore committed suicide and it would have been much better if it had happened in the first reel. I can't see why on earth any company will take all the best stars in the business and waste eleven reels of film like this and sell it to an exhibitor as an outstanding special at an outrageous price and they will have the nerve to some around next season trying to sell you again. Well, if they sell me again, they will have to bring Dillinger and a couple of machine guns with them. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Apr. 19-20.—Fred M. Elking, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

TWO MORE TEXANS JOIN REPORTERS

In this issue appear the first reports to "What the Picture Did for Me" from the following:

Will Pence, Melba Theatre at Goldthwaite, Texas.

Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—This is an outstanding production and pleased my patrons in general. Better liked than "Dinner at Eight." I thought I was going to starve to death with this one, but to my great surprise it was much talked about and well liked. The weather was mean on every night and this did not give the picture a fair chance. Running time, 117 minutes. Played Mar. 24-25-26-27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. General natronage.

FUGITIVE LOVERS: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—This picture was disappointing to me, because the patronage was poor. Those who saw it enjoyed it, but for a Saturday night the gross was below average. Played Apr. 14.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural natronage.

FUGITIVE LOVERS: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—Pleased nearly 100 per cent and got some money. That should be enough to say about any picture.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General natronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies—Did just ordinary business. Too much Bing Crosby.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies, Bing Crosby—The High School selected this one for a benefit. They sold a lot of tickets in a house to house canvass. The school is always well patronized. On account of an attack of pleurisy I was unable to see the show, but the committee told me they were well pleased. It was a swell show and the receipts were satisfactory. So I will have to say, another big one from the ace of producers, M-G-M! Running time, 78 minutes. Played Feb. 28-Mar. 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Bing Crosby, Marion Davies—A fairly good program picture. Not a special by any means, although it was sold as one. If your patrons like Crosby they will probably like it, as it is all Crosby. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Apr. 16-17.—Fred M. Elkin, Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C. General patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies, Bing Crosby—Very good musical. Pleased most everybody. A good family picture.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

HELL BELOW: Walter Huston, Robert Montgomery—This is old but it's worth playing anywhere. A great picture of navy life. Probably too much warfare for the ladies but still has love interest. Run it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker, Robert Young—Our patrons enioyed this. It's different for a change. Consider it a good program picture. Played Apr. 10-11.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Smalltown patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Splendid picture. But if your patrons dislike pictures with the sad and dramatic endings you can expect some unfavorable comment. The entire cast is excellent and the hospital theme is the best of its type we've seen on the screen. Gable is very, very good as the young doctor. Just fair business, but should draw well if you push it enough. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Apr. 17-18.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—We ran this for a midnight show and was well received. Good entertainment for this class of picture. Played Apr. 7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery, Elizabeth Allan—A good mystery story. Well acted and very enjoyable. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9-10.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—The first from Garbo in two years and I hope she waits three years to make the next one. Did a little above film rental, but very little. Everyone gave me the razz the next day and that didn't do the next day's business any good. When will producers learn that 75 per cent of the show going public don't give a —— what they did a century ago, especially when it is across the pond.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—Business terrible. Those unfortunates who did spend their money to see the show were disgusted. Not one kind word for the foreigner. Running time, 103 minutes. Played Apr. 2-3.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—A wonderful production. Both stars great. Gave satisfaction to them we got in to see it but did a very small business on the picture. Too big and too good for a country town. Played Apr. 15-16.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Old but good. Fine print from New Orleans Exchange. Thanks—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—A dandy. Good comedy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—Excellent, although not as good as "Pardon Us," but I took one of the worst lickings on this of any in a long time. I have my first picture to make a dime on from this pair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Russell Hardie, Maureen O'Sullivan—Very good to average business. —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—You cannot go wrong on this best of all action pictures. It kept our patrons gasping every minute, as it never had a dull moment in its 105 minutes. Camera work and sound the very best. Promise your patrons anything and everything and they will certainly not be disappointed. We did not do as well as expected, probably due to changing the advertised date. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Apr. 21.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Good picture and well liked. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 4-5.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Received many favorable comments on this nice picture, full of human interest. Nicely handled and certainly pleased those that saw it. Barrymore and supporting cast are excellent. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Apr. 23.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—A nice picture. Business not so good, no doubt because it preceded "David Harum." I never have been able to have two big nights in one week. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 16-17.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler—Here is a picture that will draw the cash customers. A rough and ready picture that will make them laugh. Playing it here meant the second largest gross during the past year. Played Apr. 14-15.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—Good picture but try to get your patrons in at the beginning of the picture, or they will ask you what it's all about. Here is a story with a moral. It has comedy. —Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOMEN IN HIS LIFE, THE: Otto Kruger—This is not bad entertainment. It will please nearly all, excepting those who cannot believe that love can never die. We had some fossils who walked out for this reason. Nevertheless the picture is well acted throughout. Otto Kruger has a fine voice and is handsome and is an accomplished actor. With everybody idle, naturally the theatre was empty. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Feb. 26-27-28.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMEN IN HIS LIFE, THE: Otto Kruger, Isabel Jewell—Here was a surprise picture for me. I tried to cancel this and was scared to death, but to my surprise it did far above average business as well as drew many favorable comments.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson, Jean Parker—It hurts me to say that this picture made a new low for me. I thought it one of the very best pictures I had ever seen. It is difficult to understand why such pictures are shunned. It is clean and has a big moral, is well acted by a capable cast, yet for some reason I did not gross enough to pay even the shorts on the program. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Apr. 9-10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson, Jean Parker—We call this good entertainment ,and while not as good as "Lady for a Day," May Robson was excellent in her part and she is the whole show. Played Apr. 17-18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Monogram

RIDERS OF DESTINY: John Wayne—Played this on a Saturday double bill and gave good satisfaction to a country audience. Good picture of the kind that satisfies the country people that want action and not art.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard, Sally Rand—Good entertainment. Nothing to shout about but a good program picture. Played Apr. 15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Much better than I expected, due to some adverse reports I read in this sheet. Although did only average at the box-office. About the same thing you saw the other time you played them.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

EIGHT GIRLS IN A BOAT: Kay Johnson, Dorothy Wilson, Douglass Montgomery—Was very much surprised at the drawing power of this picture; it did very well. Story interesting. The ladies liked it fine and the girls brought in the men and some girls in this one.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—Extra good, with Roscoe Ates taking the honors. This boy was good and always draws a packed house. This boy has made me several hundred dollars in the last few years.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

GOOD DAME: Sylvia Sidney, Fredric March—Poor story. Too dirty and not worthy of either Sidney or March. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Apr. 7—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Played it old and after we supposed everyone had seen it and still did more than double our regular business on Wednesday and Thursday. I guess it pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott, Verna Hillie—Very good Friday and Saturday picture. The type the farmers like. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles, Lanny Ross—This picture was disappointing at the box-office but pleased quite a number. It is not as good as former pictures of this type that Paramount has given us, but nevertheless will win approval in small towns. Some very good music that will please. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Apr. 19-20.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—Picture is good and it did a good business. Alice Brady helped a lot.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Larry "Buster" Crabbe, Ida Lupino—A hit. Fine comedy, very well played. Very well received. Played Apr. 8-9.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Ginger Rogers—Pretty good musical but not good at the box-office. I guess the public is getting tired of musicals. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Ginger Rogers Jack Haley—A lot of song hits but the radio plays 'em out before the small town gets them. The result is that people lose their interest. Played Apr. 15-16—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Got money but didn't please as should, although personally thought it about as good as any of the musicals.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Alison Skipworth, W. C. Fields, Burns and Allen—You laugh, in fact, you'll roar. Played Apr. 13-14.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb Small town patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields, Burns and Allen—Got a good crowd and pleased all. One of the best comedies in a long time.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—This one is so full of extraordinary screen talent it would be hard to tell which one is the star. However, it is the best musical to date and it serves as good entertainment for all classes of movie patrons. It's good box-office and will stand position on your strongest nights. First part of week to better than average business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight, "Buddy" Rogers—Good little musical show, yet it lacks something for it to go over in a better way. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Apr. 11.—Will Pence, Goldthwaite, Tex. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields—It is silly but there are plenty of laughs and it did very well on Friday and Saturday.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—A host of players who knew what it is all about, coupled up with a Zane Grey story, give you an action talking picture that has not been surpassed by anyone and the outcome was better than average business the last three days of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft, Adolphe Menjou—A very ordinary picture. Slow action. No suspense and a hot dance that means nothing but criticism to the exhibitor. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Apr. 14.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan, Ralph Bellamy—Good old Dix, he usually comes through satisfactorily and this one is no exception. Noise of planes held down to a minimum in this picture, which pleased everybody, because most airplane pictures overdo the whine of the planes.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Me. Small town patronage.

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett, Gilbert Roland—Constance Bennett still has followers in this town. Showed this one with the High School play as opposition and broke even. This is doing something, indeed. Played Apr. 11-12.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett, Gilbert Roland—A spy story very much after the pattern of "I Was a Spy," but not so good; didn't draw as good. However, it is good entertainment if you can get your patrons to the point where they don't mind being reminded about the late war and its horrors. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio—Receipts did not equal "Little Women" although there were more favorable comments made on this one than on "Little Women." Freakish weather was against us. One night a severe electrical storm and the following night a blizzard. Business above average. A very interesting super special production. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Mar. 3-4-5-6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOODBYE LOVE: Charles Ruggles—Goodbye business! Running time, 68 minutes. Played Mar. 12-13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—A good show with lots of comedy and many laughs. Business above average. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Mar. 31.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not as good as "So This Is Africa," and not near as heavy at the box-office as their former picture. But nevertheless it is a good picture and will satisfy the Wheeler and Woolsey fans. Musical numbers were very good. Played Apr. 21-22.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—One of the best this pair have ever been in. We would have cleaned up but it rained us out both days. The picture is good, step on it. Played Apr.

QUIGLEY BOOKSHOP

1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK

20-21.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

IF I WERE FREE: Irene Dunne, Clive Brook—A good title but the picture only interesting for the old folks. Thankful to say business was average. Good acting but exceptionally slow, sagging material. It followed "Flying Down to Rio" and perhaps that made it appear worse than what it actually was. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Mar. 7-8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston, Frances Dee—A very hard picture to sell. It's about a man's love for a horse. It carries you through the war up until the present day, but people do not seem to care for this sort of entertainment. Played Apr. 6-7. —J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Boris Karloff—This is a swell picture for the men. The women will not like it, it has too much killing in it. Business good the first day, but what a flop on the second day's run. Played Apr. 13-14.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness —An extremely interesting picture. As clean as your mother's smile. (What a relief!) Instructive as well. One man said, "If I could see a show as clean as this I would come every week." We need more clean pictures, then perhaps we could get back those whom suggestiveness and filth have driven from our theatre. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Apr. 14-15.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—The picture that gained for the star the 1933 award and rightly so. It gives Hepburn a chance to show her versatility as an actress, and do the ladies go for it in a big way. We had more women on the first night of this picture than any for some time but we did not gross so high, for the men were conspicuous by their absence. Good business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 11-12.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—A good, entertaining picture, cheapened by a drunken woman and her bottle, always disgusting. Added to this was the disrobing of the heroine before the camera. There is nothing sacred anymore. Norman Foster is pleasing, plain spoken and natural. Different plot. Good comedy features. Played Apr. 21-22.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich. Small town patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding, Nils Asther—For once RKO has made a real fine picture. This one has a little of everything in it and holds the interest to the very end. Put it on as a benefit for the Tennis Club and they were well pleased. Played Apr. 4-5.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack —Used this on Family Night and it seemed to give 100 per cent satisfaction. It is not another "King Kong," so don't expect it. Played Apr. 18.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SUCCESS AT ANY PRICE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Colleen Moore—Excellent picture. Good acting and good story. All about young Doug, who thinks that money is everything until he finds that every one is happy but himself. Good drama with several dashes of real comedy. Play it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Apr. 11-12.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

State Rights

BIRTH OF A NATION: All Star—This picture is twenty years old, but it is still pulling in the motion picture public. Some of the scenes in the first two reels look funny because of the action, but after seeing about four reels of it you do not notice the difference. After all these years with the so-called big pictures, this one is still outstanding. Running time, 12 reels. —J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BITTER SWEET: Anna Neagle, Fernand Graavey —This is a great picture, but just lacked fifty per cent of drawing the rental we had to pay for it. An awful flop at the box-office but satisfied the few we did get. Just no drawing power.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor, Lyda Roberti—Here's an old timer that got all the loose nickels as well as pleased the packed houses.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor, Gloria Stuart —This is a wow of an entertainment. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction to all we got to see it. No fault of the picture. I say it is his best, and a lot of them said so. But none of the big pictures draw any extra business in this burg any more. The better they are the poorer the business, but this picture will please any crowd. Apr. 8-9.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford—As old as Mary Pickford herself. Only fair entertainment that didn't get the money it should. Many of my patrons told me the next day they didn't care for it.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

WHOOPEE: Eddie Cantor—This picture is about four years old but it still pulls them in. It is all color and the scenes are beautiful. We stood them up both nights on it, so they must have liked it. Running time, 12 reels. Played Apr. 18-19.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Universal

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—A very fine picture, but a flop at the box-office. Too slow for the younger class. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—A very fine picture. Great story and wonderful acting by the stars. We just got film rental out of the picture but satisfied all we did get. The title to the picture did not mean a thing for us to advertise on. Country towns have not a chance to put over a picture for two days. Newspaper advertising in small towns is too high and try and get it down to what you can afford to pay. Played Apr. 10-11.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe—While the cast of this one is very good and the situations are worked up to right pitch, the situations are not consequential enough to make the fans go out and rave. Average business three days of last part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart—Edmund Lowe played a very good part in this one. Plenty of excitement. It will please the people more on a Saturday show. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 9.—Will Pence, Melba Theatre, Goldthwaite, Tex. General patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Just an ordinary program picture. Played to fair business. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—Good little musical that pleased the majority. Only fair at the box-office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres, June Knight—Don't wait for this one and expect it to pay off the mortgage on the old home. It just won't do it. It serves as good fare if you get 'em in, but they won't come in. This picture might do better as week-end offering, but does not have enough draw to meet big competition. Just as I finished writing this one of my patrons stopped in, and said, "Bill, that is the bummest show you have had in a long while." So use your own judgment.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight, Neil Hamilton—Fair program picture. Not good, not bad. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville —One of the funniest pictures we ever played and one of the best this team ever made. All were satisfied with the show and that is saying a lot these days.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Box-office receipts below par and picture nothing to write home about. Some real funny situations, but too much silly bokum. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton—A mighty funny program picture to those that like comedy. It gave great satisfaction but a lot of the people have forgotten how to laugh. The best comedians can only get a grin out of them nowadays, but I call this a mighty good comedy feature.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

S. O. S. ICEBERG: Rod La Roque, Gibson Gowland—Some of the few patrons who came to see this thought it a good news reel. Only too long. Played Family Days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—One of the very few pictures with a tragic ending that will please, regardless. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. General patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Barbara Stanwyck gives an outstanding performance. A very good picture which pleased everybody. Don't be afraid of this one. It's as clean as a whistle. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9-10.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson, Guy Kibbee, Hugh Herbert—Another knockout comedy from Warner Brotbers. This is a real honest to goodness, down to earth attraction. Something that could happen at any high school around the corner. Some good musical comedy numbers and just one laugh after another. It will please 100 per cent. Hal LeRoy does a dance that makes every one in the audience ga ga. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Apr. 15-16-17.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

HI, NELLIE! Paul Muni—Good story and well acted. The star does not draw for me. It is good, clean entertainment.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Here is a picture that pleased 100 per cent in my town and receipts were very satisfactory. Played Sunday and Monday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Pat O'Brien—The picture pleased and was okay.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—Ordinarily these murder mysteries do not appeal to our patrons. But this one seemed to be an exception. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

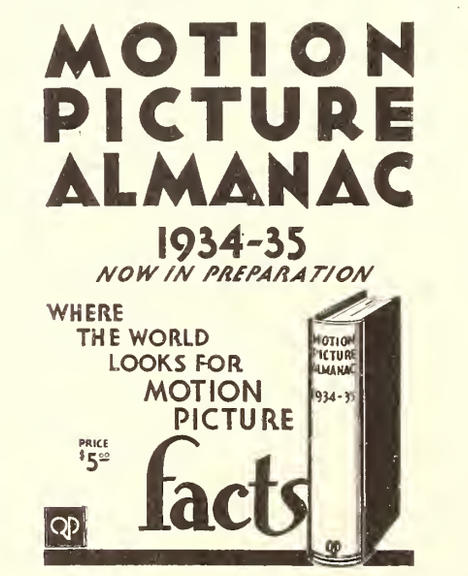
WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—A wonderful entertainment. Acting great and story big.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

World Wide

FARGO EXPRESS: Ken Maynard—A good western with lots of excitement. Not a new one but it played on a weekend with a double bill for the sake of the kids to offset a heavy picture. Fair business only. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Apr. 6-7.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Columbia



HOT DAZE: Broadway Comedies—Should have been "Cold Daze." So cold it only got one laugh during the two reels. So poor it should be junked. The poorest two-reel comedy I ever played.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY'S TOUCHDOWN: Mickey McGuire—About on a par with his others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHACK'S MUSEUM: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Pretty good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

AN OLD GYPSY CUSTOM: Andy Clyde Comedies—A lot of laughs in this one. Anything with Andy Clyde is okay. Running time, two reels.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BEANSTALK JACK: Terry-Toons—A nice little cartoon. The best Terry-Toon I have run to date. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CANYON OF ROMANCE: Romantic Journeys—This is the best travelogue that I have ever seen. Filmed entirely in natural color, taking you through Bryce Canyon National Park. It is what you would really call awe-inspiring. Another one which you must play. Running time, 10 minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

EXPECTANT FATHER, THE: Ernest Truex—A laugh riot all about the hard times a man has to go through to be a father. Don't miss this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre. Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

FREEZE-OUT, THE: Moran and Mack—What a pity this team was broken up by the tragic death of one of them. I never showed a poor comedy with this team. Their stuff was clean and it drew the laughs. Those are two very important ingredients of a comedy. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—Excellent comedy that really gets the laughs. Something different. Don't fail to play it. Running time, 21 minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

MR. ADAM: Star Comedy Specials—Not a bad comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

NORTH OF ZERO: Coronet Comedies—This is not much of a comedy. Put it on with "David Harum" and it seemed out of order. Low type of comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

POPPIN' THE CORK: Musical Comedies—Glorifying booze! Showing the patrons what they miss by not spending their money in booze joints instead of movies. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SUPER SNOOPER, THE: Andy Clyde—The best Andy Clyde comedy we have run, but that is not saying much. He just don't click here. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Fox

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY?: Movie Tintype Series—This is nothing and gets nowhere. The print I showed had words missing all the way through. That was the only part that brought any laughs. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Invincible

SNOWMAN, THE: Cartoon—A cartoon done in color and very good. But producers of entertainment for children should bear in mind that kids do not want to be scared by such monstrosities as this Snowman. —Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY AND THE BUS: Todd-Kelly—This one was a scream. One of the best from Metro in a long time.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—About the usual gang comedy.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Colortone Musical Revues—Fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

COLORFUL PORTS OF CALL: Fitzpatrick Travel Talks—An interesting, educational subject. I prefer them to the dried-out news reels.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CROOKS TOUR: All-Star Series—Good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

DAVEY JONES' LOCKER: Willie Whopper—Cartoon colored. A good one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DAVY JONES' LOCKER: Willie Whopper—Not so hot. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HELLO, POP: Colortone Musical Revues—Very good two-reeler. Got several laughs.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

HELL'S FIRE: Willie Whopper—Not much. Color does not help a poor picture.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELL'S FIRE: Willie Whopper—Since these cartoons are done in color they seem to be making them better. This cartoon will please. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

JAIL BIRDS OF PARADISE: Musical Comedies—This subject in color is all right. The story is not so much exaggerated, either. Read the daily papers if you do not get the point. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SHERMAN SAID IT: Charley Chase—Not up to Charley's standard.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SPITE FLIGHT: Willie Whopper—Many laughs in this cartoon. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TWIN SCREWS: All-Star Series—Here is the slappiest slapstick comedy you ever ran. If you like 'em good and rough, here 'tis. Running time, 19 minutes. —A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

CIRCUS HOODOO: Harry Langdon—Not much to recommend to this. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison Ark. Small town patronage.

HA! HA! HA!: Betty Boop Cartoons—Very good—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

I HEARD: Talkartoons—Fair one-reeler.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Screen Songs—Very good. Paramount's shorts are okay.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

I YAM WHAT I YAM: Popeye the Sailor—One of the best cartoons on the market today. It seems as if they all like Popeye, young and old.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RADIO ROUNDUP, A: Headlinders—Extra good musical with Molasses 'n' January and several other radio stars. Nearly every one at this one up.—Robert Y. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

RED HOT MAMMA: Betty Boop Cartoon—Good with any feature.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre. Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SING, BABIES, SING: Screen Songs—Good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

SOCK-A-BYE, BABY: Popeye the Sailor—Good cartoon.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre. Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

STATION T. O. T.: Headliners—Kids ate it up and some of the grown-ups.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

WHERE'S THAT TIGER?: Headliners—Excellent; one of the best one-reelers in a long time.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Good cartoon.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

RKO

LOVE ON A LADDER: Edgar Kennedy—Very good two-reel comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PATHE REVIEW: These reviews are better in every way than the news reels, and only half the rental. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

RASSLIN' MATCH, THE: Amos 'n' Andy Cartoons—I believe these cartoons will be okay. This first one was real funny. At least it is something new and novel. Buy them. Running time, 10 minutes. A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

OUT OF GAS: Louise Frazenda—A very good two-reel comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SUPPER AT SIX: Mentone No. 5—Extra good two-reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TOY SHOPPE, THE: Oswald Cartoons—One of the best cartoons we have played this year. It is really good. Running time, nine minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE ON PARADE: Mentone No. 6—Fine two-reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

AUDITION, THE: Melody Masters—Pretty good. Not as good as many of the others, but will get by. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BUDDY AND TOWSER: Looney Tunes—An A-1 cartoon. Good musical score and lots of fun. Running time, seven minutes.—Herbert Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

BUDDY THE GOB: Looney Tunes—Cartoon and funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

COSTUMES OF THE WORLD: World Adventures—Interesting. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Hold, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GOBS OF FUN: George Givot, Charles Judels—Funny two-reel comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOW D'YA LIKE THAT?: George Givot and Charles Judels—A very comic "Big V" comedy. This George Givot and Charles Judels make a good match for comedies. Running time, 18 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

"HOW TRICKS?": Melody Masters—Only fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

LOOK FOR A SILVER LINING: Broadway Brevities—An excellent Broadway Brevity with some good dancing and a few songs from the radio star, Greta Nissen. Running time, 30 minutes.—Herbelt Mueller, Texas Theatre, Seguin, Tex. General patronage.

MELODY MASTERS: The finest one-reel shorts that are made. They have always been excellent entertainment, and we receive nothing but praise every time we have one. Marvelous music and acts. It is a pleasure to run this series. Running time, one reel. —Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Pa. College and small town patronage.

MONGORILLA: Pepper Pot—Nothing to it. A few laughs but not enough to go over and please. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NAME IS FAMILIAR, THE: Melody Masters—Fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

NOT TONIGHT JOSEPHINE: Broadway Brevities —This short is all color and it is plenty good. Some of our patrons told us this comedy alone was worth the admission price. Anything Frank McHugh is in is good. Running time, two reels.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE ISLAND: Broadway Brevity—Very good. All in color. Running time, 19 minutes.P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PEPPER POTS: The weak spot on Vitaphone's short program. Some are very good but the good ones are few in number compared to the poor ones. Running time, one reel.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

'TIS SPRING: Broadway Brevities—Some of our Sunday and Monday patrons look forward to seeing these Broadway Brevities with more interest than they do for the feature.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Merry Melodies—Good one-reel musical, very enjoyable.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

WONDER SPOTS OF THE WORLD: Musical World Journeys—Interesting.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

YOUNG AND HEALTHY: Merrie Melodies—For the kiddies this is good; for the adults we have shown better ones. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Monogram

WOLF DOG, THE: Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Frankie Darro, Boots Mallory—I am on chapter seven and this serial is holding its own. However, one evil has crept into Monogram's serials and they had better correct it. Three-quarters of the first reel is only a reshowing or repeat of the last chapter. The fans are now getting about one reel instead of two. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Principal

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—Have run four chapters so far and find that they interest the patrons very well. Cannot say as yet whether it has drawn any extra business or not. Running time, 12 chapters.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

PERILS OF PAULINE: Evalyn Knapp, Robert Allen—Not much to this. I played seven chapters so far and if it don't get better it will hurt my serial trade in the future. A lot of my patrons don't like it. Running time, 19 minutes each chapter.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

No doubt a great many of you have heard of the Coulee Dam project. And it is quite likely that a large percentage of you don't know where or what this project is, and we are assuming that it would be more interesting to you to learn of this project than to hear us rave about pictures and the picture industry.

Out on a vast plain between Spokane and Wenatche, Washington, is where this coulee is located and where the government proposes to build a dam for irrigating purposes. This plain is in the main composed of volcanic ash and wonderfully productive when they can get water on it. As we understand it, it is the intention to turn the Columbia river from its course and run it, or at least a part of it, into this coulee and dam up the lower end of the coulee to impound the water for irrigation.

To build this dam and to turn the water from the Columbia into the coulee will be a greater project than the Boulder Dam project on the Colorado river, but it would be capable of irrigating thousands of acres of more fertile land than the Boulder Dam project would.

Geologists claim that at one time, thousands of years ago perhaps, the Columbia river flowed into this coulee and formed as great, if not greater, falls than Niagara, but that the Columbia changed its course, since which time the coulee has been dry.

We have stood on the brink of this coulee and marked its magnitude. To dry up the Niagara river that flows over the Falls, and then stand on the brink and note the coulee below, would give you an idea of what this Washington coulee is. As we remember it now, it must be at least 1,000 feet from the brink to the bottom of this coulee, and it must be at least one-half mile wide and one is unable to see the lower end of it, and from this you can imagine the magnitude of it and the amount of water it would hold if properly impounded. The upper brink of this coulee, where the Columbia at one time flowed into it, must be of solid rock like the Niagara falls, since it chops off as abruptly as does the rock at the falls, the breast being perfectly perpendicular.

Maybe we are dumb, maybe we don't know anything at all, but what we can't savvy is for the government to put millions upon millions of dollars into these projects to bring thousands upon thousands of acres more under cultivation when it is paying wheat farmers millions of dollars to raise less wheat. Maybe black is green and white is red, we don't know, but somehow we never thought so. That word "Consistency" is getting to be about as obsolete as any word in the English language. Congress can't even spell it any more, in fact they never heard of it, it isn't included in their political curriculum.

We understand that Gloria Swanson has made a picture of Eleanor Glynn's "Three Weeks." If the director of this picture followed the story we can next look for someone to picturize some of the stories in "Boccaccio."

To those who are familiar with the early history of Portage, Wisconsin, it is quite an interesting place. Portage was originally known as Fort Winnebago, and it was here that the government had troops stationed to look after the Indians. The story goes, and it is probably true, that Jeff Davis was commissioned a lieutenant and was stationed here some time before the Civil War. He became enamored with the daughter of General Scott and they eloped and presumably went back to Tennessee, his original home, and later he became president of the Southern Confederacy. Later on, the name of the town was changed to Portage because it was here that the travelers and trappers changed back and forth from the Fox to the Wisconsin rivers. One of the peculiar things is that the Fox and Wisconsin here are only about two miles apart.

We presume quite a percentage of you don't know what a riptide is. Riptide forms, at certain points in the ocean, a current that is caused by the sudden rise of the tide. We have seen a riptide up pretty well toward the north end of Puget Sound where the water from the Pacific comes in through the Straits of De Fuca when the tide is rising, so rapidly that it looked like a river flowing through the water. Well, that's what is generally known as a riptide, but that wasn't the kind of a riptide we saw at the Moon theatre last night. This one had Norma Shearer and Robert Montgomery in it and it was suggestive of high life in Paris. You may like it. Lots of the people did.

Our choice of screen entertainment is comedy-drama. The more comedy the better. We were pretty well satisfied recently with "Ever Since Eve," with George O'Brien, Mary Brian and Russell Simpson. Maybe that was because the greater part of the action took place in a western ranch home, with which we are more or less familiar. There were four bachelors and a Chinese cook, all of whom had pledged to have nothing to do with women.

It became necessary for one of the four to go to New York on business and they decided who should go by cutting cards. O'Brien was the unlucky man and so he went to New York and soon after he got there he fell for Mary Brian and he fell so hard that he jarred every window in the Empire State building and when the boys heard of it back home the fun started, and from then on it was one continuous ha ha except here and there a few gasps and sobs. The best way to enjoy the picture is to see it and not have somebody tell you about it, because they might tell you wrong, and we are satisfied that when you see this picture you will have no regrets for having booked it.

Doggone it, we were going to tell you about a neighbor's dog out here, he's a wonderful pup, but Ernie don't like dog stories so we will have to leave that one on ice until we see you, which we hope will be before very long, but in the meantime we hope you will paint up that theatre front and let the public know that you are in the business. Thanks for the letter you didn't write.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 222.—(A) Is a projection lens of larger diameter than is necessary to admit the entire light beam advantageous or the reverse? (B) In what very simple, practicable way may the projectionist test his projection lenses for flatness of field? Better dig in on this one.. It is not contained in the present Bluebook. Just study the matter. I was astonished, when the method was sprung on me by Bausch & Lomb engineers, that I had not thought of so obvious a thing years ago. (C) In what way may projection lenses be tested for barrel distortion?

Answer to Question No. 216

Bluebook School Question No. 216 was: (A) Is it safe to use a chamois skin for cleaning lenses? (B) How often, in your judgment, should a projection lens be dissembled and cleaned? (C) Describe how you would yourself do the job.

Pressure of time and activities made it impossible to sort out all the correct answers this week. Therefore, the names must be omitted this time. I trust you will excuse this action under the circumstances.

(A) We will listen to Bausch & Lomb on this one first. They say:

"We do not regard the use of a chamois as advisable for cleaning lenses for the reason that a small particle of almost or even quite invisible grit may become embedded therein which washing will not remove. Such a bit of grit may scratch the lens surface, as is readily seen."

A. F. Sprafke, Meriden, Conn., says:

"A chamois can of course be used for cleaning lenses, but I am prejudiced against it for the following reasons: First, a really good chamois is relatively costly and since a lens is small the chamois is not the most convenient thing to use. Secondly, there is always oil and grease around a projection room, to say nothing of possible dust and grit, therefore there always is the chance of some of such particles getting on the skin. That is why I prefer soft tissue, which may be discarded after using.

"The really worst objection is that something may get on the skin and harden there or become embedded, with result that a scratch mark is made on a lens surface. I have seen this happen several times. I therefore stick to clean, soft tissue."

Nine out of 10 answers I have looked at commend the chamois. I would not penalize any one for such an answer. I favored it myself until Bausch & Lomb called my attention to the possibility set forth in their answer.

(B) T. Van Vaulkenburg says:

"No set time can be named. It depends upon local atmospheric conditions and number of hours of service per day. I also am not certain but that the power or brilliancy of light transmitted might have an effect since it has to do with how warm the lens will get and heat would, I believe, tend, slightly at least, to "scum" the surface in contact with even confined air. My answer therefore would be that for a two-a-day theatre using moderate light, once in three months should be sufficient. With an all-day show and high intensity light I would not feel safe unless my lenses were disassembled, examined and cleaned thoroughly once each month."

Gentlemen, that seems to be to be a most excellent answer. It is based upon reason and common sense. As to the heat—well, I don't myself know. I think I will refer this part of it to the Bausch & Lomb scientific department for an opinion. Would like to know what you chaps think of what Sprafke has said.

L. Cimikoski says: "Projection lenses should be disassembled when occasion demands. (That's it! How may one tell when the occasion does demand? One cannot tell merely by looking through the lens. It would have to be awfully dirty to make the deposit visible.—F. H. R.) How any one can let a lens remain more than two months without a thorough cleaning inside and out is more than I am able to understand."

D. Danielson says once a month. Rau and Evans say once each three months, so you see opinions differ widely. Yes, I will submit this whole question to Bausch & Lomb and advise you later.

(C) There were many excellent answers, but on the whole I believe H. Edwards gives perhaps the best all-around answer. He says:

"I have each lens of all projection lenses, including stereopticon, so marked that I can tell instantly which side goes next the screen. Before starting the job I remove all lenses and lay them side by side on the work bench which I have previously covered with clean newspapers. I also prepare a bath of lukewarm water made into a strong suds with Ivory soap; also another pan of warm water.

"I then disassemble one lens, removing all its individual lenses, laying them in a line according to their location in the lens. That is to say, the rear lens would be at the left end and its mate just to its right, and to the right of it the front element lenses, cemented or uncemented, as the case may be.

"Next I wash each one, rinse it thoroughly in the second pan, drying and polishing it thoroughly, using a soft cotton cloth, perfectly clean for drying, and a soft brand of toilet tissue for polishing. This procedure is followed with each lens. To avoid any possibility of getting things mixed I assemble each lens when its elements are polished.

"To assemble, first I examine the interior of the barrel to make sure it is clean and its paint in good condition. I then blow through it gently to remove any dust adhering to its walls, place each element in position with spacing ring, if any, in place and properly seated, screw in the clamping ring, setting it up snugly and then backing it off just a little to make certain I will be able to start it out easily when the next cleaning time comes. The lens is then returned to its position in or on the projector. A like procedure is followed with them all."

CHANGE OF HEART

Fox

Important from a showmanship point of view as it reunites Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, "Change of Heart," aptly titled, is emotional dramatic romance. The story is based on a novel, "Manhattan Love Song," by Kathleen Norris, one of the most popular current authors. The screen play is by Sonya Levien, recently credited with the scenarios of "Cavalcade," "State Fair," "Berkeley Square," "Mr. Skitch" and "As Husbands Go," and by James Gleason, better known as an actor, but credited with collaboration on "The Bowery" screen play. Direction is by John Blystone, maker of several Will Rogers pictures, also "My Lips Betray," "Hot Pepper" and "Shanghai Madness."

Featured with the Gaynor-Farrell team are Jimmy Dunn, remembered for "Bad Girl" and "Dance Team" and currently appearing in "Jimmy and Sally" and "Stand Up And Cheer," and Ginger Rogers, among whose 18 pictures during the past year are "Gold Diggers," "Flying Down To Rio," "Finishing School," and "20,000,000 Sweethearts." Supporting players include Beryl Mercer, Gustave von Seyffertitz; little Shirley Temple, star of the Baby Burlesk shorts and featured in "Stand Up and Cheer," Irene Franklin, vaudeville headliner, recently in "Lazy River," "Cat and Fiddle" and "Very Honorable Guy," Fiske O'Hara, Irish stage comedian seen in "Paddy, the Next Best Thing," and Drue Layton, newcomer to films. Minor bits are handled by Mary Carr, Jane Darwell, Kenneth Thomson, Nella Walker and Barbara Barondess.

Modernly timed, located in New York, the story is a human interest, dramatic narration of tangled romance of two girls and two boys banded together determined to conquer life in the big city. Gaynor loves Farrell, who loves Ginger Rogers, who in turn is ardently infatuated with Dunn. Unfolding, the story takes the quartet through unanticipated experiences of the "playing on the heart string" variety, usually so strongly appreciated by women. And the situations develop action, situation and thrill for the men folk.

FAMILY MAN

RKO Radio

Serious domestic drama is the essence of this story. An original by Salisbury Fields, the screen play is by Sidney Buchman, who adapted "Right To Romance" and "From Hell To Heaven." Direction is by John S. Robertson, who made "One Man's Journey."

The cast is headed by Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson, Erin O'Brien Moore, noted legitimate stage actress making her first featured screen appearance, and Bruce Cabot. Supporting players include Leonard Carey, recently seen in "Bombshell" and "Worst Woman In Paris"; Shirley Grey, prominent in several recent Warner pictures, Emily Malyon, Jean Perry and Paul Porcasi.

It takes the atmosphere of a tensely dramatic problem play which generates conflict between lovable, carefree Dix and his rigidly moralistic, socially ambitious divorced wife, Miss Moore. Attempting to mold the destiny of their daughter (Miss Wilson), particularly as it applies to her romance with Cabot, her stern precepts bring the girl into open rebellion. Dix, who has been jailed, learns that the child's life is being physically and mentally wrecked, escapes to submerge his ex-wife and fire Miss Wilson with a courageous determination to live and love as she pleases. He returns to jail, knowing that the girl and boy will be happy, that he has been revenged upon his wife, and to dream of future happiness with the children.

The story possesses unusual heart appeal with strong attraction for women, both young and old. The psychological regeneration of the girl should prove particularly attractive to the young modernes.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY

Warner

Riotous melodramatic comedy is the peg on which this story is hung. Adapted from a published novel by Elmer Davis, the screen play is by Warren Duff, recently functioning on "I've Got Your Number," "20,000,000 Sweethearts" and the forthcoming "Old Doll's House," and Sidney Sutherland, who did "I Loved a Woman" and "Ladies They Talk About." More punch is put into the comedy lines as F. Hugh Herbert and Erwin Gelsey, who worked on "Grand Slam," contributed added dialogue. Direction is by Edward Ludwig.

The cast is composed entirely of familiar screen names. Charlie Ruggles has the lead and the role coincides with his whimsical scared-rabbit screen character. In support will be seen Ann Dvorak, Eugene Pallette (first picture since "Mr. Skitch"), Dorothy Burgess, Dorothy Tree, Robert Barrat, Berton Churchill, Harry Tyler, Harry Beresford and William B. Davidson.

Modernly timed, the yarn is located in New York and builds into a series of laugh-packed situations to develop the brand of entertainment in which the various players, particularly Ruggles, Pallette, Barrat and Churchill appear to best advantage. Ruggles, browbeaten editor of a wheezy weekly magazine owned by Churchill, is ordered to write a glowing tribute to Davidson, the city's number one no good. Resenting the command, he and Pallette, recalling their rip-roaring Yale days, get plastered. Later mixed up with the Red, Barrat, there is more ludicrous excitement which is furthered by a hectic gambling club episode. In the anti-climax Ruggles, spurred on by Ann Dvorak, frustrates a hold-up that shows up Davidson in his true colors and forces the rescued Churchill to permit him to write a philippic that rids the city of its menace.

The story looks to have that colorful quality necessary for general family type entertainment. In addition there is an exciting novelty of premise that suggests some zippy new style showmanship in which the title should play an important part.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS

RKO Radio

This is a Wheeler and Woolsey comedy with girls and music. The story is a costumer, located in England and set to medieval times. The screen play is by Edward Kaufman, who collaborated similarly on "Hips, Hips, Hooray," and Ben Holmes who did "Melody Cruise." Added dialogue is by Grant Garrett and Ralph Spence, who was recently credited with "Warrior's Husband" and "Mr. Skitch." Mark Sandrich, who handled "So This Is Harris," "Hips, Hips," and "Melody Cruise," is the director. Lou Brock, who made "Flying Down To Rio," is the producer.

Players supporting the principals are familiar screen names with important parts assigned to Thelma Todd, Dorothy Lee, previously in several other Wheeler-Woolsey pictures, Noah Beery, Robert Greig (the fat butler) and Henry Sedley. There is girl glamour with a score or more chorusing and dancing to Will Jason and Val Burton music and lyrics.

As the story modernly burlesques Middle Age atmosphere, comedy typical of the rapid Wheeler-Woolsey technique, is developed in characters, situations, action and dialogue with semi-blackouts emphasizing the effects. The yarn follows the mistaken identity premise, continually putting the clowns on hot spots. The plot is colored as Dorothy Lee, riding the stagecoach rods with W-W, is accepted as a man, resulting in complications that become farcical. The climax is a wild boar chase sequence, that, judging from a peek at the rushes, should be pretty near tops as an hilarious excitement stimulator.

The story seems to have a more satirical humorous punch than any of the late Wheeler-Woolsey features, a fact which, coupled with the vivid title tone and the application of straight comedy to the historical vogue and the cast personnel, should readily suggest some uniquely different exploitation.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK

20th Century-United Artists

Not to be confused with "Bulldog Drummond," which Ronald Colman made about five years ago, this story is a further narration of the character's adventures. It's a mystery thriller—murders, disappearing corpses, abductions, cryptic code radiograms, gripping detective work, the always popular conflct between the inscrutable Oriental mind and the shrewdness, daring and courage of the Western World. Through this colorful, nerve-tingling atmosphere runs a line of comedy that promises a laugh for every screech and a romantic interest contrasting the melodrama.

The picture is based on a novel by H. C. McNeile for which the screen play was prepared by Nunnally Johnson, noted short story writer, recently credited with "Moulin Rouge" and "Rothschild." Direction is by Roy Del Ruth, maker of many popular Warner pictures. Colman is Drummond. It's his first since "The Masquerader." All the supports are familiar screen personalities. Loretta Young ("Rothschild") has the leading feminine role. Warner Oland ("Charlie Chan") is the Oriental villain, and important parts are in the hands of such accomplished performers as Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, C. Aubrey Smith, Arthur Hohl, George Regas, Ethel Griffies, Mischa Auer, Halliwell Hobbes and E. E. Clive.

Locale is London; time is present. It has Drummond swearing off his adventurous career only to meet a girl and to be whirled into a series of thrilling dangerous adventures that promise more exciting entertainment than ordinarily is packed into this type of picture. A thriller all the way through, it appears not only to be a super-baffler for the mystery fans, but a romantic love story with special appeal for the women and a situation—action comedy that opens the door wide to intriguing, spectacular showmanship.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

IT'S UNANIMOUS

With the passing of each succeeding month, the Quigley Award project, by the nature of its accomplishments, adds to the prestige of the motion picture and roots deeper and deeper in the esteem of the industry. There are many recent instances at hand to substantiate this in addition to those which have already been publicized from time to time in these pages since the inception of the Quigley project.

On a following page is published copy of a letter from Mr. Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, to Nevin McCord, congratulating the winner of the March Award upon his accomplishment. Last week's issue carried the story and photo of the March presentation arranged by Mayor Louis Marcus, of Salt Lake City, in which McCord received his honors from Governor C. Ben Ross, of Idaho. Further, we are informed by Mr. Albert Deane, Paramount foreign publicity chief, that notice has been inserted in "Paramount International News," calling the attention of overseas Paramounteers to the world-wide interest in the Quigley project and urging their participation.

And last, but far from least, in the "New Capitol Entertainment Manager," house organ of the Famous Players Canadian chain, it is gratifying to read the nice puff given to Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, for their exploitation efforts which brought them two First Mentions and one Honorable Mention in the first three months of the competition. Here is what Gene has to say about this deserved publicity:

"Quite frequently in your columns you have mentioned the importance of active Round Table membership and its resultant recognition within the industry. Because of this, I am enclosing a copy of an editorial from the March 31 issue of The New Capitol Entertainment Manager, the house organ of our company. I feel sure that you and other Club members will be interested in the recognition our executives have given Ken Finlay and myself for our participation in the Quigley Awards Contest."

These above instances indicate whatever differences there may exist between the various branches of the industry, all are combined in their unqualified endorsement of the Quigley Award project as the most definite step yet taken in the history of show business to advance the cause of the able theatreman.

The salvos of appreciation from the higher-ups are further proof that the Quigley competitions should have the wholehearted cooperation of every manager everywhere as a means to an end in obtaining deserved and long deferred recognition of his important part in theatre operation.

THE PASS EVIL

It is with great pleasure we present to the membership, in this issue, a red-blooded, meaty analysis of pass abuses and suggestions for their elimination by Manager Fred Larkin, Paramount Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn., of the Minnesota Amusement Co.

The weaknesses of this situation have too long been taken for granted by managers and exhibitors alike, and it is high time that the tentacles of this business-smothering octopus be chopped from around the box office.

Though many showmen have fulminated against the rank destruction caused by the evils of the pass system, very little has been actually done to discourage the moochers. Therefore, a vote of thanks to General Division Director John J. Friedl, for starting something, and to Fred Larkin, for so ably backing him up.

It is to be hoped that so thorough a dissection of one of the theatre's worst cancers will encourage showmen in waging a more spirited and worthy war of extinction against the evils of the pass system.

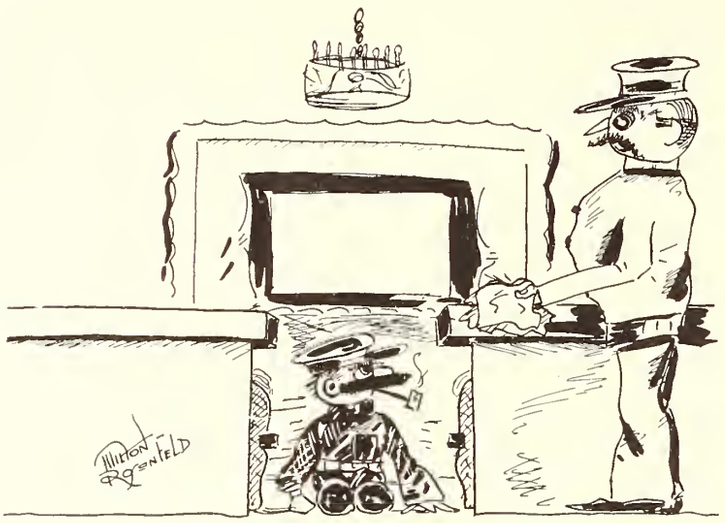
SOARING RENTALS

What's the right or wrong of it, we are not prepared to state. But if the producers are not satisfied with film rentals and the new season's product is going up in cost to the exhibitor, then it seems as though more money will have to be taken in at the ticket window to placate all hands.



Better pictures may be one answer, and one, unfortunately, that too many exhibitors use in alibi-ing the reasons for diminishing attendance. But it is not to be denied that their complete neglect of fruitful showmanship has much to do with the situation.

There are many managers working under the severe handicaps of unwarranted limited advertising budgets who could tilt grosses were they allowed by their employers to use something besides their fingernails in putting over their attractions. For the good of the industry, they should not be so handicapped.

If the makers and sellers of motion pictures are so concerned over the prices of their creations, they should endeavor to convince exhibitors that pictures should be exploited, and not the manager.

Perkins Sells Picture With House Reopening

An interesting campaign that sold the renovation and reopening of the well known legitimate theatre, the Shubert-Rialto in St. Louis, Mo., was put on by Bert Perkins, Warner exploiteer, in conjunction with the exploitation of "Wonder Bar," the opening attraction. To secure as wide coverage as possible, Perkins went strongly for extra billing of all sizes in the city and county. Besides the outdoor posting, further interest was aroused with a reopening ceremony which was premiered in Hollywood fashion before an invited audience of leading citizens and celebrities.

Paper Runs Story On Co-op Page

A co-op page from Manager Joseph W. Shuck, Orpheum Theatre, Fulton, Ky., headed by a smash ad on "Queen Christina," also netted a story on the news pages in which attention was called to the full page display, plugging the date and also the merchants who cooperated. The stunt was sent on by Memphis Warner zone manager Howard Waugh, as another indication of the effective work being put over.

Community Paper Gives Malloy Many Breaks

Manager Don C. Malloy, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Ill., has worked up some fine cooperation with his community newspaper, putting over tieups of various sorts at no cost outside of his regular advertising.

Contests of one kind or another return splendid results, a recent one being incorporated in a co-op page on "Little Women" in which guest tickets were given to those finding the names of the various characters in the different ads. In addition, free admissions are given weekly to a dozen readers whose names are printed in the paper and who identify themselves at the box office with a copy of the issue in which their names appeared.

Don writes a weekly column of Film Chatter under his own byline, which is well edited and reads very well. He works just as hard to put the paper over as he does his pictures, probably the reason why he obtains such well deserved breaks.

Westfall Stops Traffic With Duck Bally

Traffic-stopping was "Doc" Westfall's bally on "Duck Soup" at the Palace, Jamestown, N. Y., wherein four stooges dressed as the "brothers" were turned loose to clown on the streets. As an added feature, Doc promoted eight ducks which were planted in an orange crate with the bottom loose. The crate was placed on a truck driven through the downtown section and allowed to slip off into the street at prominent corner with ducks escaping and stooges endeavoring to round them up. Gag broke the newspapers.

Westfall distributed costless heralds house to house, merchant paying for printing in exchange for space on herald for store ad. Paper napkins promoted from restaurants with copy saying: "We don't serve duck soup. The Marx Brothers dish it out, etc., etc." Radio tieups also helped. Doc's newspaper campaign, a series of headline ads selling the four brothers and title, were also well done.

'Tarzan' Rhino Gets Citywide Welcome

From New York, where her arrival broke stories and pictures in the metropolitan papers, "Mary," the rhino, Billy Ferguson's latest exploitation gag on "Tarzan and His Mate," was sent to Baltimore in the specially constructed Studebaker train.

Exhibited at the automobile show rooms (see photo), which was announced with display ads, the rhino was taken to the City Hall and received the key to the city from the Mayor, this duly recorded in the local newspapers. At the head of a parade of automobiles, "Tarzan" bread trucks, etc., the beast was taken to the various children's hospitals, then to the city park, when a jungle party was held for the children, who were given free ice cream.

As a further bally on the showing at Loew's Century, put over by Billy Saxton and Herb Morgan, six monkeys were sent to the Mayor and leading local picture critics, and after their delivery had occasioned sufficient excitement to gain further publicity they were turned over to the zoo.

The "Tarzan" bread tieup plugged the date with bannered bakery trucks, newspaper ads and a special loaf baked for the Mayor which was photographed before being sent to Johnny Weissmuller at the studios. Ice cream company cooperating furnished jungle floats with "Tarzan" character, ape men, etc., following this up with display ads which carried theatre and picture credits.

Hoover Promotes Organ Broadcast

From Manager George C. Hoover, State Theatre, Manchester, Conn., a corps-brother from the Harry Woodin days, comes an interesting account of a promoted broadcast known as "Manchester on the Air." George has contracted with three of the largest firms in town to broadcast a half hour of organ melodies every Thursday, the program consisting of six organ numbers with a different local guest star on each program.

The sponsors also supply coffee and doughnuts to those attending the broadcasts, and Hoover states that hundreds of requests are being received for special numbers. He recommends the idea for use in other similar situations in towns having stations or in places close by. To those interested in learning more about the plan, George no doubt will be glad to furnish details.

"20 Million" Radio Tiein On All Dates

As part of the nationwide tieup arranged by S. Charles Einfeld, Warner ad head and Philco radio on "20 Million Sweethearts," sizable display ads were taken in all New York newspapers by the local dealers, top of ads carrying cut of Dick Powell and theatre credits for the engagement at the Stand Theatre. Similar breaks were obtained from other leading New York stores.

Western Union supplied jumbo telegrams carrying a message from Powell, and these also were exhibited in branch office windows together with banners bearing theatre and date. All local Philco distributors displayed windows, heralds were distributed at ball games, hotels, theatres and imprinted napkins at many eateries.

The theatre front carried out the radio theme of the story by a huge cutout microphone over the box office (see photo below) and atop the marquee were placed a number of star shaped frames enclosing the pictures and names of the stars.

The radio campaign above mentioned includes advertising in nationally circulated magazines and newspapers in every section of the country with space in ads for local theatre credits. Dealers will utilize large window cards and will distribute specially printed heralds. Contests with radios as prizes are also contemplated, and arrangements have been made for the announcement of the picture in Boake Carter's broadcasts.

Star Double Contest Nets 2,000 Entries

A "star double" contest put on by Manager Carter Barron and ad head Lou Brown of the Loew's Fox Theatre, Washington, D. C., in conjunction with a local department store's Cinema Shop and the Washington Herald, resulted in what is no doubt some kind of record, with 20 straight days of publicity carried by the paper on this idea.

All girls in and around the capital city were invited to submit photographs which were similar to the faces of any of the Hollywood stars, from which three were selected for worthwhile prizes. A jury of prominents selected the winners, who were chosen from over 100 girls, the semi-finalists appearing on the stage of the theatre for the final eliminations. Over 2,000 entrants were reported on this contest.

QUIGLEY JUDGE CONGRATULATES WINNER

As we have stated time and again, one of the major purposes of the Quigley project is to bring recognition of the showman's efforts to the attention of the leaders of this industry. Already results have indicated a deep interest on the part of those executives who have contributed generously of their time and attention to act as judges. Herewith we present copy of letter from Mr. Ned E. Depinet, president, RKO Distributing Corp., one of the March judges, to Nevin McCord, March winner:

Dear Mr. McCord:

I have been informed by Mr. A-Mike Vogel of the Motion Picture Herald, that by a majority vote of the Judges Committee on which I had the pleasure of serving, you have been awarded the Martin Quigley Plaque for your campaign on "Frontier Marshal," representing the best exploitation campaign submitted during the month of March.

Allow me to extend to you my heartiest congratulations upon your very outstanding campaign which won for you this recognition and this award, which I am sure will be most highly prized by you, especially as I understand that the presentation was made by no less a personage than the Governor of your state.

I am personally always interested in examples of good showmanship and smart exploitation, and I hope that your work in this instance, with its resultant recognition, will prove an incentive to you to continue your efforts along this line.

With best wishes, believe me

Sincerely yours,

NED E. DEPINET

House Staff Attends Special Screening

The special screening put on by George MacKenna and Dick Walsh for the local big shots on "It Happened One Night" at the New Lafayette, Buffalo, N. Y., was different from the usual routine as these showmen also invited cashiers, doormen and ushers who of course helped to plug the date.

In the tie-up with leading news distributor, delivery trucks carried banners, circulars distributed by carriers and cards attached to carriers' bags, all of which tied in the picture to fan magazine stories. Busses covering nearby areas carried bumper signs and window stickers, and readers were carried in surrounding town newspapers.

Two classified tie-ups were made, one in which passes were given to all those finding articles advertised in the lost and found column, and secondly to those whose names were found on the want ad page.

Dewey Mousson Celebrates Knickerbocker Anniversary

In connection with the "Wonder Bar" opening at the Knickerbocker, in Nashville, Dewey Mousson tied in his theatre's anniversary. He papered the town well in advance and used ten sidewalk stereopticons strategically placed.

Arrangements were made with the radio station to tie-in a plug for the showing of the pix on the regular Warner Monday evening program. Spot announcements were also made over this station for three days prior to opening. Drug company used imprinted paper napkins, while a short stop brought a window display of the Powell shirt.

All displays included a 22x28 still illuminated card, bearing theatre name, playdate, etc. From what we can learn, Dewey had the town plastered from one end to the other, not neglecting his lobby and front, which were decorated with poster art work.

Davis Obtains Results With Novelty Ideas

Many are the novelties forwarded by Manager Walter F. Davis, Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, who reports that this form of advertising has proved itself at the box office, bringing excellent results. Highly does he recommend imprinted blotter distribution, ingenious samples of which he forwards on various attractions.

For instance, on "Mr. Skitch" Walter had a pen and ink drawing of Will Rogers with a puff for the theatre and picture under the head "Will Rogers says." In another, he had Jimmy Dunn advertising meat and telling the folks to see "Jimmy and Sally."

Davis also used die cuts, one on "I Am Suzanne" being very good, with cutout head of Lilian Harvey folding into a four page herald, picture copy running across the two inside pages. The die cut idea was also carried out on an Easter herald, illustrated with cartoon chicks, their mouths opening and closing when the pages were turned.

Rubber stamped six-inch paper trays are always in demand in the better restaurants for dinner checks, so Walter reports, and finds this idea very effective in advertising his shows in the more popular spots.

MIDNIGHT MARKS THE DEADLINE

Keeping in mind that May 5 is the final day on which entries may be received for the April Quigley Award, managers are stepping up their campaigns, with the result that many are on hand at this writing. As much cooperation as is possible is requested from those desiring to forward their campaigns. There is much work to do and it all cannot be done in a hurry. Therefore our request.

It is expected that the winner will be announced in the issue of May 12. Here's luck!—MIKE.

"TO PASS OR NOT TO PASS"

Northwest Manager Presents an Analysis of Pass Weaknesses and Gives Some Ideas for Betterment

by FRED LARKIN

Manager, Paramount, St. Cloud, Minn.

Many years ago the railroads were harassed by a similar condition. Every legislator and tin-horn politician had passes good on all railroad trains. This privilege was being abused in much the same character as our friendly favors are at the present time being abused. The railroads had this situation corrected by rules and regulations of the railroad and warehouse commissions and interstate commerce commissions. I believe, however, that we can correct the majority of the so-called evils of the card pass. I am going into a rather lengthy discussion and analysis of this situation as I have found it.

First: The majority of the people do not appreciate something for nothing or where no effort is made to attain it. This lowers the appraisal of the business institution which can afford to give away its merchandise or its services. It weakens the buying patrons' faith in such an institution. They do not enjoy hearing others boast about receiving merchandise or services for nothing; hence we drive away business.

Pass Holders Take Advantage

Second: When people have enjoyed special dispensation they become like the boy who has taken the jam from the cupboard; when he is stopped he makes a terrible fuss. It has become his inherited right to take the jam, and so the pass holder gets to the point where he believes it is his inherited right to use the pass as he wants to use it. When it is called to his attention, he becomes furious and bitter remarks are passed.

Third: Everyone likes to break rules. All like to tell the other fellow how to conduct his business. They all try to chisel on the rules and regulations of passes. The depression caused many people to lose their pride so that they will do things now with a pass that they would have hesitated to do a few years ago. They secure mental satisfaction in appearing bigger than our rules.

Fourth: Friends brought with passes are not substantial friends; in fact, they have very little in common with our business except to see how much they can get out of it by the abuse of the pass privilege. They knock more shows than they boost.

Fifth: Abuse of Passes—Passes are used by the wives of the party for whom the pass is intended. They try to bring in more than the pass calls for. They try to pay back social obligations with our favors. If they entertain a party of friends they many times make it appear that they are so strong with the theatre that they get all the passes they want, even when they pay for those above the number which the pass will admit free. They send down their children with the pass. They give it to other members of the family and even give it to people outside of the family. They use the same pass two or three times a day. We had one pass where the holder brought in the limit, walked out the back door, came around to the front, and asked for the limit five minutes later. If we have a long line at the box office, the pass holder wants to come in without waiting, giving the passes when the show is over. They do not want to be put to inconvenience of our regular patrons who are laying down their cash to support the theatre. We have had them bring little children and small children, making a boy scout camp out of our theatre and they become very insulting when we called their attention to it.

Sixth: Business on a giveaway basis will create more criticism than one where there is a definite charge. Pass holders have found more fault and given me more advice on how to run the theatre than the pay customers.

Seventh: If we get into difficulties, and go to them for help we receive the same kind of assistance we would secure from a brother or sister that we had supported all our lives. They start out by telling us what they have done for us, and I cannot recall at this time where one pass holder ever helped me out.

Newspaper Passes

Eighth: We give many card passes to the press. They can come into our theatres at all times and no questions asked, but when we want anything, we must see the editor and advertising man and two or three more. It would be better to take down some service passes or free passes and get what we wanted. Some places they accept our money for ads and then take delight in telling the people how poor our merchandise is.

I often wonder how long the dry goods stores would advertise, on one page boosting their merchandise and then turn over on the next and find where some half-baked critic of dry goods merchandising is telling the public to stay away from the store, that their merchandise is of very poor quality.

If you bear with me I will go a little further and give my ideas of what will help correct this situation.

First: We must have a rebirth of established rules of usages for the pass. We must strictly adhere to them. These rules should be simple, concise and effective. They should be printed either on the back of the pass or in a letter of acceptance when the pass is delivered. They must be firmly enforced.

Second: Print on every pass that we reserve the right to suspend this pass on certain occasions, such as rentals, road shows and special attractions. Then at every opportunity warranted, we should suspend this free list, by a post card or letter notice. This will build up respect for the pass and at the same time give us some measure of control over the pass which at the present time we do not have. It will also afford a means of contact with the various pass holders.

Third: Make out the pass at the start of each quarter. This will do away with holdovers who have been defeated for office, and others to whom the privilege should be suspended.

Fourth: Try and limit the pass to as few theatres as possible. Further limit the pass by a coupon book spread over the life of the pass. This will break up the abuse of doubling up and securing many more passes.

Fifth: People who are smart enough to secure passes, are smart enough to attempt by flattery and other means to secure special dispensations. This should be guarded against so that the numbers will be gradually diminished.

How to Discontinue Passes

Sixth: Notify the ones that will be dropped as far in advance as possible; inasmuch as our passes are good until Jan. 1, 1935, I suggest that around Sept. 1 we make a survey of those to whom this privilege will be discontinued and they be so notified. This will give them two or three months to cool off while they are enjoying our hospitality. What they say will carry very little weight and by the time their pass becomes invalid, they will take it as a matter of course.

Seventh: As a circuit we should all cooperate to cut the passes at least 20 per cent for the coming year. Now is the time to plan this reduction.

Eighth: Many of our passes have been given by department heads in consummating a deal. I do not believe this is necessary and the intrinsic worth of a pass is not large enough to overcome much money or principle. It really is a confession of the weakness in many cases of our position.

Much of our free list has been built up from this angle. Promises of passes not delivered cause repercussions. When a pass is given as part of a deal, the receiver believes he is given something tangible for it, and therefore privileged to abuse it as he would be inclined to exaggerate the amount which he surrendered to secure it. I believe it is a mistake to mention passes or give passes in any deal or trade whatsoever. They should rise and fall on their merits.

OTHER OPINIONS ARE INVITED

Recently, General Division Director John J. Friedl, Minnesota Amusement Co., requested opinions from his managers on ways and means to combat the pass evil. The results were very enlightening, according to Ad Chief Charlie Winchell of that circuit, who forwarded to Club Headquarters a copy of Manager Fred Larkin's excellent analysis and suggestions for improvement.

For the benefit of the membership, we quote from this manager's report, and in line with Round Table procedure, invite comment from others on this very important subject.—MIKE.

A LETTER FROM ROY W. ADAMS

The writer of the following letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD hardly needs any introduction to our readers. For many years, Roy W. Adams of the Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich., has been a consistent and witty contributor to the "What the Pictures Did for Me" department. His "fillum-filosophy," as he terms it, is very good and we know you will enjoy it.

Incidentally, this department welcomes contributions from other exhibitor-managers on matters affecting theatre operation. Let's have 'em.

It can't be possible that the folks in my community are smarter than they are anywhere else. It must be that I am dumber than other theatre managers, for I simply can't kid them into coming in to see a picture unless it is good. All those clever, sure-fire stunts outlined in the press books, dynamiting the city hall, getting the mayor and pastor of the first Baptist church to spar ten rounds on top of my marquee, etc., are a flop here.

Experts Did Not Help

A few years ago two high priced publicity men worked out a promising campaign here on a good picture with a popular star. I spent more on this exploitation than I did on rental for the picture, had the poorest Sunday on the picture than I had in six months, and the star was never worth a nickel to me after that. Figure that one out. Nowadays I just keep telling them what I've got, who is in it and when it is coming.

They braved the world's scorn for a forbidden love, says the press book rave. Razzberries! Nothing new in that; everybody's doing it—in the pictures. Some day some daring producer will give the customers a real novelty, he'll show them a guy and a dame in lawful wedlock sticking together through thick and thin, no chiselling, no stepping out. That will be sumpin'.

Customer Right? Hooey!

The customer is always right. Hooey! When the customer has just decorticated a felis mephitis (skinned a skunk, to you) and comes into the theatre with the evidence still on his hands and clothes, when the customer tries knee action on the girls sitting beside him, when customer bursts into a horse-laugh at the deathbed scene in "Little Women," when the customer tries to bully the cashier into giving him an extra dollar in change, when the customer amuses himself by taking the bolts out of my seats, or otherwise wrecking them, when the customer is drunk, noisy, abusive or otherwise objectionable to the other customers or my employees, why then the customer is just as wrong as he can be, and he is going to be told so just as quickly and plainly as I can get the idea to him.

Kane Puts Over City Easter Sunrise Service

The committee in charge of the Redwood City, Cal., Easter Sunrise Services was in a quandary. Where previously the event had been local, this year, due to the CWA enlarging the natural amphitheatre, a much larger attendance was desired.

So the residents came to Manager Tom Kane of the Sequoia for aid, and Tom worked on the managers in the surrounding area to publicize it as an event which should interest the residents in their locations, which was accomplished to the extent that Kane received from the city manager of Redwood City and the general chairman of the committee an appreciative letter praising him highly for his invaluable assistance.

The answer to which might well be, if something in the line of publicity needs doing, a showman can usually be found to do it.

"Man at Large" Notice Startles Harlan Citizenry

Col. C. R. Stoflet, Margie Grand Theatre, Harlan, Ky., got out a five by eleven police dodger on "Invisible Man" printed on cheap light green stock with large black letters offering a $50,000 reward for his capture dead or alive. Stoflet further stated that the "Man" would be in Harlem for one day only and "if you can't capture him—come to the Margie Grand and try to see him." Copy says the picture "Out-Frankens Frankenstein."

These were tacked up and distributed all over town and the curious stopped to read.

Rosy Breaks Page One On "Mr. X" Contest

Morris Rosenthal is hitting the front pages again, this time with a newspaper contest on "Mr. X" for the date at the Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. The idea was a cutout gag in which readers were asked to reassemble into a perfect "X" nine cutout parts which were reproduced in a two-column box.

The paper publicized this for four days in advance under the heading, "Will You Help Track This Criminal?", the cut being run daily in addition to an explanatory story which included mention of the theatre and date. The winners were announced in a page one story and Morris states that over 5,000 entries were received for the prizes, which were two passes each to the neatest 25 answers.

Women's Clubs Visited On "Catherine" Advance

A number of women's organizations were personally contacted on the "Catherine The Great" campaign put on at Loew's-United Artists Theatre, Louisville, Ky., by Manager Walter McDowell, aided by assistant Hunt, and Bob Wood, U. A. exploiteer. Talks were made before the members on the picture's highlights and questions answered regarding the stars and theme of the story.

Prominent style windows were secured and many publicity breaks obtained in the usually hard to crack local papers. Broadcasts, special lobby, extra billing and other useful angles were whipped across to round out a well devised campaign.

Lamm Promotes Bridge Party on Mezzanine

Taking advantage of the bridge-consciousness of the Clevelandites, Julius Lamm, skipper of the Uptown Theatre, obtained a tie-up with a local club that wanted to raise some money.

Using his large rotunda in the balcony he arranged for a bridge party (see photo) charging a nominal sum, the proceeds of which went to a benefit. Club met all expenses and Julius says the theatre obtained 400 extra admissions as a result of the hundred tables arranged for. The good-will promoted through this tie-up is not to be overlooked.

Special Section for Third Anniversary

Greeted royally was the third anniversary of the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, Ohio, managed by Ed C. Paul under the supervision of Marc Wolf, managing director of Taft Theatres. Outstanding was the special eight page tab special newspaper section in which local merchants took space to extend congratulations. Page one carried a cut of the house with some neat copy entitled "I Am Three Years Old" that did a nice job of institutional selling.

Much was done to properly celebrate. A beauty contest was advertised widely, special stage jamborees presented, theatre parties organized, and a flock of other ideas effected to publicise the occasion as widely as possible.

First "Tarzan" Report Comes from Addison

The first campaign reported from the field on "Tarzan and His Mate" comes from Cleveland, where district manager H. M. Addison and his able assistant, Art Catlin and Exploiteer Milt Harris, gave the jungle epic an excellent sendoff. Here are the highlights:

Special group drawings were distributed in school rooms and used by teachers for drawing and coloring lessons, the children being allowed to take their finished efforts home. The Cleveland News put on a three-day animal word contest on the want ad page and also hooked in on a "Lost and Found" idea wherein guest tickets were given to readers who found lost articles and turned them in.

Weissmuller photos were given away in a leading department store on a "Tarzan" sweatshirt and BVD swim suit hookin, and a baking company cooperation on "Tarzan" wholewheat bread netted window posters in grocery stores, banners on trucks, parade of delivery wagons and co-op newspaper ads. Imprinted envelopes containing animal crackers were passed out on downtown corners by two girls in bellhop uniforms. "Tarzan" stickers were placed on delivery bags by a cleaning company, also banners on their trucks and stickers on windshields. Book stores came in extensively, tabloids were distributed house to house, broadcasting of the "love call' in the picture and special jungle lobby were also arranged.

The jungle atmosphere was carried out authentically in the theatre front, lobby and on, the marquee. Palm and cocoanut trees, thatched huts, cutout and stuffed jungle animals and even a jungle native (see photo) were utilized effectively in selling the background of the picture.

We are pleased to know that Addison has added Milt Harris to his fast-stepping crew. Milt has a successful advertising background, his last assignment being at the Fox, St. Louis, where he served for five years.

Bourdeau Executes Well Done Lobby Standee

Art Bourdeau's standee lobby piece on "George White's Scandals" illustrated in the accompanying photo, is different from the usual girl cutout, as this member states he managed to promote one of the figures used on 42nd Street. The bottom was cut off and another piece added for the title, done in pale yellow on a purple background outlined with silver tinsel. The figure was then mounted on a black background which was also outlined in silver tinsel, the entire display being made very inexpensively.

Caldwell Promotes Lilies on "Riptide"

As was to be expected, Wally Caldwell utilized the national "Riptide" slogan contest as a feature of his campaign on that picture at Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, getting breaks as far in advance as eight days ahead of the contest start. Other newspaper breaks that clicked were a full column article on Spring fashions by Norma Shearer and a series of three-column co-op ads, all of which carried cuts of the star.

Many window tieups were made, the Montgomery-Leica camera still netting an ace display (see photo) in one of the best downtown spots, with various Shearer style stills used as background in other prominent stores, in addition to three-sheet star cutouts.

As part of his slogan contest, Wally had one of his papers distribute 15,000 tab heralds and a florist hook-in resulted in "Riptide" lilies given to women patrons three days ahead.

Kiddie Ideas Tilt Rosenfield's Grosses

The younger element has been getting a play in Joe Rosenfield's exploitation at the Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., his best outstanding newspaper bet being an amateur talent contest which ran for five weeks, the ultimate winner being given an opportunity to appear professionally. Joe clicked with this on the amusement pages, planting a number of stories and cuts of the youngsters.

Sounding out the appeal of his serials and at the same time building up his coming chapter play, Joe distributed questionnaire cards at his kid matinees with spaces for names and birthdates for the house mailing list.

Bair Invites Folks Who Have Not Seen Talkie

No doubt there are folks who have as yet to see their first talking picture, and to get them into the theatre habit, E. E. Bair, operator of the State and Ohio Theatres, Uhrichville, Ohio, runs a regular box in his program asking for names and addresses of locals over 40 who have never heard 'em in sound.

To those filling in coupon, E. E. writes personal letters enclosing passes, and states while he is not flooded with requests, the gag is good for a lot of publicity. Along the same lines, Bair selects names from the phone book and each week in the program he prints the names of about a dozen residents to be his guests at the show. That's guaranteeing reader-control.

Ableson Puts Out Thrill Contest Heralds

From Manager A. E. Ableson, World Theatre, Omaha, Neb., comes an effective four page special herald in two colors, size ten by twelve, which he created to sell a "thrill contest" idea on "Mystery of Mr. X." The first page was headed, "X Strikes Tonight," followed by buildup copy and illustrated with a still from the picture.

On pages two and three were two column cuts from six previously played thrill pictures, prizes being offered to the first 50 submitting a correct list of titles from which these scenes were taken. The back page contained further copy on the picture, theatre and date.

"A. E." also sends along some tastefully executed lobby set pieces and posters, going for the bus bally on "Cross Country Cruise," in which he tied in with the Union Pacific to supply a bannered bus free of charge (see photo) to plug the date.

George Delis Reports Various Activities

Life-sized figures of Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante and girls were erected completely around the marquee at the Palace, Canton, Ohio, on district chief George A. Delis' "Scandals" campaign, put over with the aid of Manager Keith Chambers. Also helpful was an elaborate music store tieup (see photo) and hookin with a cosmetic company furnishing free samples.

On "Spitfire," the 24 sheet figure of Hepburn was cut out for marquee display, with the star and title in red metallics and a neon device spitting fire, the effect heightened by a red gelatin flood lamp. On opening night red fire was ignited for premiere atmosphere and small teaser cards in imprinted envelopes distributed to women patrons with copy "Warning to Ladies, 'Spitfire' Is on Her Way to Canton."

A stage unit headed by the Siamese twins was publicized with one of the most talked of parades the city has yet seen, the Ford dealer coming in with a string of new models, bannered, with the twins at the head of the procession in a silver colored car.

Harlow Letter Helps O'Brien On "Dinner"

Manager George D. O'Brien obtained cooperation direct from Jean Harlow on his "Dinner at Eight" campaign at the Miller Theatre, Woodstock, Ill., by having the star send him an autographed photo which was given to the patron buying his ticket exactly at eight o'clock on the opening night. Previous to this the photo and letter from star was shown in prominent window. The gag cracked the front page of his conservative newspaper, which also ran the serialization of the story a week ahead and during the run, O'Brien placing small theatre ad at the end of each instalment.

O'Brien not only promoted double truck two days ahead, but arranged for free distribution house to house and over 2,000 rural homes at a cost of $10. A contest for the members of his Kid Club for the best "Dinner at Eight" recipe brought the idea into their homes for a different kind of a plug, and a good phone stunt was a girl calling various numbers and saying, "We are having 'Dinner at Eight' tonight and would like to have you come." Nothing else was said and the idea aroused the curiosity for which it was pointed.

Eight Girls In Actual Boat Make Ace Display

Manager Eaton Sizer, Jeffris Theatre, Janesville, Wis., promoted his showing of "Eight Girls in a Boat" right into the local Auto Fashion show by securing a rowing shell from the nearby University of Wisconsin and a motor boat for a theatre lobby display (see photo) in which eight local girls dressed in bathing suits posed.

At the auto show the same girls occupied the rowing shell and operated the oars under instructions from a girl coxswain, who also included a bally for the picture. The display was illuminated with floods and spots, banners and theatre cards.

Maloney's Trick Heralds Had Them "Seeing Stars"

Window displays and a street parade tying in a special Saturday morning showing for local boys distributing Liberty magazines were among the stunts put on by H H. Maloney, Loew's State, Providence, R. I., for "Nana."

Six by nine-inch heralds gotten out through a merchant tieup contained an ad on the picture with theatre mention, etc., copy reading "hold this up to the light and if star appears in the above circle, you win a free facial by beauty specialist compliments of," merchant's name appearing. A similar herald was gotten out by a candy company offering their product if star appeared. Each company got out 10,000 of these heralds, which were distributed by Liberty Magazine boys. In return for this service special Saturday morning showing was given for boys, who marched to the theatre with pennants announcing opening.

Radio tieup was effected with half-hour broadcast from theatre, photos placed in windows and auto, cards distributed at newsstands, restaurants, bus terminals, etc.

14 Advance Broadcasts On Goldberg Campaign

Fourteen advance broadcasts over the six leading Philadelphia stations on "As the Earth Turns." That's the score rolled up by Harry Goldberg, Warner advertising manager in that zone in his campaign for the date at the Boyd Theatre. And not the least of the radio plugs was a contest on what kind of women men marry, using Jean Muir as an example of the new American type in pictures. Twenty-five dollars in prizes were given.

Special screening for 40 of the city's most prominent club women was in the nature of a challenge to women's clubs to put their picture over as proof that the public wanted this type of entertainment. This led to letters mailed to over 3,000 names supplied by the club-ites.

The novel in tabloid form was published by one of the Sunday papers, extra copies being distributed at theatre a week in advance. Book marks were used by the public library, a contact that was unusual, as such cooperation has been extended to the publicizing of few motion pictures.

Book stores, fan magazine distributors and newspapers cooperated generously, the latter especially with much space being given to the discussion of the Warner Brothers' efforts to produce "bunkless" pictures.

WHAT MAKES GOOD ART?

Head of Paramount's Poster and Art Departments States Views On Fundamentals of Poster Art

by VINCENT TROTTA

Having fully read the three articles by Donald Andorfer with the rebuttal by Hal Kopplin, I would like to express my interest in noting that the pages of the Managers' Round Table section of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD is devoting its pages to such a useful forum.

According to the remarks of both these gentlemen, it is obvious that Mr. Andorfer, on the one hand, is defending the poster artists' sensibilities, while Mr. Kopplin, on the other hand, is defending his own personal views in connection with this glamorous business of the motion picture industry. As long as human nature is constituted as it is, you will always have different opinions on different subjects, regardless of what the subjects may be.

As the poster artist obviously belongs in an advertising set-up, let me say that the trouble with many of the men in our advertising field, and especially in our own motion picture industry, is that each seems to believe that his own individual work constitutes the major element of importance in an advertisement, whether it be a lobby, a poster, a newspaper ad, a trade ad or any other piece of advertising material.

The artist seems to feel that the merchandise cannot be sold unless the major part of the advertisement of that merchandise is constituted of a pictorial sense, and the writer seems to feel that his copy should dominate the major portion of the work in order to carry over an effective sales message. This is erroneous.

Medium of Expression

Both these gentlemen seem to lose sight of the fact that the fundamental of art work and copy in advertising is nothing more than a medium of expression as far as the advertising is concerned. The proportionate relationship of these two elements is generally controlled by the nature or quality of the merchandise to be sold, whether it be a "movie," a gas range or a stick of chewing gum, and one cannot truthfully be carried without the other because the amount of space to be devoted to these elements of art and copy in an advertisement should be regulated, not by the sensibility of the artist or the copy writer, but by the very nature of the product.

It would be just as monotonous to show a series of posters in front of a theatre made up mostly of art and very little text matter, as it would be monotonous to show a series of posters consisting mostly of text matter and very little pictorial art.

The true and intelligent application of art or copy matter for the dress of a theatre front or a lobby is that which embodies an entirely different treatment for each production, stylizing the treatment of the posters and other advertising material to the mood of each particular production to the point of identifying them as of the one family.

For instance, for a production that contains a strong popular cast, the major part of the lobby poster could be devoted to pictorial, the reason for this being that a major star or a major cast is generally more important.

However, for a motion picture which contains a less popular cast, but which is a major production, an entirely different handling would be required, especially so if the particular production carried a strong title with a popular theme. In such a case my contention is that the major part of the poster could be devoted to carrying the title and some strong sales copy strongly and effectively executed in color and composition.

A tendency that seems to prevail with many poster artists is that they apply the same thought and treatment in all their work regardless of what the theme of the production may be.

I firmly believe that the capable poster artist is one who has been schooled in the fundamentals of advertising and can apply this education in the execution of his work.

Don't Make "Pretty" Pictures

No matter how technical the poster artist may be, if he just uses his ability in making pretty pictures without injecting an advertising angle into his work, his work becomes nothing more or less than a picture and does not serve the purpose for which it was intended. It is the poster artist who injects an advertising sense or an idea into his work who is always the successful one. It is not necessarily the amount of pictorial or text that he feels the poster should have, but the way this pictorial or text is handled from an advertising standpoint that will respond at the box office.

However, invariably, a picture well presented will usually carry its message, but likewise, text well presented and properly displayed will also carry its message. I do believe that the display of the text in the makeup of the poster is just as essential as the pictorial, and I do agree with Mr. Kopplin when he says that to employ the same style of makeup in posters of every production would mean a lot of rain checks for the poster artists without their knowing the reason why.

The successful poster artist is one who not only knows his art, his color, and composition, but is one who can apply them in such a medium as to make their message speak strongly enough to draw the public to the box office.

"Riptide" Signature Sheets Fill Quickly

The three-sheet size "signature sheets" put out by M-G-M on "Riptide" to welcome Norma Shearer back to the screen were used extensively at the Denver Theatre, Denver, Col., three of the sheets being filled with signatures by the end of the first matinee.

A street car covered with 24 sheets was used as a street bally and this was elaborated by the addition of a flat car trailer float upon which models posed. Local railroads went for the excursion idea, publicizing this in ads and heralds; style tieups were made and other publicity was secured with radio announcements.

Observations

¶The open forum on the shape and size of the screen image and related matters bearing upon the design of the auditorium, which was part of the program of the spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, represented a step in the right direction. We liked the liberal way in which Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, as president of the society, conducted it, and liked especially his statement that similar opportunities for inquiry and discussion would be made available by the society at future meetings.

The design of auditoriums for the exhibition of motion pictures can stand a great deal of study from the point of view of just such a group as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The approach of Architecture toward the motion picture theatre has been notoriously that of decoration. We admit the relationship between decoration and that rather essential element of theatre operation, ballyhoo. But ballyhoo is a transient thing, while a theatre structure endures for quite some time. Motion pictures are most easily exploited, week in and week out, by theatres designed and equipped to give a superlative degree of audience satisfaction.

¶The designing of such theatres requires a group of architects who have a deep interest in, and a broad knowledge of, the essentials of motion picture technics. The job of the architect is first and foremost that of adapting to a certain site and sum of money the architectural forms and mechanical provisions that best serve the technical requirements of effective exhibition. These requirements are represented in the functions of the motion picture theatre: reproduction, comfort, advertising. The arts and sciences that these functions involve will keep the architect busy a long time before he needs to draw the pretty sketch which now occupies him at the outset.

We see no reason to believe that Architecture will change its approach to the motion picture theatre of its own accord. This will be changed when the motion picture theatre business itself demands it. Now theatre operators are neither motion picture technicians nor architects. They are essentially business men. To just such industry groups as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers they can become accustomed to look for better, sounder methods of theatre design, these then to be exacted from the architects they employ. (BETTER THEATRES thus acknowledges its inability to do the whole job alone.)

¶The establishment of better practices is even more important than that there should be a group of specialists in motion picture theatre architecture. The specialist is not available to all. A local architect who knows very little, if anything, about the technical requirements of the theatre, is very likely, for practical purposes, to be called in. He should have a source of proved and authoritatively approved procedure to guide him. Examine, if you will, the methods followed here and there in determining so simple an element as the slope of floors. How much basic, informed consideration is given, generally, to sightlines at all?

We believe that it would also be within the practical province of our technical organizations, particularly the SMPE, to initiate and encourage experimentation in theatre design, seeking architectural forms and environmental devices that better serve the true function of the motion picture theatre. The SMPE is to be congratulated on the first, tentative attempts it has already made in this direction, but we wish these attempts could have been a little less suggestive of tongue-in-cheek.

What is needed, we think, is the participation in the activities of motion picture technical organizations, of architects who, well trained and original in their own profession, are attracted to the technics of the motion picture. The SMPE is now seeking a larger membership and a broader appeal to the interests of the industry. The field of architecture should really not be overlooked

¶ After a certain amount of agitation, the Code Authority has supplied, in rather the manner we expected, an answer to the issue raised by some of the members of projectionist unions as to their wage status under the motion picture code. If the motion picture code is to work in harmony with the purposes of the legislation which created it, then the following ruling, as reported by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is intelligently conceived:

"The labor provisions of the code shall take precedence over labor agreements between theatres and projectionists and other skilled theatre labor.... Inasmuch as the Code specifically prohibits any reduction from the wage scale prevailing on August 23, 1933, this means that regardless of any existing contract or labor agreement, the wage for 40 hours shall be based on a wage-per-hour determined by dividing the August 23d weekly wage by the number of working hours which that wage covered."—G. S.

PERSONNEL TRAINING AND SUPERVISION

By J. T. KNIGHT, Jr.

The importance of manpower in successful theatre operation and the responsibility of management in building it

THE SCIENCE of personnel management—and the word science has been used intentionally—cannot be approached with any hope of success by those who through presumption, pride or egotism do not fully appreciate how absolutely dependent this motion picture industry is on its man power. Few industries require so great an assortment of trained specialists as our own. Yet until one has attained a reputation and a very sizeable pay check he receives little attention and consideration and is but part of the overhead of his organization. Such conditions are lamentable to say the least, and only an understanding, to some degree, of human nature by every executive in this business will ever materially alter this situation.

The foundation of the entire motion picture industry is, first, the technical invention and development of mechanical and electrical devices that have made the motion picture a reality; and second, life—life experiences and human nature, all of which have provided the theme of the pictures, the perfection of their production, the energy and resourcefulness of distribution and exhibition. A very commendable job has been done so far, but the accomplishments have been at a very high price in man power. The experience is comparable to that of a victorious army in an exceptionably bloody campaign, where losses almost outweigh the glory of victory. For every man who has been successful in this business there have been tens and hundreds who have fallen by the wayside, and each such failure represents in dollars and cents, and time a non-profitable investment for the industry.

Such conditions can and must be corrected at their source—first at the point of employment, and secondly in the attention to, and the training of, the employee. In the consideration of these two situations lies the secret of efficient man power.

EMPLOYE'S RELATION TO THE EMPLOYER

IN JOINING an organization an individual is generally taking just as great a chance as the company, but as a result of our present economic system it is generally considered that the company is taking all the hazard and the individual should feel quite grateful to the company for the job. In the case of one specific individual with conditions that exist today this is undoubtedly true. But considering the situation in its broadest aspect—that of the company hiring employes—the company can't function without employes and the employes can't exist without the company, so it follows that it is a mutual set of conditions, and is in all fairness an equal benefit and an equal hazard.

This economic truth is brought out here in order to begin thinking on this subject from the right starting point. An employer should be as gratified to have the right employe as the employe should be happy to have the right job with the right company. It of course follows that the beginning of personnel management starts with the proper selection and employment of applicants.

In a theatre the manager is officially the representative of the owner or the company who is authorized to hire the theatre staff, so before any discussion can take place on the selecting of the right applicant for a theatre job some consideration must be given to whether or not the manager is qualified to select man power and is worthy to have that power and influence over the lives and destinies of human beings, and the reputation of the owner or company. Locally the reputation of the owner or company is in the hands of, and depends upon, the employes, be they janitors, porters, ushers or assistant managers.

WHO SHOULD HIRE AND FIRE

IT DOES NOT follow that because a manager has proved his worth in advertising and merchandising pictures, or in producing a show, or in presenting vaudeville acts, that he is necessarily qualified to employ his own help. Nor because an individual has become an executive in a large company, the head of a special department, group, or function, is he necessarily qualified to select his own staff. For some rather undefined reason many individuals seem to believe that it is their inherent right, when having arrived at a position of importance, to "hire and fire." There is no greater fallacy, nor one with more far reaching detrimental effects, and it is positively indicative of an organization with low morale and little or no organizational spirit. When an employe feels and knows that his service with that company is in the palm of one man's hand, then he is going to perform his duties to please that man irrespective of whether it is ultimately for the good of the company. Such is the background of all "yes" men. That employe's loyalty, while perhaps nominally to the company, is truly to the individual who holds his business destiny in his power. Such policies of employment invariably result in factional groups within the organization, without harmony or co-operation. Further, such an organization becomes a fertile field for what might be called chain dishonesty, when so many are a part of the scheme that no one dares make a slip.

Finally, such employment policies have resulted in that rather uncomplimentary intimation of an organization, "It's not what you know or what you can do, but who you know and who you can do, that counts!" When business conditions were better, or in good times, companies with such employment policies many times boasted of their fine, loyal organizations; subsequent unearthing during the years of retrenchment of much that went on did not substantiate such statements nor justify such confidence.

With the "build-up" that is now taking place and with the positive indications that the industry is on "the road back," it presents a grand opportunity to eradicate all unhealthy conditions. One of those unhealthy conditions which should have some serious thought and consideration from every industry executive from the theatre manager up is the personnel problem.

The theatre manager is in a position to consider immediately the many angles of this problem and to put into operation immediately plans and methods for establishing the theatre staff on a sound basis. The number of persons which compose the theatre staff is of no great importance except, the fewer the number the easier the problem. Unfortunately, it so often happens that where the staff is smallest the manager is most lax; and the most efficient theatre organizations are frequently found in the larger theatres. The manager of the small theatre really has no logical excuse for a badly trained, inefficient staff.

For emphasis, the right or power of hiring or discharging employes should not rest in any one man, and those executives or junior executives higher up should not just blindly, without investigation, approve the actions or recommendations of their subordinates in matters of personnel. In all fairness to all concerned, every manager should want the approval or consideration of his decisions, either official or unofficial, of this employe problem.

PERSONNEL ORGANIZATION

IN THE July 1, 1933, issue of BETTER THEATRES it was stated:

"Organization is for the sole purpose of accomplishing definite results with the least expenditure of time, labor and material."

The analysis of this statement will emphasize these facts: time is in reality employe hours of service; labor is employe labor, and material is employe operation of equipment or consumption of material. In brief, the employe figures prominently in each definition of the terms used.

Further, in the same article in the same issue, this statement appears:

"The first step toward organizing a theatre is to study the present personnel."

This, in the light of statements made herein, is more than ever the first step toward organization. Now in the study of the employes of a theatre, the manager should endeavor to select a man capable of supervising all personnel. Though the manager can never properly pass over to this individual the responsibility, nevertheless he can delegate one of his employes as a supervisor of personnel.

Before making such an appointment it is well for the manager to have in mind the qualities or characteristics necessary for a supervisor of personnel. In many theatres there actually are several employes who in their capacities function as partial supervisors over personnel—for instance, the chief usher, chief operator, stage manager, chief janitor, etc. These individuals are charged, or should be charged, only with the co-ordination of the efforts, and the development and training of the employes under them—they should not have the right to hire and fire. They might recommend changes to the manager—in fact, that is one of their most important responsibility—but above all of these, the manager should have preferably an assistant whose principal interest is personnel, provided, of course, that the theatre is of sufficient size. When not, the manager must be his own personnel supervisor.

PERSONNEL QUALIFICATIONS

FOR THE QUALITIES that tend toward the capacity of personnel direction, such an individual must be a practical psychologist, he must understand human nature, men and women, their aspirations, aims and objectives in life, their strong and their weak characteristics, their good and their bad reactions, and with it all, be fair and unbiased in judgment, sympathetic and helpful in approach, and ever striving to aid each individual, to develop so that the employe becomes more skilled, more valuable to himself, and consequently to the company. It naturally follows that to measure up to this specification, it requires patience, tolerance, integrity, attention to detail, and perseverance. The day of the strong-armed, iron-fisted, hard-boiled driving type of personnel director has gone. Today business is a co-operative endeavor.

Managers, analyze yourselves and honestly ask if you are qualified as a personnel supervisor. If your answer is yes it should be clear sailing. If it is no, then the first thing to do is to bolster your organization by working into it the type of man who has the basic qualities to develop into a personnel supervisor. It has been said that the genius of Andrew Carnegie lay in his capacity to bring into his organization men who knew more about his business than he did.

Human nature, in reality a phase of life, will always be somewhat of a riddle. One can't experience and feel as someone else experiences and feels. Each must endeavor to interpret the emotions, more often commotions, that are taking place in the other

COOLING (answering H. C. M.): I am very skeptical about the cooling effect that you will get from the surface evaporation of water from the stream in back of your theatre. However, you know the facts. There are approximately 62,370 cubic feet in your theatre.

With 415 seats each, to get 25 cubic feet per minute you will require 10,375 c.f.m. Therefore, with a 30,000 c.f.m. fan you will get a 2+1/4-minute air change, and about 75 cubic feet per seat per person. This should produce excellent results in the theatre even if you don't get any cooling effect from the stream.

The fan that I have in mind has an overall depth of 31 inches, a width of 28 inches, a height of 29 inches, and weighs about 400 pounds. It has an outlet velocity of 1,100 feet per minute, an exact capacity of 2,940 cubic feet per minute, and at 1-inch static pressure, an r.p.m. of 791, and requires about 2 h.p. to drive it.

Unless you get water into the basement, I would recommend that the fan be located there, and deliver the air through two ducts on each side of the stage, with the lower part of the delivery opening about 13 feet from the auditorium floor line.

The fan would get its air through an intake located in the rear wall of the theatre, curved down somewhat as you showed in your sketch. If this intake duct is brought down to within 4 feet of the surface of the water it will be close enough.

I would suggest that you do nothing with the present exhaust fan if you follow through with the foregoing plan.

With reference to the roof ventilators, block off the three towards the stage end of the theatre and leave the one over the balcony open.

HEAT DISTRIBUTION (answering G. C.): I certainly would not advise the installation of any more direct radiation until some effort is made to quiet the fans on the unit heaters. Assuming the statement in your letter to be correct ("An even temperature could be kept in the theatre if the unit heaters could be run on high speed"), then by all means house them in, in some way with sound absorbing material so that they can be run at full speed.

Call in a representative of the manufacturer of the unit heaters, tell him your problem and ask for his recommendations. I believe that the replacement of the unit heaters with a type guaranteed for quiet operation would be more preferable than adding more load on your boiler with resulting increased fuel bills. I am convinced that the installation of more radiation (and 1,200 feet is a lot) under the stage apron would have very little beneficial effect upon your conditions.

CENTRAL VACUUM EQUIPMENT: All hose should be left coiled after using. To protect the hose against unusual wear and from breaking at the point of connection with floor valves, obtain and use a special 90° elbow. The joints on the floor tool and handle should be kept oiled, but be careful to wipe off surplus oil so that it won't drip on the carpets. Clean the brush attachments before putting them away after each time they are used. Much loss in efficiency is caused because the rubber washers in the floor valves are not renewed frequently enough to keep them fitting tight.

UNIFORMS: The uniforms and personal equipment furnished by the management should be cared for by the employe as his own. When uniforms need the attention of a tailor, the employe should promptly report that fact to the manager. A stitch in time will add many weeks of service to a uniform. When there is a dirty job to be done don't wear your best uniform. White gloves when worn should be clean. A clean pair of hands look far better than a dirty pair of gloves.

MODERNISM IN LONDON'S NEW REGAL

BOLD FORMS in severely directional patterns characterize the purely architectural or decorative character of the new Regal in Wimbledon, London suburb and England's tennis capital. The design is by Robert Cromie, London architect.

The auditorium has a ceiling of brown gold, horizontal flutings, a proscenium that is sprayed a silver. Proscenium curtains are of bright gold, while the seats are green. Illuminated coves are executed in textural plasterwork, very flat and slightly tinted in various tones. Their design is based upon abstract photographic principles indicative of cinematography. A wide screen over the proscenium is for the organ, while there are side grilles for the public address speakers.

The facade is done in artificial stone with granite finish, black and beige faience.

The Regal has a good-sized restaurant, the decorative treatment of which is carried out in stone color sprayed with silver, and there are aluminum strips around the dado. The carpet is gray, black and green, while the furniture is vermillion in color and chromium-plated.

The three views of the Regal on this page show characteristic treatments. The upper left picture is of the restaurant. The auditorium view is of the left forward side. The flat stone-like facade with its granite finish is pictured at left.

ATTRACTING THE PATRON WITH LIGHT

Courtesy Luminous Structures, Inc., through General Electric

This facade design represents a lighting treatment of modern type that has dignity as well as showmanlike appeal. Through an intelligent application of glass, steel and porcelain, the designer has been able to fabricate a pattern that has strong advertising features, and is original without being bizarre. Tinted flashed glass is featured on the building front, with etched or sandblasted lines. Fins are of porcelain enamel. The tower signs are of flashed opal glass. The marquee signs are made of block letters with flashed-opal faces. The attraction letters are silhouetted against an open or glass-enclosed recess. The underside of the marquee is glassed and entirely luminous.

Based on specifications of General Electric engineers.

The box office is the focal point of the entrance and requires a special treatment if it is to carry out its purpose effectively. Modern design brings to it new distinction and customer-getting value. Sign matter consists prominently in announcement of admission prices, time of shows, program features. Changeable cutout letters silhouetted against luminous or glass-faced recesses are featured elements of these box office designs.

DECISIONS IN RECENT THEATRE SUITS

By LEO T. PARKER

Late cases involving theatre operating procedure, described and analyzed specifically for theatre owners and managers

CONSIDERABLE controversy has existed from time to time whether or not a theatre owner is entitled to file suit and obtain an injunction against members of a labor union from picketing the theatre. Generally speaking, the courts have recognized that labor has the legal right to acquaint the public with facts regarding an employer which it regards as unfair, to give notoriety to its cause, and to use persuasive inducements to brings its own policies to triumph. Such picketing or publicity is not unlawful. It is only when the evil, tortious factors are brought into play that it becomes illegal. Nor will peaceable picketing be permitted to become a nuisance where, for instance, the members of the union attempt to intimidate or otherwise forcibly induce theatre patrons not to enter the theatre.

CASE

For example, in Music Hall Theatre v. moving Picture Machine Operators Local (61 S. W. [2d] 283, Newport, Ky.), it was disclosed that a theatre owner filed suit against a labor organization and requested the court to grant an injunction against members of the union from picketing the theatre.

During the trial certain testimony was introduced showing that the pickets carried a banner having the inscription thereon: "This Theatre does not employ Union Operator member of Local No. 165, M. P. M. O. & I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. A. & Can. Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor."

Two or three men accompanied the bearer of the banner. Also, there was substantial evidence that the picketers accosted prospective patrons at the entrance and about the theatre and, calling them aside, talked with them. Some of them were told that the building was a fire trap; that no show was going on at the time, and it would not open; that the operators were not union men and did not understand their business; and that there would likely be a fire. All of these things had the effect of intimidating the patrons or prospective patrons of the theatre. Excepting the inscription on the banner, they were false and misleading.

DECISION

Therefore, in view of this testimony, although the lower court refused to grant the relief, the higher court granted the injunction, saying:

"While the defendants denied that they had done or were doing anything except such as could be regarded as peaceable picketing, there is substantial evidence to show that they had gone beyond that limit. Therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from using those tactics of annoyance, intimidation, coercion, and misrepresentation."

PRIVATE FIRMS AND CORPORATIONS

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a corporation is a separate entity and is treated as such under all ordinary circumstances. However, circumstances occasionally arise where a person simply deals with his own property through a corporate agency as absolutely as he might deal with it as an individual. If in such case, considering the firm strictly to be a corporation would operate as a constructive fraud or defeat some strong valid claim, the transaction is considered as one of the individual himself or of the corporation, whichever will prevent the unfair result.

CASE

For illustration, in the late case of Minahan v. Timm (247 N. W. 321, Green Bay, Wis.), it was disclosed that a theatre corporation known as "The Green Bay Orpheum Company" was owned by a man named Timm, the latter having purchased practically all of the stock in the corporation. Later another man named Minahan entered into a contract with the theatre corporation by the terms of which the old theatre building, on the land owned by the corporation, was torn down, and Minahan supplied $200,000 with which to construct a new building. Afterwards the corporation, through Timm, guaranteed to pay to Minahan the sum of $3,000 per month on the $200,000 obligation. When the theatre corporation failed to make these payments Minahan filed a foreclosure suit against the theatre building.

Timm contended the agreement of the corporation to pay $3,000 per month was void because this contract and others had been made in the name of the corporation without proper authority of the directors at regular stockholders meetings. However, since it was shown that Timm personally negotiated the various transactions and that he was almost sole owner of the corporation, the higher court held Minahan entitled to foreclose on the theatre building, and said:

DECISION

"It appears almost without dispute that from the time he acquired the stock in the Orpheum Company, H. K. Timm dealt with the property as his own. . . . The whole matter was at all times and under all circumstances within his control. The holding of a meeting of the stockholders or of the directors would have merely recorded his will and his determination in regard to the affairs of the corporation."

BREACH OF CONTRACT

A GREAT MANY controversies between theatre owners and sellers originate from breach of a sale contract. It is well known that a person who breaches a contract is liable in damages for loss of profits and other financial losses sustained by the other contracting party as a result of the breach.

Broadly speaking, a breach of a sale contract is any act in violation to the terms of the agreement. Obviously, any firm or person may defend a suit on contentions, but if such contentions are unworthy, and not substantially proven, the jury will not be induced to render a favorable verdict.

Also, it is important to know that neither a buyer nor a seller is entitled to recover damages based upon a breached contract, unless the testimony clearly indicates that actually a breach occurred. In other words, the mere fact that a seller states that he intends to breach a contract, is not sufficient justification for the purchaser to recover damages.

For example, in the recent case of Clark

& Company v. Miller (122 So. 475, Mississippi), it was disclosed that a disagreement became apparent between a buyer and a seller. Suit was instituted on the contention that certain acts and statements of one of the parties indicated that he anticipated and intended breaching the contract. The court promptly held that a contracting party is not liable for assertions of this nature because no breach is made until he fails to fulfill his obligations. This court said:

DECISION

"The mere assertion of a party to a contract that he will be unable, or will refuse to perform his contract is not sufficient to constitute a breach. There must be a distinct, unequivocable, and absolute refusal to perform, treated and acted upon as such by the other party to the contract. A mere assertion of inability to go on with the contract is not a repudiation of the contract. The intention to abandon the contract at some future date is not a breach of it unless such intention is declared in positive terms and unconditionally."

HOW CONTRACTS ARE FULFILLED

BY M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

HAVING HERETOFORE dealt with the subject of the essentials which go to make up a valid enforceable contract, the series of articles on contract law is closed with a discussion of the manner in which a contract is brought to an end. These ways are:

1. BY PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT. Ordinarily, a contract is discharged by its being performed by the parties. This means a full compliance with all the terms of the contract, except that in certain types of agreements, such as building contracts, a slight breach unintentionally made will not prevent enforcement of the contract.

If an agreement specifies a time within which performance must be made, a few days' delay of performance will not prevent enforcement, unless it is made a strict condition that the contract be completed within a certain time, or unless the circumstances are such that the courts will spell out such a condition even if none is contained in the contract.

An agreement to do a thing to the satisfaction of another—for example, a contract to paint a portrait—must be performed to the satisfaction of the other party if it involves a matter of personal taste, but if it does not involve personal taste, and the other party should reasonably be satisfied, then he must pay.

2. BY OPERATION OF LAW. The enactment of a law or a change in existing laws may make the performance of a contract illegal. For example, if after a theatre is leased, an ordinance makes it illegal to house a theatre in the particular type of building, the contract comes to an end.

3. BY IMPOSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE. No valid contract comes into existence, if at the time of making it, performance is impossible. For example, if parties agree to sell a horse which, unknown to them, has meanwhile died, no contract arises.

If after the agreement is entered into, performance becomes impossible, the contract may or may not be enforceable, depending upon the circumstances. If, for example, the contract is one for personal services which cannot be performed by another person, such as a violinist's contract to perform at a concert, the contract is discharged by the musician's illness or incapacity.

Generally, where the risk that performance of the contract would become impossible is one which the parties could be reasonably supposed to have undertaken, impossibility will not relieve the parties of liability. For example, a person who promises to sell a certain stock which he does not at the time possess, but which he hopes to acquire at a later date, will not be relieved of his promise when he finds it impossible to acquire the stock for delivery.

4. A CONTRACT MAY ALSO COME TO AN END BY REASON OF BREACH OF THE CONTRACT. A breach gives rise to liability on the part of the breaching party, as distinguished from a discharge of a contract which leaves the parties in the same position as though no agreement had ever been made.

A contract is considered to have been breached when a party to the contract fails to perform his obligation in the manner agreed upon, or within the period agreed upon, if the parties have agreed that a contract must be performed strictly within that time. If time is not essential, it may be considered to have been breached if it is not performed within a reasonable time.

If before performance is commenced, a party states that he is not going to perform, or puts it out of his power to perform, he has committed what is known as an "anticipatory breach." In such event, the other party generally may sue immediately even though the time for performance has not elapsed.

A party to a contract which has been broken by the other party has a choice of remedies. However, before he may seek any of these remedies, he must show that he has performed his part of the agreement, or at least show that he has done enough to demand that the other party perform his part. If he can show that he has done all that the law requires him to do, he may then sue the breaching party for damages or he may sue to revoke the agreement and to regain the value of the materials or services which he has furnished.

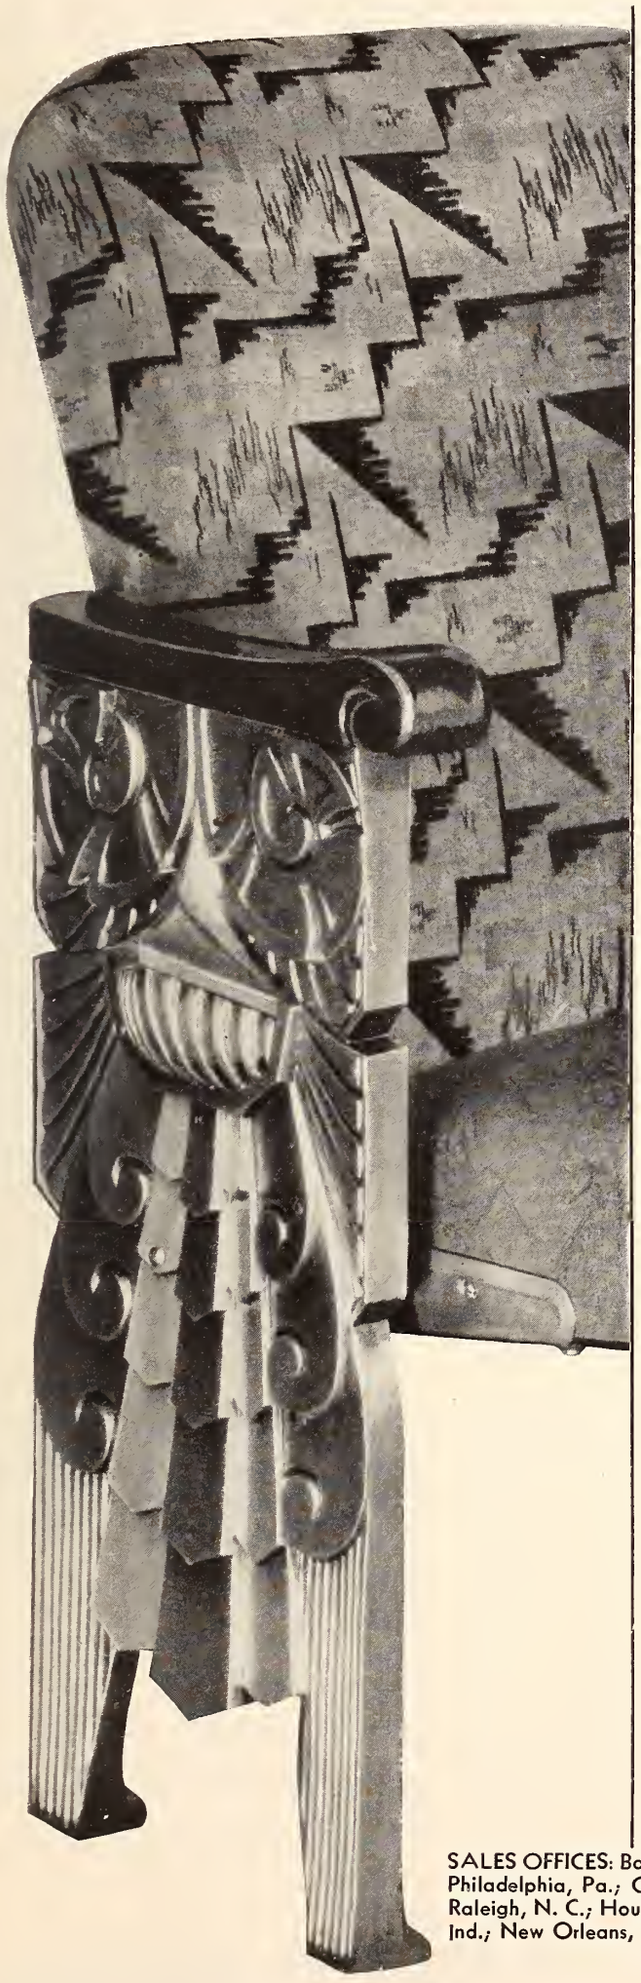
In some types of cases, where money is held to be insufficient to pay a party for the breach of the contract, the courts will order the other party to perform the agreement. Such cases are generally those in which something which cannot be easily duplicated is purchased and delivery is refused—for example, a patent, a work of art or real estate, or an interest in real estate such as a lease.

BREACH OF IMPLIED CONTRACT

IT IS WELL established law that a person who breaches a valid contract is liable to the other contracting party in damages equal to the loss sustained by the other party. Also, a purchaser may not refuse to accept films, or other goods, on the excuse that the quality is not satisfactory, if the seller proves that the quality would be satisfactory to the average prudent theatre owner. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Spitzer v. Pathe Exchange, Inc. (23 P. [2d] 308, Los Angeles, Cal.).

CASE

In this case it was shown that a person named Spitzer entered into a contract with a motion picture film distributor by the terms of which Spitzer agreed to make several motion pictures and the distributor agreed to pay a specified sum of money on delivery of the pictures. One of the clauses contained in the contract was, "Each of said pictures shall be of the highest quality as regards acting, action, directing, photography, and consistency of story."



After completing one of the pictures Spitzer submitted it for approval to the distributor who refused to accept it saying that the picture did not equal the quality specified in the contract. Spitzer proceeded to change certain scenes in the picture in accordance with the distributor's suggestion and later submitted it for approval. However, the distributor refused to approve the picture and pay the amount which Spitzer contended was due. Therefore, Spitzer filed suit against the distributor to recover damages for breach of the contract.

During the trial evidence was introduced on the part of Spitzer showing that the motion picture film was of good quality and should have been accepted by the distributor. Therefore, considerable discussion arose as to the amount of damages due Spitzer as a result of the distributor's breach. In holding the distributor liable, the court said:

DECISION

"In doing so it is his (Spitzer's) claim that when the parties entered into the contract both knew that the cost of the pic-

If you question the importance of luxurious comfort for your patrons, try to imagine holding patronage with seats of plain pine boards. Couldn't be done, could it?

Deeply upholstered, new, beautiful seats can't take the place of a good program, but they certainly can make a good program better.

THE REVISED STANDARD RELEASE PRINT

Provisions now established, as explained, with chart, by the Academy committee in charge of revision

THE THOROUGH establishment of the Standard Release Print and the co-ordination between studio, laboratory and theatre which has resulted from three and a half years of use of the uniform leader, has made revision of the Standard Print feasible.

Upon the recommendation of the New York Chapter of the American Projection Society, approved by the Projection Advisory Council and the American Projection Society, a total of eighteen frames of picture is now included in the picture run-out following the final series of changeover dots, in place of the former twelve frames. This will improve projection and contribute towards a smoother show.

Motor start mark and changeover cues have not been changed, nor their relative position altered. The revisions embody principally a reduction in the length of various portions of the leader, and the new print will appear to the projectionist on the screen exactly as in the past.

All release print film processed in both Hollywood and Eastern laboratories since May 1, carry the new revised leader. The subcommittee in charge of revision of the print consisted of S. J. Twining, chairman; John Aalberg, Sidney Burton, Harry Decker, Lester B. Isaac, Harry Rubin, and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council.

NEW SPECIFICATIONS

PROTECTIVE LEADER. Shall be either transparent or raw stock, not more than 6 feet nor less than 4 feet in length.

This represents no change for 1,000-foot reels. Minimum will be 6 feet if longer reel unit is adopted.

Revised specifications eliminate 1930 SRP notations.

PART TITLE. Shall contain 24 frames in each of which is plainly printed in black letters on white background: (a) type of print, (b) part number (Arabic numeral not less than quarter of a frame height), and (c) picture title.

This section has been reduced from 4 feet to 24 frames.

SYNCHRONIZING LEADER. Twenty frames ahead of Start mark, then 12 feet, including Start mark, to picture. Opaque except as specified as follows:

In the center of the first frame there shall be printed across the picture and sound track area a white line 1/32-inch wide upon which is superimposed a diamond ⅛-inch high.

The next 15 frames may be used by the studio for sensitometric or other information. If not so used, this leader shall be opaque.

The Start mark shall be the twenty-first frame in which is printed START (inverted) in black letters on white background. The Academy camera aperture height of .631-inch shall be used in the photography of this frame and all others between Start mark and beginning of picture.

From the Start mark to the picture the leader shall contain frame lines which do not cross sound track area.

Beginning 3 feet from the first frame of picture, each foot is to be plainly marked by a transparent frame containing an inverted black numeral at least a half-frame height. Footage indicator numerals shall run consecutively from 3 to 11, inclusive.

At a point exactly 20 frames ahead of the center of each footage numeral frame there shall be a diamond (white on black background) ⅛-inch high by 3/8-inch wide.

Changes represented in these Synchronizing Leader specifications are: Section to Start mark reduced to 12 frames. New aperture to be used for Start mark frame. Frames for possible use for studio information represent a new specification.

PICTURE. It is recommended that picture action start and finish on fades wherever possible, otherwise significant sound should be kept at least 5 feet from the start and finish of the picture.

MOTOR CUE. Shall be circular opaque marks with transparent outline printed from the negative which has had four consecutive frames punched with a serrated edge die .094-inch in diameter. The center of these holes is to be halfway between the top and second sprocket holes .281-inch from the right-hand edge of the film with heads up and emulsion toward the observor.

Following the four frames containing the circular opaque marks, there shall be 10 feet, 12 frames to the beginning of the changeover cue.

CHANGEOVER CUE. Four frames containing circular opaque marks, each of which is punched similarly to, and of the same dimension and position on the frame as the motor cue.

Following the four frames containing the circular opaque marks there shall be 18 frames to the beginning of the run-out trailer.

Thus 6 frames have been added to picture run-out following changeover cue.

RUNOUT TRAILER. Shall be opaque, 3 feet in length. This specification represents a reduction from 6 feet, as in former print, to 3 feet.

END-OF-PART TITLE. To have 24 frames in each plainly printed in black letters on white background: (a) End of Part, (b) part number (Arabic numeral not less than quarter frame height), and (c) picture title. This represents a reduction from 4 feet.

PROTECTIVE TRAILER. Same as protective leader.

USE OF STANDARD PRINT IN PROJECTION

A CHART showing the Standard Release Print revised as of May 1, 1934, accompanies this explanation. Every reel which you receive from the exchange marked Standard Print Makeup should be exactly in accordance with the chart. If, upon inspection, you find that it is not, the exchange should be notified at once.

The following is reprinted from the Academy Technical Bureau Report 22-A, "Standard Release Print Makeup and Practice," and explains the actual use of the Standard Release Print in the theatre. (The revisions which have been subsequently adopted make no change in the appearance of the Standard Print marks upon the screen, nor in its operation in the theatre.)

ACADEMY SPECIFICATIONS FOR 35mm MOTION PICTURE RELEASE PRINTS

PROTECTIVE LEADER

Either transparent or raw stock.

When the protective leader has been reduced to a length of four feet it is to be restored to a length of six feet.

IDENTIFICATION LEADER (Part Title)

Shall contain 24 frames in each of which is plainly printed in black letters on white background: (a) type of print, (b) part number (Arabic numeral not less than ¼ of frame height), and (c) picture title.

SYNCHRONIZING LEADER

20 frames ahead of Start mark, then 12 feet, including Start mark, to picture. Opaque except as specified below:

In the center of the first frame there shall be printed across the picture and sound track area a white line 1/32 inch wide upon which is superimposed a diamond ⅛ inch high.

The next 15 frames may be used by the studio for sensitometric or other information. If not so used this leader shall be opaque.

The Start mark shall be the 21st frame, in which is printed START (inverted) in black letters on white background. The Academy camera aperture height of .631 inch shall be used in the photography of this frame.

From the Start mark to the picture the leader shall contain frame lines which do not cross sound track area.

Beginning 3 feet from the first frame of picture, each foot is to be plainly marked by a transparent frame containing an inverted black numeral at least ½ frame height. Footage indicator numerals shall run consecutively from 3 to 11, inclusive.

At a point exactly 20 frames ahead of the center of each footage numeral frame there shall be a diamond (white on black background) ⅛ inch high by ⅜ inch wide.

PICTURE

It is recommended that picture action start and finish on fades wherever possible, otherwise significant sound should be kept at least five feet from the start and finish of the picture.

MOTOR CUE

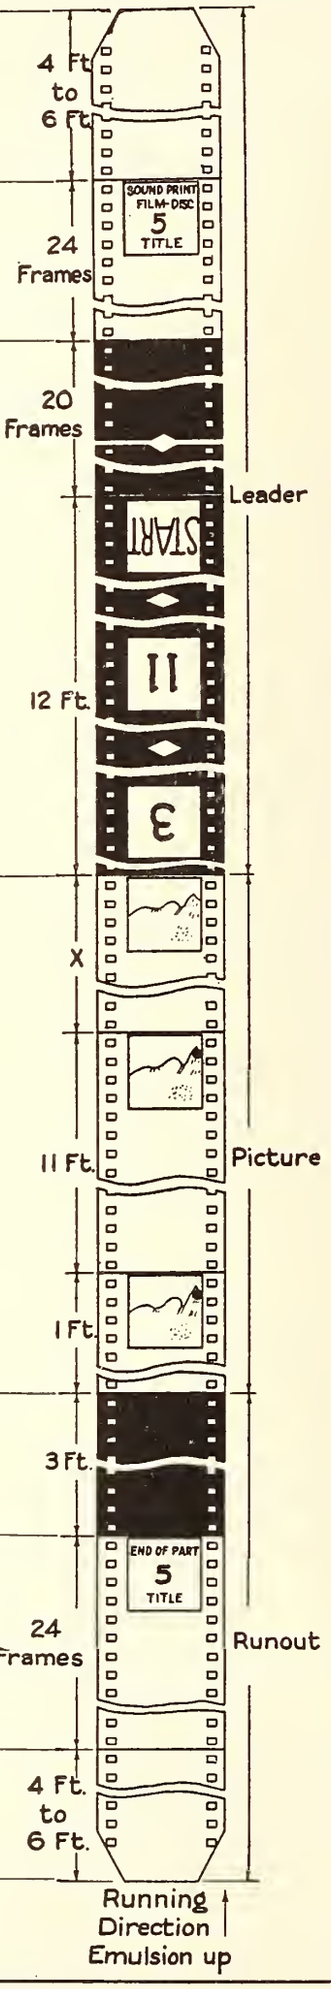
Shall be circular opaque marks with transparent outline printed from the negative which has had four consecutive frames punched with a serrated edge die .094 inch in diameter. The center of these holes is to be halfway between the top and second sprocket holes .281 inch from the righthand edge of the film with heads up and emulsion toward the observer.

CHANGE-OVER CUE

Shall be the same as Motor Cue.

RUNOUT TRAILER

Shall be opaque, 3 feet in length.



IDENTIFICATION TRAILER (End-of-part title)

Shall contain 24 frames in each of which is plainly printed in black letters on white background: (a) end of part, (b) part number (Arabic numeral not less than ¼ of frame height), and (c) picture title.

PROTECTIVE TRAILER

Same as protective leader.

action on fades whenever possible. Otherwise significant sound will be kept at least five feet from the start and finish of the picture. This insures steadying down of the incoming projector before significant sound is reproduced, and also allows a margin of safety on the change-over.

The standard uses visible signals for motor and change-over cues. The visible signal will show as a round black dot against light background and as a white circle against dark background.

The motor cue consists of the standard visible signal printed in the upper right-hand corner of four consecutive frames. The first of these frames is exactly 12 feet from the end of the picture. This distance, like the length of the synchronizing leader, was designed to accommodate the variety of pickup speeds to be found among machines in use.

The changeover cue is a mark like the motor cue on four consecutive frames, the first of which is 1 foot from the end of the picture. In placing the changeover cue in this position, it was assumed that half a second is the average time it takes an alert projectionist to see the cue on the screen and throw the douser switch. It is essential that the projectionist throw the changeover switch immediately the cue flashes on the screen if the changeover is to be perfect.

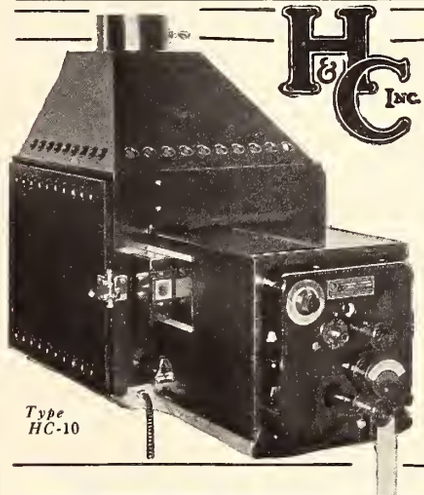
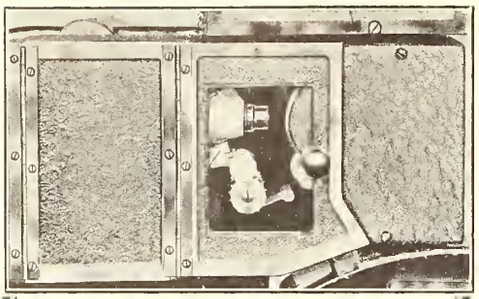
When you see the motor cue, start the incoming projector.

When you see the changeover cue, throw the douser switch.



DIFFERENCES IN PICKUP SPEED

The motor cue is 12 feet from the end of the picture on the outgoing reel. At 90 feet per minute, these 12 feet take 8 seconds to run out. Your problem is to determine how many feet of leader your incoming projector will pick up in these 8 seconds. This is the "actual changeover footage" for that particular projector. It will not be the same for all projectors, because the motor pickup speed is different from projector to projector. However, the motor pickup speed is always the same for any one projector, so that you can determine the actual changeover footage once and for all for each projector.



CHANGEOVER FOOTAGE

Place the footage frames numbered 11 in the aperture of the incoming projector. Then changeover according to the cues, starting the motor of your incoming machine the instant you first see the start motor cue and throwing the douser switch the instant you see the changeover cue. If there is a lapse between the two reels showing on the screen, try it again by placing the footage frame number 10 in the aperture of the incoming machine. Continue this process with the same machine trying footage frame numbers 9, 8, 7 and so on until you have found the foot, and the frame in the foot, which when threaded up at the aperture will give you the exact changeover. This frame then marks your exact changeover footage for that machine. Suppose, for example, it is the third frame ahead of the 7 mark. Then you know that on every Standard Print, if you place the third frame ahead of the 7 mark in the aperture of that incoming projector, the changeover will be perfect.

Repeat this process for each projector you have, as there is often a difference between the pickup speed of projectors even in the same projection room.

CHECKING SYNCHRONISM

In projecting sound on film, if you wish to test the length of your loops to insure synchronism, thread up so that the start frame, or any other numbered footage frame, is at the aperture. A diamond mark should show at the sound gate, as the diamonds are placed twenty frames ahead of each footage numeral. You can then turn down to have the correct frame in the aperture for the changeover.

THREADING FOR DISC

Set the needle on the disc at the synchronizing mark, and thread the start mark frame into the picture aperture of the projector. Then turn down the projector until the correct frame for changeover appears at the picture aperture. While turning down, note the number of revolutions of the turntable, so that you can short-cut this process next time.

STANDARD MAINTENANCE

Exchange employees handling prints are expected to be familiar with the standard specifications and to make sure that every print inspected conforms exactly to them. Prompt attention should be given to any report from a theatre that prints received do not conform to the standard.

electrogram

RECTIFIER TUBES.—The theory of operation is that when a current is passed through the bulb filament, electrons are omitted. The gas is ionized by these electrons and acts as the main current carrier between the anode and cathode. Current rectification is due to the fact that on the half-cycle of the a.c., when the anode is positive, the electrons from the filament are "pulled" toward the anode, by the voltage across the bulb. These electrons collide with the molecules of the gas, which are in turn ionized. This allows them to become a conductor from anode to cathode. On the other half of the a.c. cycle, when the anode is negative, the electrons emitted are forced back to the filament. This action prevents the gas from being conductive during this half of the cycle.

ACTION TOWARD HIGHER STANDARDS

SOMETHING TOOK place in New York City recently that was unusually significant with respect to projection standards today. It refers to destructive attitudes that have come into projection affairs not only in New York but elsewhere. And it also suggests a cure.

Upon previous occasions I have spoken of the general excellence of Loew's projection department built up through the past eight years by Lester Isaac, director of projection. Great credit is due Mr. Isaac and his able assistant, M. D. O'Brien. Not so long ago Mr. Isaac called a meeting of all Loew projectionists working in and around New York City, 522 in number. Also present were several officers of Local 306. No one but Mr. Isaac addressed the meeting, however, and for almost two hours he held the undivided attention of his audience.

Mr. Isaac first drew their attention to the fact that he had been with Loew's for almost twenty years, during twelve of which he had served beside projectors, and for eight as director of projection. Incidentally, Isaac has been a member of Local 224, Washington, D. C., for 22 years. Before assuming his present position and removing to New York City, he was an officer of, and very active in, the Washington local.

He explained that he spoke as a representative of Loew's, Inc., laying stress upon his responsibility to the company and upon the responsibility of the company to the public to which it sold amusement. He in very pointed fashion directed the attention of those present to the duty each Loew projectionist owed to the company, and through it to the public. He pointed out the undeniable fact that the really good union man—the man who cared to boast of 100 per cent unionism—owed it to the employer, the public and the union to give the very best possible service. He stressed the fact that he had the full backing and support of Loew's, Inc., in what he was doing and fully expected to meet with no opposition from Local 306.

He advised that it was his intention to reward loyalty as well as ability, but that to be truly loyal one must demonstrate ability in his work, as to both results produced and efficiency.

"The company," he said, "has every right to expect and to demand that."

He then declared that he proposed to institute a gradual tightening of the lines, to the end that the results in visual and sound projection be improved, and waste in their production diminished. He told them flatly that unless some present Loew men made immediate and pronounced improvement they would be dropped from the Loew payrolls.

He spoke emphatically of carelessness, indifference, disloyalty and rather shameful projectional ignorance he had encountered; also of petty jealousies met with in his dealings with some men, warning that all this must cease unless the guilty ones wished to sever their connection with Loew's payroll, assuring them, however, that no one would be dropped until he had had ample opportunity to defend himself by disproving any charges brought. He made it very clear that it was not his intention to do anything that would not be approved by Local 306 and by all fair-minded men.

The impression the talk gave was that Mr. Isaac believed many of the men needed to improve, that there was too much carelessness, lack of interest and pep in their work, that some of the men were failing sadly in their duty to him, to the company and also to Local 306 which had supplied them, and that these latter would have to improve rapidly or suffer the consequences.

Mr. Isaac stressed the fact that Loew's gave the men every possible opportunity to give high-class service, not only by providing good equipment, but also by maintaining it in the best possible condition. He said it was the intention of his department to continue doing this, and gradually to raise the standard of projection quality.

If any man is dropped by Isaac's department, he will have had fair warning and will be entitled to no sympathy, either from the local or anyone else. He will be dropped for the reason that he either could not or would not give satisfactory service, lacking in knowledge or too shiftless to apply the knowledge.

My compliments to Lester Isaac! By taking this forward action he has served his company well and has served unionism in the best possible way. It is high time that men who either cannot or will not do their full duty in projection, be made to do it. Let us all sincerely hope this is action that will start things moving in the same direction elsewhere.

PREVIEWING THE IA CONVENTION

DURING THE FIRST week in June the IATSE & MPMO will hold its 32nd convention in Louisville, Ky. While it is not the desire or the office of this department to dabble in union affairs, it still is proper to offer suggestions when some situation arises which might affect both the men and the employer adversely.

Politics, union and otherwise, as today practiced, have an odor repugnant to all men save those who are self-seeking and hold their own personal advancement as paramount to everything else. We, right now, have the spectacle of union officers drawing relatively huge salaries, reaching to almost $400 per week, in unions in which ordinary members make only enough to live very modestly, and some not able to do even that. This, be it remarked makes one wonder how much of these salaries are used for the purpose of maintaining and building up the local political machine.

Ever since my own entry into a labor union, away back in 1884, I have been a firm believer in unionism. It was born of stark necessity bred by the avarice of employers. Of late, while I have not by any means lost faith in it, I nevertheless have pretty well been forced to the view that decent, well meaning, sincere unions, of which there are many, and decent sincere union men, of whom also there are very many, should wake up to the rather obvious fact that some thorough housecleaning is needed in many directions.

Unions were not formed primarily for the purpose of making union politicians wealthy, or to enable them to wield almost unlimited power over both the men and the employer. The general idea of those who created them, and of that sterling leader, Samuel Gompers, who, I am proud to say, was my personal friend, was to secure just treatment for union men, at the same time recognizing the just rights of the employer. The idea was not just to grab everything in sight, regardless of justice. Unions were not formed to enable union politicians to build up powerful political machines by rewarding friends with favored positions, regardless of ability in their work, or to punish those who dared oppose them by reverse tactics and in other possible ways.

They were formed for the purpose of righting wrong working conditions and securing fair remuneration for services rendered. The original purpose included the idea of seeing to it, so far as was humanly possible, that maximum excellence in service be returned for fair pay and good working conditions, in all of which I most emphatically am for the union, and so is MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES.

What is accomplished at the coming convention will either be good or very bad. Already there is much more than ample evidence that certain union politicians have their eyes glued upon the presidential chair, with their hopes working overtime and their hands busy pulling every string available to them, the string pulling being aided by certain ones who should be and are supposed to be engaged in better things.

The I.A. had one of the best possible men as international president. He did not seek or want the office, accepting it when the organization was in such a mess that no one wanted the job. I believe the acceptance of his resignation to have been a mistake.

Delegates to the coming convention should look for an able man who is in no way allied with union politics, either locally or nationally. Delegates should be warned against the genial, back-slapping convention politician and his blandishments. Such men merely seek votes.

Send men to the convention with definite instructions to back the election of some man not seeking office, rather than of some politician who is. The man, however, should combine honesty and ability with a lively affection for fair dealing and the capacity to see both sides of a question.

TROUBLE CHARTS AS SERVICE AID

H. M. WILCOX, vice president of Erpi, has just shown me a sample of a service chart worked out by Erpi's engineering department that impresses me as very ingenious. By taking advantage of accumulated knowledge obtained from the operation of Western Electric sound systems, Erpi has found it practical to prepare in tabulated form a series of Trouble Charts which include the most common troubles, together with means of identifying them.

These charts are intended to facilitate the location and remedy of emergency troubles. The Trouble Classification Table is used as a guide to the questions to be asked of the party reporting an emergency. By making use of the four digit system shown, the engineer receiving the call is able to determine the nature and probable location of the trouble and to prescribe either a temporary or permanent remedy. The manner in which these charts are used is as follows:

1. A projectionist reports by telephone to the engineer that the amplifier has failed and that the following conditions exist: (a) that there is no sound, (b) that the filaments of V-1 and V-2 vacuum tubes are out, (c) that the filaments of V-3 and V-4 vacuum tubes are out, and (d) that the plate current is zero.

2. By referring to the Trouble Classification Chart, you will note that the information will form the four digit trouble classification figure 1111.

3. Under the heading "Trouble Chart," you will find trouble classification 1111, and in the adjacent column headed "Ap-

INSTRUCTIONS: Refer to the "Classification Table" below and form a four digit number, describing the trouble, to serve as an index to the "Trouble Chart" below. Note that the first digit describes sound operation, the second indicates whether V-1 and V-2 are lighted, the third indicates whether V-3 and V-4 are lighted and the fourth indicates the plate current as read on the plate milliammeter.

TROUBLE CLASSIFICATION TABLE

FIRST DIGIT (Sound Operation)	SECOND DIGIT (V-1 and V-2 Filaments)	THIRD DIGIT (V-3 and V-4 Filaments)	FOURTH DIGIT (Plate Current)
1 - No Sound 2 - Low Volume 3 - Normal Volume 4 - High Volume 5 - Distortion	1 - Both Out 2 - One Out 3 - Both Lighted	1 - Both Out 2 - One Out 3 - Both Lighted	1 - Zero 2 - 0 - 175 mils. 3 - 175 - 275 mils. 4 - Over 275 mils.

NOTE: The letter "P" following the classification number indicates that the plates of one or more tubes overheat.

Example:- The trouble classification number, 3312, represents a condition of abnormal operation wherein the sound is normal (3), V-1 and V-2 filaments are both lighted (3), V-3 and V-4 filaments are both out (1), and the plate milliammeter reads less than 175 milliamperes (2).

TROUBLE CHART

NOTE:- Before proceeding with the following tests, it is assumed that the power supply including "C" batteries and the calibration of all meters have been checked, tubes changed, contacts cleaned and the trouble isolated to the Amplifier.

"P.C.R." UNDER "REMARKS AND PRECAUTIONS" MEANS "PERFECT CONDITION READING".

paratus or Associated Wiring Causing Trouble," two circuits are mentioned which are likely to be responsible for the condition reported.

4. Under the column headed "Tests," you will note that two tests are suggested as a means of determining which of the two circuits, referred to above, is responsible for the trouble condition.

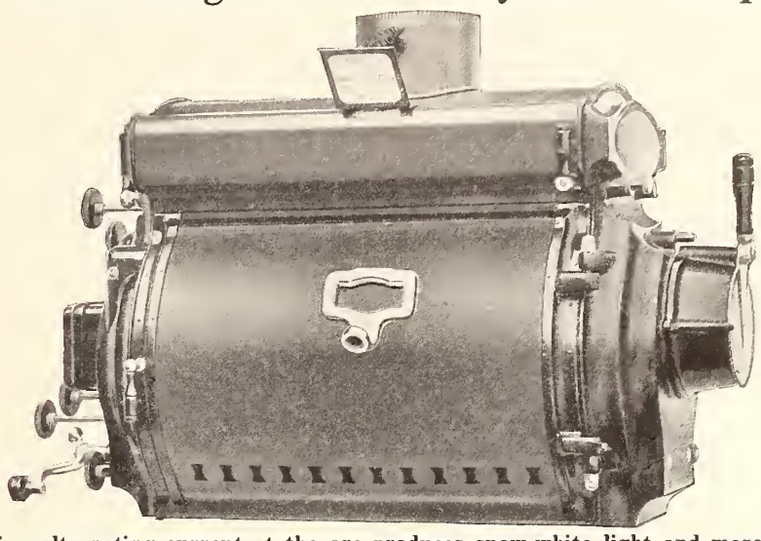
5. With the aid of a voltammeter and a d.c. supply, the engineer finds in making a continuity test that the circuit between the (neg) 10-volt supply and the negative side of the filament terminals of V-1, V-2, V-3, and V-4 is open. Having detected the cause of the failure of the tubes to heat, he finds that this circuit contains a 15-ampere D & W fuse which he replaces and restores the circuit to normal. This same open-circuited condition could have resulted from an opening in the wiring between the fuse and load side of the circuit. This could be determined by testing between the load side of the fuse and the vacuum tube negative filaments.

As can be seen from the above, the ability of the engineer to diagnose emergency troubles reported by telephone is largely dependent upon the completeness of the information transmitted by the projectionist. Consequently, a saving of time will result if the projectionist, before calling to report a trouble, makes as complete an inspection of the equipment as conditions permit in order that he may be in a position to fully describe the trouble symptoms.

ELIMINATION OF A-BATTERIES

FROM Reynold J. Castelli of Ladd, Ill., comes this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: We are using d.c. 1-volt, 1½ exciter lamps operated from A-batteries. Would like to make a change so that I would not have to use them. Would it be possible to use a "valley" charger I have previously used for battery charging and filter it down with 2-2000 mfd. condensers across the output, then connect it to the d.c. exciter lamps we are now using? Would this set up a hum in the speaker? Have only one exciter lamp on at a time, and I think the charger can put out 10 volts, 7.5 amperes after it is filtered.



"Would you advise trying this, or should I use a step-down transformer taking current from the 110-volt, 60 cycle supply and feed it to the exciter lamps? If so, how may I prevent the a.c. setting up a hum in the speaker?"

This is a matter in which it would be unsafe to give any advice, except that while the thing might possibly be done, still even so it would be very risky. Exciter lamps must have exactly even current reception, and while the a.c. flutter might be completely filtered out, still it would be a job.

ficiently unless all its various elements, from light source to the front end of the projection lens, be in perfect alignment. The center of the light source, condenser, aperture and both projection lens combinations, must be exactly on the optical axis of the system to insure maximum results.

The Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers developed an excellent tool for this purpose, but up to date it has not been manufactured, hence is not yet available. Now, here is an opportunity to make the S.M.P.E. sit right up and take notice. Of the mass of our readers, if just a mere one thousand will write the society at Pennsylvania Hotel, New York City, asking why the projector optical train alignment tool planned by the Projection Practice Committee is not made available, it will not only get the thing done, but will let them see and understand that projectionists are not asleep at the switch. You do not have to say you or your manager will purchase one. Just inquire why you cannot have the opportunity to do so if you wish to.

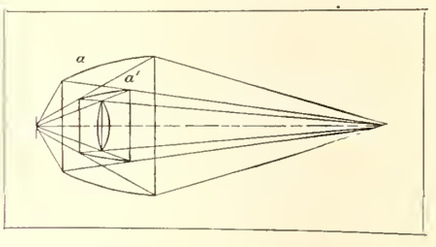
The equipment, as planned, consists in a steel rod about a half-inch in diameter by 36 inches long, and another of shorter length, together with a metal disc to fit your condenser mount your projection lens barrel, back and front, and an aperture plug. Each has an opening to receive the rod in its center.

To use, you remove the condenser and both projection lens combinations, mounting the metal discs in their stead. Then, after making sure the carbon contact is clean and in good shape, you install the long rod just as you would a positive carbon, clamping it in place, with its front end sticking through the condenser disc opening and out in front of the lamphouse cone. You then so adjust the lamp that the rod is central in the disc opening.

Next you shove the short rod through the holes in the projection lens disc and on through the aperture. It will fit the lens disc holes and must be made to center exactly in the aperture opening, whereupon it is only necessary to so adjust the lamphouse that the ends of the two rods are in alignment, and their length likewise, which latter may be tested with a steel straightedge. You will thus know the whole system is in perfect alignment.

The cost of the tool should be nothing any reasonable manager could kick about, especially when it is explained that unless the optical systems be in exact alignment there is constant waste of light, which means either lowered screen illumination or excessive current bills.

Now, let's put this thing through. Do your duty; grab a sheet of paper, a pencil, an envelope and a stamp. If you don't I'll be forever ashamed of you. I want the society to get at least one thousand letters.



This device is needed with reflector type lamps too, although the details of its use are somewhat different. In that case it is a matter of centering the aperture and rear projection lens end with the light source and front projection lens end. Not infrequently it will be found one or more of the elements are out of line.

A NEW BRITISH OPTICAL SYSTEM

FROM THE OFFICIAL Journal of the Guild of British Kinema Projectionists in London, England, we learn that L. J. Steel and H. Martin, collaborating with the technical staffs of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of London, and the Sperry Gyroscope Company, Ltd., also of London, have developed a new system of light collection to be known as the "Stelmar Optical System." Borrowing illustrations and data from the Journal, I propose to describe the invention as well as I can, believing it to be of sufficient interest to justify such action, although I have certain doubts about the system, partly because of the apparently heavy angle at which the light from outer zones of the reflector must be sent forward to the aperture. This light certainly should only be receivable by a wide diameter projection lens at very short working distance.

The assembly as a whole consists in a combination of a glass lens and an inner and an outer reflector, the two latter being of course designed to collect the light falling outside the condenser, all of which is now wasted in our condenser systems, though the waste in the reflector type light source is not nearly so great, being in fact largely that lost through interference by the negative carbon and the lamp itself. The Journal sets forth other objections to present methods of light collection which, however, do not appeal to me as having any considerable value.

Accompanying this we have a diagrammatic view of the new system, in which concentric outer and inner ellipsoidal reflectors are so arranged that their major axis and their foci are coincident—that is to say meet at the point. I quote from the Journal:

"The outer and larger ellipsoidal reflector a is so provided at its rear end as to allow the insertion of the light source, and is cut off at its front end so that the maximum projection angle at the conjugate focus of the beam of light converging from the outer reflector a does not impinge on the rear of the second or inner concentric ellipsoidal reflector a, which is arranged to deal with that part of the frontal zone of light which does not reach the outer reflector."

All of which seems to have been written by some highbrow engineer and is about as clear as nice thick mud. So far as I can determine from the drawing, it was found impossible to collect and reflect all the light not collected by the lens with the outer reflector. There would be the space between the two lines from light source to edges of the lens and outer reflector that would be lost, so the inner reflector was installed to prevent this. It is said the unit as a whole is not susceptible to damage from heat, but as to that, since no data as to light source power is given, we can form no intelligent opinion.

EFFECT OF LIGHT ON FILM

AN ILLINOIS MAN who asks that his name not be used, writes, "On page 20, February 10 issue of BETTER THEATRES, in answering question No. 3 in "Case of Buckled Film or Worn Parts," which reads, "Does light intensity affect the clear cutting (definition) of screen image," you say it does not, with which conclusion I wish to take issue.

"Let us suppose we do not have a rear shutter and in consequence there is sufficient heat to warp the film just a little when a darkly printed scene passes through, for the reason such a scene would absorb more heat than would a lighter one as, for example, a snow scene.

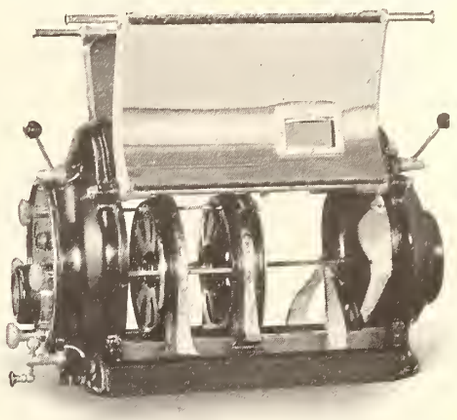
"We focus on the light scene, and when the dark one comes along—well, it is just too bad, for it seems very possible that sufficient heat may be absorbed to buckle the film slightly, and even so little as .001 of an inch of that will affect definition.

"We who are engaged in practical projection work know of that condition. The warping is or may be too slight to be visible when the film is examined. Also, it may and probably will disappear entirely when the film has cooled down. The thing happens, though, and I believe you will be glad to be corrected in your answer to the above named question.

"And now may I ask why so much of the photography is so very poor of late? The films of one producer in particular are slightly out of focus almost entirely through their productions. One other producer has fair definition occasionally, but of late their stuff has been distinctly bad. I own a camera, have some little knowledge of photography and can see no legitimate excuse for some of the terrible stuff we are asked to place before audiences.

"That is all the kick I have just now, but in closing permit me to compliment yourself, the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES for your good work and the aid it gives to us all."

The HERALD, BETTER THEATRES and my 'umble self appreciate the kindly expression of good will. We hope to continue to deserve approbation.



I believe our good friend is correct. I have, however, submitted the matter to Eastman engineers. The thing seemed reasonable and I am always very glad to have any error I may make checked up by projectionists. It would be absurd to think I can never make any. In answering the question, let me say in justice to myself, that I did not get the idea that he who asked it had film buckling in mind. I thought he meant, did the amount of light (disregarding heat) affect definition? That is not an excuse, merely an explanation. Here is what the Eastman engineers have to say about the matter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: We have gone over quite thoroughly the matter mentioned in your letter of February 21, and we do not believe that the intensity of the light at the time of projection has any effect on the sharpness of focus of the image on the screen. We know, however, that in some cases with high intensity arcs and without rear type shutters, film which has been improperly dried will tend to show embossing or warping due to the heat absorbed by the silver image. The effect will naturally be greatest on those portions of the film having the greatest density of silver deposit. This embossing is somewhat cumulative so that after a large number of runs with high intensity arcs, the embossing may warp the film enough in the dark scenes so that the focus must be changed for them."

NOTES ON THE SMPE CONVENTION

I WILL ATTEMPT no report of the spring SMPE meeting in Atlantic City, that having already been attended to by others in news publications. However, a few brief notes may be in order here.

All programmes were pulled off approximately on schedule, which feat seemed impossible of accomplishment when we first examined the extensive "menu" of papers. My compliments to President Goldsmith. He is master in the art of presiding at meetings.

Bill Kunzmann was his usual self. Here, there, yonder—in fact, everywhere. How the National Carbon Company representative gets away with such an amazing amount of hard work, at the same time being hail-fellow-well-met, is something no one seems quite able to figure out.

The ladies were there in numbers, and as charming as ever. I've lost my heart at least six separate times at every SMPE convention. Dad-bing conventions anyhow! And were they well entertained? Umph! With dozens of young engineers eager to engineer entertainment for them, I'll say they were!

There was one paper we all agreed was a wonder. Its title, "A Simple Theory of Three-Element Vacuum Tubes." That was the trouble! It was so simple! Lasted one hour and twenty-three minutes. There were, I think, not to exceed 50 formulae screened during its reading, each one filled with X, Y, Z's galore, sub this, sub that, and sub the other, all topped off by a generous supply of esoteric hieroglyphics. (I guess that's describing it, eh?)

At the banquet one of the speakers pulled a fast one. Speaking of the chaotic conditions of today, and the governmental "experiments" in progress, said he, "I'm reminded of the voyage Christopher Columbus made some while back. You know, when Chris started out, he didn't know where he was going. When he got here he didn't know where he was! And when he got back he didn't know where the hell he'd been!" So if you feel ignorant sometimes, just think of Chris—and he became famous!

Incidentally, Atlantic City's projectionists' union, Local 310, showed keen interest in the convention and its affairs and was of great help.

Much credit is due Herb Griffin, general sales manager of the International Projector Corporation; the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Erpi, RCA Victor and Local 310 for achieving production of what were, under the conditions, most excellent screen images and sound.

William Reed, dean of projection, and his charming daughter, Annabelle, were among those present. Brother Reed was guest of the society at its banquet and also was personally presented to the engineers at a special meeting to which all Atlantic City theatre folk were invited. Brother Reed was introduced by this writer, and modestly blushed when President Goldsmith said, "We as a Society feel deeply honored at having with us, in person, Projectionist William Reed, one of the few remaining men intimately connected with the industry at the very beginning of its theatrical career. May you, Mr. Reed, who are the dean of projection in point of continuous service therein, live long and happily and may you prosper unto the end."

Local 310 held a special meeting at midnight Tuesday, with one hundred per cent attendance. The main object of the meeting was to enable the local men to meet and become acquainted with the various projection people present at the convention. I showed slides of early projectors and individuals prominent in projection affairs of other days, and talks were made by Thad Barrows, President of Boston local; Wally Byrne, president of the American Projection Society; M. D. O'Brien, assistant director of Projection for Loew's; P. A. McGuire, International Projector Corporation; George Edwards, past-president of the American Projection Society; Harry Rubin, chairman of the Projection Practice Committee, SMPE; and by a representative of Local 337, Utica, N. Y., whose name I unfortunately am unable at the moment to recall. F. H. Richardson, of whom you may have heard, introduced the speakers. Just before the close, Glenn Lafferty, president of Local 310, made a short address, thanking us all for having kept them up pretty nearly all night.

HE MUSTA HAD A BIT O' TROUBLE!

FROM NO MATTER where comes the following wail from one whom I personally know to be an old-timer in projection:

"Had my first shut-down in sound tonight. Lasted three minutes, into which was crowded enough language to last the Sphinx for nine thousand five hundred and ten, or maybe eleven, years.

"In the deluxe theatre wherein I toil,

I am blessed with hand-fed arcs, no reel-end alarms, Powers projectors of ancient vintage, and fillum—Oh, what fillum!—plus sound coaxed from equipment that has somehow escaped the attention of both museums and antique dealers. Ah, what museum pieces!

"Along about 7 o'clock, the coop (note the term) was flooded with odors, lovely odors (God forgive me for lying!) of real hot motors, generators, oil, grease and what have you. Next came thumps, loud and many. Oil on the odoriferous bearings failed to sooth. The meters registered okay. The sound wailed along. The equipment emitted more odors well spiced with rubber. Sniffing, feeling and listening brought no results. The whirring mechanisms yanked the fillum in at the top and emitted it at the bottom as per usual. The intermittents danced the picture as with a cocktail shaker in the hands of a healthy, thirsty hemale. Twelve hundred eye muscles worked in unison as the customers vainly tried to follow the shadows across the screen, and with straining ears attempted to decipher the wails and squawks, intermingled with ground noise and speech.

"Finally the perfume from those clanking machines changed to that well known effluvium associated with torrid insulation, and just then with pops like too ambitious home brew, six pesky fuses let go, one after the other. Yes, sir! Six of 'em went to fuse heaven, whereupon the actors and actoroons chewed their cud in silence for the loudspeaker went just plain dumb.

"Great cheers rose from the customers as nimble fingers yanked switches and manipulated fuses, and as we cussed generators and useless gaping managers. Plunk! Bang! Crash! Whistle! Eeeeeeooowwww! And the idle equipment turned again. The hero yodeled and told the he-ro-ine how devastatingly he loved her. The odors drifted away. And the show went on.

Presently the service engineer will call, do his stuff and depart. The boss will get a bill. The supply dealer will sell some fuses. But meanwhile the projectionist reaps cuss language and thoughts from the customers while trying without success to keep the hero from being divorced from his voice.

POST LABOR PROVISIONS!

NATIONAL RECOVERY Administrator Johnson has issued orders requiring all employers of labor to post conspicuously the labor provisions of codes of fair competition established under the National Industrial Recovery Act, to the end that all employes may readily ascertain the hours, wages and all other conditions which the codes make obligatory upon employers.

The administrator laid emphasis upon the fact that a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment for not more than six months, is prescribed by the law for failure to observe such regulations.

This is published here as a protection to both projectionist and his employer. The employe has a right to have the regulation observed, and the employer who does not comply is inviting trouble.

WHEN SHOULD GEARS BE RENEWED?

FROM a Southern City comes the appeal, "Dear Pop: Like others, I turn to you when in trouble. I am a projectionist in a theatre cursed with a man who is, so far as projection be concerned, a mis-manager of the very worst type. There are two power projectors that I think Noah must have had in the ark, or so I would think had there been any projectors in that day.

"They are in very bad condition. I have tried to get them overhauled and some new gears put in, but can't seem to convince him they are needed, as there still are what passes for teeth on nearly all of them. This left-handed genius seems to think you are all right, though I don't know any one else he will admit that much about. Will you, or can you, tell me some rule that can be applied in proof that worn-out projector gears should be renewed? I don't know of any except just plain common sense."

This good brother seems to have on a very fine grouch, which, from what he says, I guess was honestly acquired. Yes, my friend, in compiling the new Bluebook I had the International Projector Corporation and the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company work out exactly that kind of a rule for me.

If while holding the rotating shutter stationary, you can rotate the cam shaft flywheel in excess of five-sixteenths of an inch, measured at its rim, it is positive proof that the mechanism is in need of an overhauling and probably of new gears. I say overhauling for the reason that the lost motion may not be, and probably is not, all in the gearing. It may be partly due to worn bearings, etc.

Projectionists may take it as a rule that if the flywheel on the intermittent cam shaft can be rotated in excess of five-sixteenths of an inch while holding the rotating shutter stationary, that mechanism should be overhauled. Also when buying new projectors, such lost motion in excess of three-sixteenths of an inch at the flywheel rim while holding the shutter still, should cause rejection of the mechanism. The same holds true when buying reconditioned projector mechanisms.

SOUND ACCESSORIES

● The following descriptions of sound apparatus conclude the review of the current sound equipment market begun in the April 7th issue.

Audio Research, Inc.

THIS MANUFACTURER has developed a microphone for all-round theatre use under the model designation of Type 22-A. It is a dynamic microphone with a diameter of 3⅜ inches, a depth of 2 inches exclusive of terminals, and a weight of 2½ pounds. The finish is statuary bronze.

The diaphragm is made of a special alloy selected for good frequency response. The voice coil has an impedance of 30 ohms and an output level of minus-65 decibels below zero level of 6 milliwatts for normal speech at 3 feet. The frequency response is stated as uniform from 50 to 9,000 cycles.

Audio Research dynamic microphone

The unit is mounted on trunnions on its diameter, allowing use of a simple stirrup as a hanging bail, or as an upright carrier in a stand, and it can readily be tiled up or down.

Herman A. DeVry, Inc.

NOW AVAILABLE from this manufacturer is a portable 35-millimeter sound unit, and in development is a unit system for both incandescent and arc lighting designed for the larger-sized auditoriums.

In the portable outfit, the projector mechanism is the DeVry Type E, with straight-feed film path. The light source is a 1,000-watt biplane filament incandescent lamp. The soundhead is housed with the projector, and a second case carries the amplifier and speaker.

The soundhead drum is removable for cleaning. There are no pressure plates, tension shoes or gears. Vibration is absorbed by a Robertson filter wheel. Drive is by chain and sprocket, while the motor is governor-controlled. The photocell is of DeVry make. The amplifier output is rated at 14 watts.

DeVry portable sound unit

The unit in development has a chain drive, double exciter lamps, barrel-type shutter and is designed for permanent installation, though light enough for transport.

Additional product of this manufacturer includes soundheads for Powers, Simplex and other projectors, both portable and for permanent installation; amplifiers, public address systems, microphones, photocells, tubes and lamps.

Continental Electric Company

OVER 21 different types and sizes of photocells are offered by this manufacturer under the name Cetron. They are caesium-argon type. Ninety volts is the recommended operating voltage, but higher voltages may be used if desired. The average ionization point of these cells is between 125-135 volts. Due to the small amount of gas contained in these cells, temporary ionization is declared to result in no damage. The current output will average about 100 microamperes per lumen at 90 volts.

G-M Laboratories, Inc.

VISITRON Type A photoelectric cells are made in seven sizes ranging from five-eighths of an inch to 2¼ inches in diameter. This variety of sizes provides a cell for every make of projector. The cells are of the caesiated cathode type having peak response in the region from 7,000 to 7,500 Angstrom units.

A high specific surface sensitivity permits the use of low gas pressure in the cell, which results in a high ionization point. Manufacturing specifications call for a minimum sensitivity of 70 microamperes per lumen at 90 volts. These characteristics mean high output, and also mean minimum attenuation at the higher audible frequencies.

Because of the high specific surface sensitivity of Visitron cells, high output is obtained without recourse to excessive gas amplification. As a consequence ionic bombardment of the cathode is minimized and the life of the cell is greatly increased. Life of from one to four years can normally be expected.

Goodall Electric Mfg. Company

THREE DIFFERENT models of horns designed for three general types of theatres, are marketed by this manufacturer.

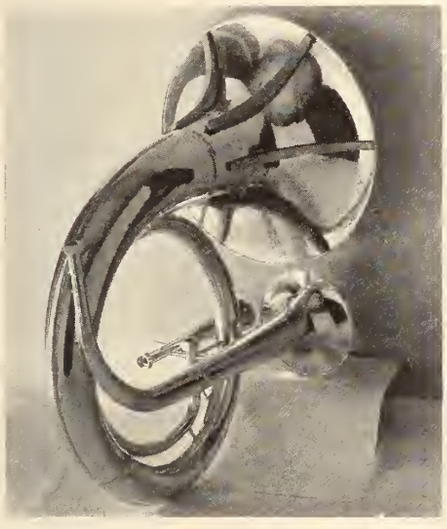
The model A horn has a spreading angle of 55°. The lower front lip of the horn is designed at a greater angle than the upper lip. This model is built for long narrow theatres with low ceilings and will give equal distribution of sound in theatres 25 feet wide and 100 feet long.

The model B horn is built on an angle of 65° and is designed for theatres approximately 40 feet wide. The model C horn is built on an angle of 78° and is designed for theatres up to 75 feet in width. All of these models are designed to operate in conjunction with either 10- or 12-inch dynamic cones.

Hygrade Sylvania Corporation

A COMPLETE LINE of tubes used in sound reproduction is offered by this manufacturer. Represenative product in the line are described as follows:

Type 205-D.—Of graphite anode construction. The grid runs cool due to the high thermal emissivity of the graphite, thus reducing the possibility of gas in the tube from this element. Due to the cobalt nickel composition, the filament in this tube has a great emission area, and a great tensile strength when hot, thus preventing sagging with resultant changes in inter-electrode capacities. The 205-D has a very low microphonic response.



Type 242-A.—A theatre amplifier tube which employs the graphite anode construction, which allows for great heat dissipation. The graphite anode makes for constant plate current, and due to high radiating properties of graphite, no physical changes in anode dimensions can take place. By using an exceptionally high-breakdown glass, arcing in the base of these 242-A's is almost impossible. Parasitic oscillation suppressors are mounted in the grid leads, allowing these tubes to be operated in parallel.

Phototubes.—The Sylvania phototubes for theatre sound use are the 814-A, 803-A and 868. These tubes are free from leakage noises and all have excellent frequency response characteristics. They are non-microphonic. The photo-sensitive surface is uniform and the tubes are carefully evacuated, thus ridding them of detrimental gases which would cause distortion in modern theatre sound equipment.

Martin Band Instrument Company

BRASS SPEAKER-HORN ensembles are offered by this manufacturer for theatre use. They are made of highly tem-

Martin speaker system

pered brass and supra-metal and are combined in two-, three- and five-speaker systems, as may be required to cover the desired frequency range.

The low-frequency unit covers from 40 to 800 cycles; the intermediate, from 800 to 2,500; the high, from 2,500 to 14,000.

Cutting out of frequencies is by means of band-pass filters, the network of which may be connected to any speaker line of 200- or 500-ohm impedance.

Racon Electric Company

A VARIETY of horn units are manufactured by this company, the most recent development being an electro-dynamic speaker with horn, designed to cover a frequency range of from 3,000 to 10,000 cycles. This model has a field rating of 6 or 110 volts, as may be specified. The voice coil impedance is 110 ohms. Height of unit is 6¾ inches, while the horn bell is 3 inches. Weight is 3 pounds.

Western Electric

EQUIPMENT FOR general public address operation and stage presentations using "radio technique," is produced by this manufacturer for theatres. This may be installed as a separate system, or incorporated with existing Western Electric sound reproduction apparatus. Additional equipment consists in microphones (usually located in the stage footlight gutter), loudspeakers, and a control panel for individual control of each microphone.

This equipment has been augmented by a special "crooning" attachment consisting in microphone and speakers. Amplification is through the amplifiers of the picture reproduction system.

DRILLED CARBONS

● Hi-low and high projection carbons with drilled ends, are now being offered by the Noris Carbon Company of New York. Carbons of this type will henceforth be available for all carbon-saving devices.

Incidentally, it should be pointed out that the name of the Noris Carbon Company was omitted from the list of manufacturers of carbons in the Equipment Index, published in the April 7th issue. The company address is 160 Fifth Avenue, New York.

DEALER CONVENTION

● With 28 active members, and 31 offices throughout the country, the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association has completed plans for its convention in Chicago, to be held May 26, 27 and 28 at the Edgewater Beach Hotel. Members of the association already signed up to participate in the convention and to exhibit are as follows:

Stebbins Theatre Equipment Company, Kansas City; Amusement Supply Company, Detroit; Amusement Supply Company, New York; American Theatre Supply Company, Toledo; Brock Photoplay Supply Company, Los Angeles; Capitol Theatre Supply Company, Boston; Capitol Motion Picture Supply, New York; Continental Theatre Accessories, New York; Crown Motion Picture Supplies Corporation, New York; Des Moines Theatre Supply Company, Des Moines; J. F. Dusman Motion Picture Supplies, Baltimore; Exhibitors Supply Company, St. Louis; Joe Goldberg, Inc., Chicago; Graham Brothers Theatre Equipment, Denver; Guercio & Barthel Theatre Equipment, Chicago; Independent Theatre Supply Company, New York; McArthur Theatre Equipment Company, Detroit; Oliver Moving Picture Supply Company, Cleveland; Walter G. Preddey Theatre Supply, San Francisco; Quality Theatre Supply Company, Omaha; Queen Feature Service, Inc., Birmingham; Clem Rizzo Theatre Supplies, Philadelphia; B. F. Shearer Company, Seattle; The Ray Smith Company, Milwaukee; Superior Motion Picture Supply Company, Pittsburgh; United Film & Projector Corporation, Buffalo; Western Theatrical Equipment Company, San Francisco; J. Slipper & Company, Los Angeles.

HEARING ATTACHMENTS

● Further developments have been brought out in the equipment for the hard-of-hearing manufactured by the Sonotone Corporation of New York City, to adapt this bone-conduction instrument to motion picture theatre use. It is to be pointed out, however, that Sonotone equipment is available in both bone- and air-conduction models.

In either case, the receiver may be plugged into individual seats which have been properly wired in connection with suitable amplification equipment. Both types have individual volume controls, and may be applied by means of headband or "lorgnette" handle.

Jack boxes are connected in multiple in 25 unit branches, terminating on the output transformer of the amplifier. The amplifier itself consists in a push-pull power stage, usually 45's, connected across the output of its main amplifier in the projection room and arranged through an attenuator.

Around 25 milliwatts of power are required per outlet. The impedance of each receiver, together with the volume control, is approximately 25 ohms at 60 cycles.

GRAPHITE GUN

● Application of dry, powdered graphite to lamphouse lubrication is possible by means of a gun brought out by the Joseph Dixon Crucible Company of Jersey City. This company manufactures a flake-powdered graphite that is declared to be free from any oil, or grease or foreign matter that can burn or carbonize. Controlled air pressure is employed as the carrier in the place of oil and grease vehicles.

PAPER ON SEATING

● Among papers prepared for the spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was that by P. F. Masucci, on "Theatre Seats Designed for Correct Sight and Acoustics." The paper was based on chair design represented in the product of the International Seating Company of New York. Its more generally significant portions follow:

"First, let us consider the fact that every seat in a theatre, irrespective of its price and position, must command an uninterrupted view of the screen. The old type seating of straight layouts is gradually being replaced with radius or curved layouts. This improved visibility to the screen, as each chair is pointed or faced directly toward the screen.

"In theatres now built where the elevations of the floor are set, there is but one way to insure almost perfect sight lines. That is by staggering sizes in alternating rows in the center sections of the theatre, instead of installing chairs of all the same size in the center section. For example, if fourteen 20-inch chairs are placed in one row, and six 21-inch chairs are placed together with seven 22-inch chairs immediately in front, the point of visibility would not be directly behind the head of the person in front, but through the space between heads, side section can also be treated in the same manner, but due to the sharper radii, the lines become longer and larger sized chairs can be installed.

"In new theatres, the grades or elevations of the floor are determined by the architect, who may be limited to height and depth of incline. Nevertheless, the same principle of staggering sizes could be ad-

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE HAVE a theatre front to decorate on the outside. There are six outside doors with immovable transom windows over each. The transoms are about 3 feet square. There is also a canopy, which is about 32 feet long and 8 feet wide.

We would like to have some suggestions about painting that could make the front very attractive. Is gold trimming effective? Advise what you think would be appropriate and how to obtain the desired effects so that we can advise our decorator. —H. T.

The Answer:

GOLD TRIMMINGS, while at one time quite effective, have been overdone in theatre decorating in the last decade. Whenever one saw gold it was sure to be a theatre—gold for doors, gold for walls, ceilings, drapes, etc. We are now living in an era when colors, vivid colors, are used. Do not be afraid to use colors, lots of them, but be sure that they harmonize. Use blue, red, green, orange, peach—in fact any color. Be sure to apply brilliant finish, such as Duco or lacquer.

To break the monotony, use different shades for glass stops or panel moulds. Unless you depend on the transoms over the doors for light in the lobby, I advise you to fill them in with panels, as generally the house manager covers them up on the inside with cutouts or attraction boards, and paneling them may add to the attractiveness of the exterior.

Not knowing the design of the marquee, I suggest you make the field in a light tone, with the changeable letters quite dark and the borders and ornamentations in varied shades.

The Question:

NOTING YOUR advertisement, I am writing in the interest of a prospective client. The client contemplates either remodeling an existing theatre building which he is renting (provided however, that he can buy the present building at an attractive price), or, if this is impossible, to build a new building outright on a nearby lot. In either case the building would be 40x120 feet. At present the theatre is arranged with screen between front entrances, booth in extreme rear. Entire building is fireproof construction. Location, residential section.

We would greatly appreciate an expression from you and any suggestions which you may feel disposed to make, which will aid in making the new building thoroughly modern and practical in every way possible. The client expresses an interest in "stadium" seating. If this would be a particular advantage please note.—M. D. W.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Answer:

MY ADVICE to you is to urge your prospective client strongly against the purchase of the existing theatre building, no matter how attractive the price may be, as according to your description the plan is absolutely faulty, and I think it would be too expensive to turn the plan around.

There is nothing more destructive to the enjoyment of a motion picture than to have moving objects detract the vision from the screen, leaving alone the flashes of interfering light every time a person enters through the doors. By all means advise him to build a new theatre building.

The best seating arrangement for an auditorium 40 feet wide is to plan for a center bank of eleven seats across, with an aisle on each side and two wall banks of four seats each, giving nineteen seats across the width of the auditorium.

I cannot think of any particular advantage of incorporating the stadium type of seating for such a small house, as the small percentage of seats gained does not justify the extra expenditure.

The Question:

WE HAVE a theatre seating 365 and are wondering if we could arrange our seats more effectively than they are now. Our auditorium is 23 feet wide and 74 feet from the entrance to the first row of seats, including the foyer. At present 6 feet of this length is used as a foyer, and then we have only a center aisle of 40 inches, with a bank of seven seats on one side, and a bank of six seats on the other side. Do you think this is the best arrangement, or would it be better to have an aisle on each side and not have a center aisle?

Please let me know how much space we should have for the foyer, and also the aisle. Our rows are now spaced at 28 inches. Our chairs are 18 inches. We would be willing to sacrifice 30 chairs to better our arrangement. We are regular subscribers and would appreciate any information at your earliest convenience.—L. R. B.

The Answer:

I AM CONVINCED that your present seating layout can be greatly improved. While an 18-inch seat is rather narrow for comfort and the spacing of the rows 28 inches from back to back is 2 inches less than the recommended minimum, I will figure the new arrangement on the same basis. I never advise the use of a center aisle if it possibly can be prevented, so plan for two wall aisles 36 inches wide, with 11 seats between.

According to your description and dimensions, I figure that at the present time you have 29 rows of seats, so under the new plan you will have 319 seats, or a loss of 46 seats. A 6-foot wide foyer is wide enough to accommodate two 3-foot wall aisles.

The Question:

UNDER SEPARATE cover I am sending you a blueprint and also two photographs of my theatre building. I would like to have you design a marquee for the front of this building that would extend out over the platform and be just as wide as the platform. I would like to have it designed to be built out of light sheet iron, with provision for interchangeable letters on the sides, and a space for the name of the theatre on the front of the marquee. Some border lights that can be operated from a commutator arrangement so as to get the flashing light effect. It would be satisfactory with me if the glass in the arch above the doors was completely removed and that opening sealed up. Provisions could also be made whereby it would be possible to glass in the platform under the marquee.

You will notice from examining the blueprint and the photographs that there are about three errors in the blueprint. First, there are no layers of cut stone between the top of the fancy arch stones and the bottom of the name stone, also the glasses on the sides of the double doors are a little longer than the blueprint specifies, and the fire escapes have two horizontal pipes for a guard rail rather than a number of vertical rods, as the blueprint shows.

The rubble stone work on the sides and back of the building are being stuccoed at the present time (since the pictures were taken) and the front of the building will be pointed up between the cut stone with black mortar.

I would appreciate it very much if you would design a nice marquee for this theatre building, also specify some type of new glass paneled doors for the front. I would like to get plans on a neat portable box office that could be built here.—C. E. L.

The Answer:

VERY SORRY, but this department cannot supply you with a design for a marquee as requested, but will gladly give you a description, which will enable you, in consultation with a marquee builder, to obtain a satisfactory result.

I suggest that it be so designed as to make one unit with the railing for the steps. By using gaspipe columns with some wrought iron scrolls for brackets, the matter of supporting the marquee by chains or hangers from the front of the building will be eliminated, and at the same time make it possible to enclose the platform with glass as suggested in your letter. A standard steel factory sash can be used for frame. I advise the use of copper instead of light sheet metal for the outside covering of the marquee.

The transom over the doors can be easily closed up as it will not be noticeable after the marquee is in place on account of its projection. Use two rows of 10-inch or 12-inch changeable channel letters on the sides. The name of the theatre in front and the border lights should also be in channels, and you can use either bulbs or neon tubes for light effects. The matter of flashing should be easily arranged.

In place of using an ornamental metal ceiling for the soffit of the marquee, a nice effect can be obtained by using a steel frame with opaque glass panels with concealed lights above. The panels should be about 3 feet square.

The Question:

ON PAGE 53 of your April 7 issue you have a notice offering full advice on building or remodeling theatres. We have a problem which I hope you can help us with. We are buying a railroad Y.M.C.A. building that has been discontinued and dark for some time. It is a three-story brick structure 30 feet wide and 90 feet long. Inside the first floor is on the ground level, 8 feet to the second floor. Entrance is by way of outside brick and stone steps to the second floor. Distance is 12 feet from second to third floor, and 14 feet from third floor to ceiling.

We want to remodel into a medium-priced sound picture show with stage—heating and cooling systems under the stage, small lobby and foyer, ladies' and gents' toilets, ticket office, projection booth, one combination work room and office, and possibly a balcony, as we want between 500 and 600 seats and presume we will need a balcony to get that many seats in. —R. W. C.

The Answer:

THE BUILDING which you are intending to purchase and remodel into a motion picture theatre, being 30 feet wide and 90 feet long, is entirely too small for a seating capacity between 500 and 600 seats. The maximum amount of seats you can obtain across the width of the auditorium will be fourteen. For lobby, foyer, stage, etc., you will need at least 40 feet, leaving 50 feet for seats, or 20 rows, so the maximum seating capacity you will be able to obtain on the main floor will be 280 seats, and I doubt if the balcony can accommodate more than 200 seats, making the entire house capacity not more than 480 seats.

It will also be necessary to remove at least one floor, and if the roof construction is not of a clear span, it will be a rather expensive proposition and all you really are saving is the outside walls. This saving will be practically eliminated by the extra expenses of temporary supports and shoring, so I sincerely believe that you can construct an entirely new modern theatre at an increase of not more than 20% of the reconstruction cost.

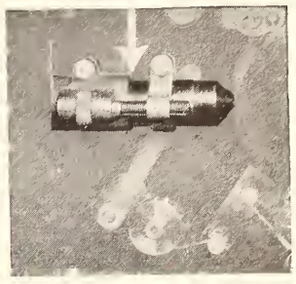
The Question:

I AM INTERESTED in a small movie house with a seating of from 400 to 500 capacity.

I have two rooms available and desire your advice if it is possible to arrange for such a capacity in rooms of the size such as I can secure. Suggest seating arrangements and other details. Also, if above amount not practical, what would be the maximum number of seats that could be placed in each.



The rooms are 20x175 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling; and 25x126 feet, with a 15-foot ceiling.

I shall be looking forward to your answer in BETTER THEATRES.—M. L. D.

The Answer:

WIN YOUR DISPUTES

How are you to prove it's the other fellow's fault if you don't keep books? One user paid for his Invoice record 30 times over by winning one argument. This set is easy to keep; all you have to know is how to add. Tells when you bought, how much you paid, check number, date, amount, daily receipts by shows and number of tickets at each show. Prevents being overcharged for films. Send $10: Money back if not satisfied.

EASY METHOD LEDGER SYSTEM
SEYMOUR, IND.

I shall begin with the room 20x175 feet. In planning a center bank with aisles on each side, you will be able to have eight 20-inch seats across the width of the auditorium. Should you be satisfied with a center aisle, which I generally do not recommend, you will be able to have ten seats across. So to obtain a seating capacity from 400 to 500 seats, it will require from forty to fifty rows of seats, and that will make a rather long auditorium and will require quite a slope in the floor. So be sure to investigate if the building is so constructed that the floor can be lowered, as the ceiling is not high enough to build the incline on top of the present floor.

The other building, being 25x126 feet, seems to be more suitable, but I am afraid that you may not be able to obtain as many seats. Planning a center bank with aisles on each side you will be able to obtain eleven 20-inch seats across the width of the auditorium, so it will take 36 rows of seats to obtain 400 seats, leaving 36 feet for lobby, foyer, platform, etc. While 400 seats are about the maximum to be obtained, it will make a better plan.

hered to on new houses, as well as theatres now in operation. Where necessary, architects should consult seating engineers, who are better equipped to ascertain proper elevations of floors for perfect sight lines.

"Second, the importance of good acoustics can be appreciated if full-upholstered chairs are to be considered. Acoustical properties of a full upholstered chair are far more advantageous, due to the amount of absorption in fabric materials used on the cushions and backs, than those of the common wood type of seating with veneer or imitation leather backs and seats, which lack sound absorbing qualities. Acoustical engineers will agree that upholstered chairs give better results than wood chairs. In figuring acoustics, importance is stressed on the entire acoustical scheme of the theatre, including walls, drapes, floor covering and the type of seating to be furnished.

"Third, the arrangement of seating is governed principally by local city or state ordinances, as to the number of seats between aisles, width of aisles, back-to-back spacings, cross-over aisles, etc. The proper spacing to insure almost perfect accessibility should be at least 32 inches from back to back, which is within the requirements of almost every code or ordinance. The standard width of chairs most commonly considered for modern seating is 20 inches. Considering 20 inches as a basic width, larger or smaller chairs may be incorporated to assure perfect alignment of aisles, conditions of building, etc.

"In assuring comfort with modern seating, it is necessary that full upholstered backs shall be so designed as to eliminate the use of the present hidden ½-inch veneer board to which the upholstery is tacked and to which a steel back panel is attached. With this modern development, the patron sitting in a chair shall enjoy the benefit of the full depth and comfort of the back without being pushed forward by the thickness of hidden veneers in present day seating.

"The most important comfort feature of any chair is the cushion. For example, a spring assembly is fastened to a veneer board and covered with burlap and other upholstering materials, so that when pressure is inserted, the spring is being penalized and punished as a result of its working against itself. All this is not true of automobile, bus, railroad and pullman spring construction, whose engineers have properly handled springs so as to give the maximum of comfort and service.

"Another feature of the modern trend is the elimination of the usual obsolete type of hinge construction, which is now replaced by a simple steel rod with spring shackle bolt construction, pivoted in the center of the standards, thus enabling the person when rising to stand within the chair, so that another patron passing may have unobstructed clearance. This has been proved an important feature in cases where back-to-back dimensions are necessarily limited.

"Up to the present time, in the construction of all theatre chairs, the use of nuts, bolts and screws has been predominant, but today in the development of the new all-steel theatre chair, the use of bolts, nuts and screws is practically eliminated."

Personnel Training and Supervision

person. This is the approach to mutual understanding. Only too frequently some individuals express themselves as if they had the power to turn their fellow being inside out and measure his qualities with a yardstick, and positively state "this man has no personality," or "this individual is lazy." Such positive and quickly arrived at conclusions are obviously unfair. If such conditions are suspected, start the analysis in yourself and work toward him. If it is felt that the first subject has no personality, check to see if he is doing the kind of job that would permit him to display some personality. Perhaps he is entirely unfitted for the job, maybe the job is bigger than he is, maybe he is actually too big for the job. All such considerations must be determined before a justifiable conclusion can be made.

ATTITUDE OF "THE BOSS"

IN HANDLING personnel, one cannot become arrogant, prideful or conceited. All of us have our personal limitations in the understanding of our fellow men. Such characteristics are immediately resented by subordinates, and a man to be of influence for good must be respected and must be approachable. Arrogance, pridefulness or conceit destroy respect and block approach.

True discipline in a theatre staff is the development by teaching and guidance; in total, training the individual to use his power of accomplishment in co-ordination and in harmony with the policies and practices as established for the particular theatre. If because of failure on the part of the manager to check continually up, correct, instruct, guide and inspire, the organizational development is not pointed in this direction, most of the so-called training of employes will be absolutely wasted.

DETERMINING EMPLOYE FITNESS

IT IS PERHAPS well to point out this fact at this point. The higher the intelligence of the theatre staff the more inclined toward individual action and individual thinking. An intelligent staff will at times present more difficult problems to the manager, but in return the intelligent staff will be progressive, alert, capable and have initiative, which means high efficiency, if the manager is sufficiently capable to lead and control. If this problem confronts you, remember intelligence is only satisfied by explanation. Repetition, command, punishment only make matters worse.

As pointed out earlier, the beginning of the personnel problem is at the moment of interview preparatory to the consideration of employment. Following in rather abbreviated form are some captions which might be used as a guide in establishing facts during the interview:

Health—Physical appearance, general? Body strong or weak? Nerves? Exercise? Play or relaxation? Use of Alcohol or drugs?

Personal Efficiency — Mental attitude? Energy? Temperament? Purpose? Special traits? Habits, poise, self-possession, courtesy, personality?

Character—No attempt is made here to list all of the many character factors; just remember that character is the only true measure of any man.

Efficiency—Expert knowledge? Experience? Power of decision, judgment? Self-reliance, grit, determination? Enthusiasm, imagination? Executive ability? Punctuality? Education? Record of progress or advancement?

Personnel Training and Supervision

Space does not permit a detailed elaboration or discussion of each quality.

With this guide before you, size up the particular job or position under consideration, indicate by a system of check marks or a system of grading; such should describe quite definitely the particular individual best suited for that job or position. Then, with this same schedule, rate or mark every individual on your present staff and compare them with your unbiased rating of the job. With the job ratings and the personnel ratings before you there should be no difficulty in determining the unfit or the misfits. All such situations should be corrected without delay. To delay in making such changes only adds to the difficulties and unpleasantness of a job which is none too easy to do at best. It will be only now and then that the exactly right person is available for the right position. But applicants should be selected with the basically right qualities (though perhaps undeveloped), and it then becomes the very important job of the personnel supervisor to bring out and develop those qualities so that the individual will progressively grow to measure up to the standard.

TRAINING OF EMPLOYES

THIS DOES NOT mean just putting a man to work, then leaving him to his own devices, hoping that at some future time he will be a first-rate engineer, doorman or usher. There is no more unfair practice than to hire a man, put him to work, then at a later date fire him without having devoted a definite amount of time to correcting mistakes, to making constructive criticism and giving training.

When the manager or personnel supervisor of a theatre passes over a mistake by an employe without calling it to the employe's attention and giving instruction and explanation how that mistake can be prevented in the future, he is being unfair to the employe and has no one to blame but himself when the same mistake recurs.

The science of personnel management requires real ability, vision, initiative and tact. It is a subject of tremendous importance, and unfortunately there are many in this industry who pass it by lightly. It is not peculiar that many people outside of this business believe that it requires no special training to be a "theatre man" because we of the industry have treated the subject so lightly. In reality I know of no other industry that calls for a more unusual training or more highly specialized ability.

Men, man power, personnel have built this fourth-ranking industry of this country. We have every right to be proud of it, in it, and for it. We owe it to the industry, and to ourselves to keep it free from the incapable, the shifters, the floaters and the drifters, and to make it a permanent, safe and secure life endeavor for the capable and the intelligent. A start toward this is a full appreciation of the personnel problem as it confronts each one of us.

ture would be approximately as found by the trial court, $111,695.25. . . . The prima facie measure of damages for the breach of a contract is the amount of the loss which the injured party has sustained thereby. If the breach consists in preventing the performance of the contract, without the fault of the other party, who is willing to perform it, the loss of the latter will consist of two distinct items or grounds of damage; namely, first, what he has already expended towards performance (less the value of materials on hand); second, the profits that he would realize by performing the whole contract. In the instant case there was no evidence of profits. There was no evidence that the picture produced by the plaintiff was of no value; but as the plaintiff earnestly contends, it was of great value. It is clear, therefore, that his damage, as the record now stands, may not be said to be the amount of his total expenditures less $9,196.50, the amount received from the sale of certain foreign rights."

An important rule of the law is that a seller is bound by the terms of a guarantee and that a theatre owner is entitled to recover damages for such breach. However, the law is well settled that a theatre owner is duty bound not to interfere with the seller in his endeavor to complete his obligations and the theatre owner must not perform a breach, otherwise he is not entitled to recover damages for the seller's breach.

Ordinarily, the acceptance of merchandise or equipment by a theatre owner will not relieve the seller from liability in damages for breach of any promise or warranty, unless the testimony indicates that the theatre owner failed to give notice to the seller of the breach within a reasonable time after he knew or should have known of such breach. For these reasons of the law a theatre owner who intends to sue a seller for breach of a contract of sale should notify the seller of such intentions within a reasonable time after discovering the breach.

WHEN PARTY MAY SUE FOR DAMAGES

WHERE TWO parties enter into a contract, a breach of the same by one party entitles the other to sue immediately and recover damages. Therefore, where a theatre owner fails to accept and pay for merchandise, the seller may recover the profits he would have earned had the theatre owner actually fulfilled the terms of the contract. Also, where a theatre owner agrees to pay for goods by installments on specified dates, his failure to promptly make any payment entitles the seller to sue and recover the full balance due immediately.

All contracts of this nature are legally known as bilateral agreements, or ones in which both contracting parties agree to perform definite acts or things. Generally speaking, if the theatre owner refuses to accept shipped goods, the seller is privileged to sell the same in open market and recover from the theatre owner the losses sustained.

It is important to know that a theatre owner commits a legal breach of a sales contract when he fails to fulfill any part of the agreement made when the seller's offer is accepted. If the seller fails to make delivery at the agreed time, of course the theatre owner may without obligation refuse to accept delivery at a later date.

LIABILITY OF GRATUITOUS BAILEE

THE DUTIES of a gratuitous bailee is to use a high degree of care to safeguard property left in his care. In other words, the keeper must not be grossly negligent, otherwise he is liable to the owner for the value of the lost, stolen or damaged goods.

Therefore, in many litigations involving bailor, the owner of goods, and bailee, the caretaker or theatre owner, the legal question most important for consideration is: Was the bailee to be paid for his services?

CASE

For illustration, in Ridgely v. White (150 So. 693, Birmingham, Ala.), it was shown that the owner of goods left the same in care of a bailee who was not to be paid for keeping the goods. The merchandise was stolen and the bailee attempted to avoid liability on the contention that he was a gratuitous bailee. However, since it was disclosed that the bailee carelessly left the goods in a public passageway for a few minutes thus giving the thief opportunity to commit the theft, the court held negligence of this degree on the part of the bailee entitled the bailor or owner of the goods to recover their value. This court said:

DECISION

"There was a duty, at least to use such care as the law exacts of a gratuitous bailee, and a failure on his part, without excuse, to perform it is negligence."

Attention: Mr. Ramsey

Dear Mr. Ramsey:

We shall be very glad to demonstrate your equipment, installed in the Chevwood theatre, to any prospects you care to send out.

We shall also be glad to write a letter of recommendation. I am now associated with theaters which are using equipment made by both of your large competitors, and I can say that your equipment seems fully equal to their best installations.

We can arrange at any time to project the same film on your own and competitive equipment, and I think the results of such a demonstration will convince most prospects.

We shall send on a letter of recommendation later.

With best regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

John R. Isaacbourow, Pres.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 115, No. 7 May 12, 1934

A "HUSH HUSH" LAW

BEFORE we start, bear in mind that the Statue of Liberty still stands in the harbor and these are yet the United States, long presumed to constitute a republic guaranteeing various liberties of expression, opinion and action to its citizens.

We may now examine a recent enactment from the New Dealers that has the characteristics of a very cold hand deftly flicked off the bottom of the deck, in a part of the current hurry, hurry, campaign to keep the Congress dizzy until adjournment.

In an amendment to the sugar section of the A. A. A. railroaded through the Senate last week it is stipulated that any one who in connection with the purchase, sale, processing or settlement of a contract affecting any of the basic commodities, or their by-products, knowingly exaggerates the part played by the processing tax in affecting the price or the cost of processing, is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to punishment.

The motion picture industry may well eye with interest a procedure by which the New Dealers would put a lid upon exposition to the consuming public of the final fruits of their tax system. An easy next step would be a penalty upon announcing to the consumer any increase in costs of any product whatsoever due to operation under the terms of the N. R. A. code. Who is to decide at what precise decimal point in price analysis "exaggeration" begins?

Let us suppose, as we readily may, that the same strictures were placed upon discussions or expositions of the influence of admission taxes upon box office prices. Or whose country is this, anyway?

MOVIES WANTED

MR. DARRYL ZANUCK came to town the other day, put on his yellow and vermillion dressing gown bespangled with polo ponies and conversed himself into a column of the New York Herald Tribune, saying: "You can't tell where the pictures are going. I look forward to opera, opera and Shakespeare even. Why, Barrymore and I talked over 'Hamlet' often and only five days ago Freddy March, who is with us now, we talked all night about the possibility of it."

This eternal begging for respectability by the motion picture, with its yearnings after the musty glories of Shakespeare and the mothy splendors of the opera, is sad. Shakespeare is a tradition, a considerably questionable tradition from several points of view, and the opera is and long has been in these United States merely a social manifestation in which homage is paid, but not in sustaining cash, to "imported" names on the stage and domestically produced names in the boxes and diamond circle.

The dead and dying arts can confer neither power nor honor upon the motion picture. The motion picture is out on its own responsibility and must make its own way by its own works. Opera has not made its own living for a long time. The motion picture has no rich uncles.

Mr. Barrymore, Mr. Zanuck and Mr. March ought not to "set up nights" on the account of either Shakespeare or the opera. They may either go to bed or play checkers. The spending public would like some good movies.

SEX AND MR. GLAZER

NOW comes Mr. Barney Glazer, quoted in a Hollywood dispatch to Film Daily, as remarking that the screen just cannot do without sex, and adding: "Since our entire civilization is founded on sex and not on fairy tales whose premise is the life of animals, I fail to see how the self-appointed guardians of public morals can expect the public to consistently and avidly accept unexciting and unemotional entertainment. Romance is sex, blame it on Adam and Eve and not on Hollywood producers. . . ."

There you have it, so that anyone, that is anyone east of the Sierras, can understand what is the matter.

Mr. Glazer, deft as he is with words, confuses biology, art and civilization in that same potpourri of loose notions which ever pervades the Hollywood mind, if you will pardon the metaphor.

Maybe Mr. Glazer never heard about it, but there has been and is romance without sex and there are pursuits both exciting and emotional that do not come to climax in biological functions.

It has been the occasional observation of the writer that Hollywood would profit by acquiring some slight acquaintance with the United States. We abandon that movement now in behalf of a new notion that it would be even more profitable to the art if the screen artisans of Mr. Glazer's school were to discover the human race. Sex is all very well in its place, but some of our customers do not want it on their bread.

IN THE MOVIE GARDEN

MISS JULIA KELLY of Mr. Will Hays' secretarial staff remarks that when "The House of Connolly" was changed to "Carolina" it was in part because it was felt that the title and Miss Gaynor should "carry a suggestion of such things as honeysuckle and romance."

We would advise Miss Julia that in the Carolinas "such things" pertain to jasmine and romance. Honeysuckle is more northerly.

But assuming honeysuckle for Miss Gaynor, what would you suggest for Mr. Wallace Beery? Perhaps a smart weed for Lee Tracy, and mayhap a night blooming cereus for Miss West.

KENTUCKY LOBBYING

Under indictment by a Kentucky grand jury in Frankfort are several amusement companies, charged with failure to comply with regulatory laws concerning lobbying during the recent legislative session. So charged were the Frankfort Amusement Company and Phoenix Amusement Company. They are liable to fines. . . .

PLEA DENIED AGAIN

One again the plea of former Alabama senator E. D. Jordon for a rehearing on his two-year-old conviction for soliciting a bribe from Gadsden theatre manager Lee Castlebery, has been denied by the state court of appeals. The convicted senator has been under bond since December, 1932. . . .

TO FREE FIGHT FILMS

Into the Senate at Washington last week, Senator Barbour of New Jersey introduced legislation to free fight films from interstate and foreign commerce regulation. . . .

LISTENING IN ABROAD

From a film studio at Elstree, England, last Saturday, via Columbia Broadcasting System, came a scene from the new London Films production of Alexander Korda, "The Private Life of Don Juan," starring Douglas Fairbanks. With actual shooting going on, the program was a "listen" behind the scenes. United Artists will release the film here. . . .

EXHIBITOR AGREEMENT

Having reached at long last an agreement, exhibitors in Kansas City, Kan., on May 19 will operate on a policy which bans price cuts, double bills, premiums. In only one house, where it is long established, will a 10-cent admission hold. Hope is held that exhibitors in Kansas City, Mo., will follow suit. . . .

OPERA AT MUSIC HALL

An innovation on the stage of a film theatre will be next week's stage presentation at the New York Music Hall, when "Madame Butterfly," opera, will be played in its entirety, featuring Anna Roselle, former Met singer. . . .

DICKINSON IN EXCHANGE

Last week Glen W. Dickinson, Kansas City, head of 20 Kansas, Missouri houses, became affiliated with Consolidated Film Distributors, Inc., making his houses Consolidated's outlet. Dickinson has bought an interest in the exchange, says R. C. Borg, Consolidated manager. . . .

FIGHT SCORE CHARGES

Independent exhibitors of Canada, led by Oscar Hanson, head of Allied of Ontario, have demanded of the Motion Picture Distributors, at Toronto, elimination of score charges, effective July 1 in new contracts. Distributors claim every reel is assessed $75 by producers, the distributors' annual cost reaching $450,000, against $400,000 for exhibitors. Mr. Hanson claims score charges should be part of production cost. . . .

REEL TROUBLE SETTLED

Indicated as amicably settled is the newsreel censorship controversy which stirred film interests in Chicago recently, following conferences among Mayor Kelly; Charles C. Pettijohn, MPPDA; Henry M. Herbel, Universal manager; Leo Spitz, former Paramount executive; John S. Connolly, Pathe general manager; Police Chief Allman and Censor Costello. . . .

U. S. VS. WARNER SUIT

Expected shortly is dismissal of the United States Department of Justice anti-trust suit against Warner relative to its acquisition of First National, when the case comes before the United States district court in New York. Dismissal, it is said, will be based on the NIRA provision suspending anti-trust laws relative to code-operated industries. . . .

CRITIC INVITED

Recently Mrs. Mildred Lewis Russell, D. A. R. Better Films Committee chairman, hit the "going-to-have-a-baby" cycle in film production, and cited Paramount's "Eight Girls in a Boat." Hammering back, director Richard Wallace has invited Mrs. Russell to write a screen story, of which he will attempt to dispose. Said Mr. Wallace: "It is time Hollywood invited the critics . . . to give the fruits of their ability." . . .

MGM IN LONDON

Reports current in London indicate MGM planning its own production unit there next season, supplementing distribution under the direction of Sam Eckman. Arthur Loew, heading foreign activity, has been studying the situation in London. . . .

FILM FINALLY PASSED

Banned for a long period, Paramount's "Blue Angel," starring Emil Jannings and Marlene Dietrich, has finally been approved by the Pennsylvania state censor board, and will shortly be released in the state. . . .

SELLING TRANSPORTATION

To sell its services, particularly in connection with Chicago's Century of Progress, the Illinois Central Railroad is utilizing a two-reel talking film, produced by Castle Films, which ballyhoos Chicago and the Exposition, and urges transit via Illinois Central trains. . . .

TWO-A-DAY EXPERIMENT

Shifting experimentally from continuous run to a two-a-day, reserved seat policy, maintaining the popular prices of the continuous plan, is Loew's Valencia, in Baltimore. The results, falling somewhat into line with the thought of seeing the feature from the beginning, expressed in these pages recently by Martin Quigley should prove of interest. . . .

AGAIN IATSE CANDIDATE

Resigned in 1931 because of ill health, William F. Canavan will run again for the presidency of the IATSE, theatre employees' organization, in opposition to the incumbent, William C. Elliott, at the annual convention in Louisville, June 4-7. The interval found him active in St. Louis. . . .

ST. LOUIS HOUSE SALE

Bondholders' reorganization plan approved, public sale of three St. Louis houses, Missouri, Ambassador, Grand, is expected to take place during June. The reorganization includes operation by Harry C. Arthur and Harry Koplar under Fanchon & Marco. Skouras Brothers would then step out of the local situation. . . .

DOUBLE BILL USERS MAY APPEAL TO GOVERNMENT

Independents Map Action in Anticipation of Clause in New Contracts of Large Distributors to Bar Practice

Anticipating inclusion of a clause prohibiting double features in the contracts of the large distributors, virtually every independent producer, distributor and exchange in the country is ready to take the fight against such a prohibition to the United States Government, charging the distributors with coercion in restraint of trade.

The independents believe that the anti-dual campaign now being conducted by the large distributors and the MPTOA already has passed the stage where the motion picture Code Authority can assist, and feel that "it is only a matter of time" before the large distributors outlaw the showing of any two of their features on the same program.

Acting for the independents is their own association of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, which fired a broadside this week at the double bill opponents, and, at the same time, made a strong plea to all independent theatre owners to support independent production and distribution as "insurance against not having pictures available to you at prices that will let you continue in business."

The independents' defense of the double feature policy—which is the topic of the moment in almost all industry quarters—hinges on the right of every exhibitor to decide his own policy, plus the fact that barring double features automatically would eliminate 200 features a year, which they say would mean the elimination of all independent production as well as all motion picture companies not having theatre affiliations.

"The elimination of double features is the greatest menace that can happen to the motion picture business," the Federation declared this week, because their elimination would cause the production of less than 300 features yearly, "and that would tend to create a monopoly."

Offer Photographic Evidence

"If only 300 features are made a year," continued the Federation's statement, "the cost of these pictures would be so prohibitive that that in itself would cause the exhibitor to pay such high film rental because the overhead required in the making and distribution of pictures when limited to only 300 features a year, would be so excessive that the cost would naturally have to be added to the motion picture" in the reduced form.

The Federation offered photographic evidence that double featuring is not limited to only small theatres. The "exhibits" listed the Riverside, RKO Hamilton, Loew's 175th Street, RKO Coliseum, Symphony, Loew's Rio, Loew's Commodore, in New York City; Loew's Kings, the Ridgewood, Loew's Pitkin, RKO Brunswick, in Brooklyn; the Stanley, Jersey City; Capitol and Branford, Newark; Lincoln, Union City, N. J.; Park Plaza, Bronx; Uptown and Paramount, Boston; Great Lakes, Century, Buffalo; Loew's Stillman and Detroit, Cleveland; Wonderland, New Orleans; Regent and Davis, Pittsburgh; Carolina, Lexington, N. C.; Alamo, Atlanta; RKO Downtown, Riviera, Cinderella, Detroit; State, Rhinelander, Wis.; Indiana, Indianapolis; Coliseum, Roxy, Seattle; Victory, Salt Lake; Webber, Denver; Embassy and Paramount, San Francisco, among others.

The Federation quoted a survey in which it was indicated that approximately 50 per cent of the theatres of the country are now on a double bill policy, and that there has been a 25 per cent increase since the code was signed without any restrictions on double features.

Declaring that the final judge is the public, the Federation charged that when a community theatre is asked to play single features, while the downtown competitor plays the newest pictures in conjunction with elaborate stage shows, wellknown orchestras, personal appearances of various stars, and many vaudeville acts, "it is unfair to ask the community theatre to present a single picture so that the downtown house can force the patrons not to go to the community theatre. The smaller theatre is built in many cases so that the only entertainment it can offer is motion pictures—it has not the possibilities to give entertainment such as the larger theatres can give."

Theatres located in territories where double bills prevail were said to be in a much better position from the standpoint of the box-office than theatres in those territories where single features are the general policy.

Commenting on the report that Mr. Louis B. Mayer intends making a "barnstorming" tour of the country speaking to exhibitors on general problems facing producers and exhibitors with an idea of reaching a better understanding and to enlist support to drop double featuring, a spokesman for the Federation on Tuesday suggested that Mr. Mayer start at Boston "where, as an exhibitor, he ran the first double bill, many years ago." The MGM vice-president joined the double bill issue at the MPTOA convention in Los Angeles last month, when he told the exhibitor delegates that double featuring is going to wreck the motion picture business.

The membership roster of the Federation lists some 60 or 70 independent producers, distributors and exchanges in the key cities.

Exhibitors Debate Issue

Meanwhile exhibitors in many territories were engaged in spirited debate over the double bill practice. A petition was being circulated in the Cleveland district to enlist the support of all exhibitors there in effecting a prohibition of double featuring. It was indicated that no action would be taken unless all of the owners agreed to discontinue the practice after July 8. In Los Angeles it appeared that the powerful Fox West Coast circuit will join independent owners in barring duals after June 1. Louis B. Mayer was reported to have telephoned Charles Skouras in New York for the cooperation of the circuit.

"I am not against independent producers," Mr. Mayer told a California exhibitor gathering last week, adding, however, that "if they can't deliver something constructive, let them stay out of the business."

Acting as the spearhead for large distributors and theatre operators, by agitating for discontinuance of the practice, Holly-

HOW THEY STAND ON DOUBLE BILLS

Taking definite positions on either side of the double feature policy fence are the federation of the Motion Picture Industry, chief organization of independent distributors, with which independent producers are affiliated; the large Hollywood producers, the MPTOA and Allied States, the two leading exhibitor organizations. Their positions relative to the troublesome problem:

FEDERATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY—Fighting sharply for retention of the policy, claiming 50 per cent of the nation's theatres use duals, declaring duals are the only manner in which small houses can compete with downtown situations showing one feature with elaborate stage shows.

LARGE HOLLYWOOD PRODUCERS—With Louis B. Mayer leading the attack, definitely opposed to double features, contending spread of the "pernicious" practice ultimately will force them to produce inferior product.

MPTOA—Also opposed to the practice, and formulating plans for a campaign to eradicate the policy. President Ed Kuykendall has declared continuation will bring quantity rather than quality from Hollywood.

ALLIED STATES—Understood to hold the matter is one for individual determination, but at the moment non-committal.

Federation Says 50 Per Cent of Theatres Show Two Features; Mayer's "Barnstorming" Tour Awaited; MPTOA Acts Soon

wood assumed a leadership last week by direct action of the large producers. Mr. Mayer and B. B. Kahane, representing the large producers, met in Los Angeles with 250 exhibitors, both independent and circuit.

While double billing has been considered the problem of sales managers and circuit operators, these large producers of Hollywood have decided that the "pernicious" practice ultimately would force them to produce inferior product and, sensing this growing threat to quality, so they say, they are leading the movement to stamp out the practice.

After four hours of fiery oratory, the entire body by rising vote expressed approval for a single bill standard. Only one exhibitor, from Florence, California, voted for double showings.

A committee was appointed to obtain pledges from all exhibitors favoring the single picture.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis voted this week to end doubles in that territory.

In an attempt to encourage elimination of duals in their theatre stronghold, Warners will abandon the policy on Saturdays at its Philadelphia houses. The plan is an experiment.

In Philadelphia, distributors reported that 75 exhibitors out of 225 are now on a double bill basis.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America shortly will decide, at a special meeting in New York, the form of a campaign which it will conduct nationally to stamp out doubles. The association, which went on record at its Los Angeles convention as being opposed to the practice, would effect elimination through one of three plans:

(1) Through the aid of distributors, who would be asked to insert into sales contracts a provision giving single bookings a discount, or imposing a penalty for showing a second feature; (2) by obtaining unanimous exhibitor approval of a double feature ban in each of the principal territories; or (3) by making the practice prohibitive through a special code clause, when a majority in any territory so rule.

The MPTOA and the large Hollywood producers are understood to have agreed to work cooperatively toward elimination of the practice. At private conferences between producer and MPTOA representatives, following the Los Angeles convention, it was reported that some producers favored insertion of a clause in 1934-35 contracts prohibiting the showing of two feature on one bill.

Subsequently, Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, spoke vigorously against a continuance of doubles, at exhibitor gatherings which he attended while en route to his home in Mississippi from the exhibitor convention in California. Said Mr. Kuykendall at a San Francisco exhibitor gathering:

"I don't believe that in the whole United States there is a section that is wholeheartedly for double bills. If the practice continues the 'quickie' companies will start grinding out product until we give Hollywood the definite impression that we want quantity, not quality. Women's organizations have found through a general canvass that women do not want quantity, but insist on quality and variety in programs."

It was understood that the MPTOA intended asking the Code Authority in New York to start activities pointing toward inclusion in the code of a clause prohibiting doubles.

Speaking in the midwest late last week, Mr. Kuykendall said he favored contractual restrictions imposed by distributors on double bills beginning with 1934-35, this because the distributors can thereby clamp down on the practice either by limitations or outright prohibition. Another method would be to lengthen features, he said.

Says Legality Was Questioned

"We could have written a double bill clause into the code, but the independent producers protested and the question was raised whether it would be legal," declared Mr. Kuykendall, who added that unless curbed, double bills would influence the producers to pay more attention to quantity product than to quality.

He pointed to the independent companies which "thrive" on multiple features. "They claim their negative costs are as great as some of the majors' pictures, but that is open to question because we all know the type of product they turn out," he said. "I know of instances where the independents shoot a picture in four or five days with no rehearsals or preparation, at a cost of $5,000."

Meanwhile, the Federation of independents in New York become quite disturbed over the new MPTOA campaign. "Double featuring is a matter of individual determination," said W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram and one of the leading interests in the Federation, answering the MPTOA leaders.

The independents also were said to have evinced concern over recurring Hollywood reports that the large producers would compete in turning out pictures designed for double feature programs if the practice is not ended by next season. The reports were entirely unofficial.

Allied Silent on Issue

Allied States Association has remained silent on the double bill question, nor is the organization expected to voice any opinion in this connection at the annual meeting of its executives on Saturday at the Congress Hotel in Chicago. Allied, it is said, holds that the matter is one for individual decision.

In New York this week there were heard rumblings of approaching death for the dual bill policy, with several of the distributors—principally Paramount, Warners, RKO and MGM—reported anxious to hasten the end by contract limitations on the new season's product, or, possibly, through a clause prohibiting the practice outright.

Communications Commission Urged

Creation of a Federal communications commission to regulate telephone, telegraph, radio, wireless and cable systems was advocated Tuesday in Washington by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, said that while he "may have to impose a code on the communications industry," he did not want to if he "could get out of it."

The position of the Interstate Commerce Commission with regard to regulation of communications was explained by Frank McManamy, a commissioner, in testifying before the House Interstate Commerce Committee on the Reyburn bill. He said:

"The bill is very similar to that introduced by Senator Dill, the chief difference being in the treatment of the provisions relating to radio. This bill does not repeal the radio act of 1927, but abolishes the Federal Radio Commission and transfers its powers, duties and functions under that act and any other provisions of law to the Federal Communications Commission, while the Senate bill restates the radio provisions and repeals the radio act of 1927. The bill also transfers to the Federal Communications Commission regulation of telephone, telegraph and cable lines at present exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"In addition to transferring the control presently exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over telephone and telegraph lines the bill contains certain provisions increasing the power of the regulatory commission over such activities for the purpose of making the control more complete and effective. This also appears to be sound public policy and in the interest of effective regulation."

March operations of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, resulted in a net operating income of $1,539,578, compared with $801,422 in March, 1933.

Robins of Protective Group Charges Monopoly by A. T. & T.

Robert Robins, head of the American Society for the Protection of Motion Picture Theatres, at an executive committee meeting of the organization in Chicago last week predicted that drastic changes in the control structure of the industry are in order. The organization is seeking support for an investigation of A. T. & T., which he charges with monopolistic control of the industry.

In a communication to Clarence Darrow, chairman of the National Recovery Review Board, the society challenges the fairness of the Motion Picture Code Authority. Mr. Robins will conduct a meeting of the organization at Detroit this week, to be followed by a similar gathering later at Cleveland.

Home Offices Close Saturdays

Columbia, RKO Radio, Universal, Paramount and United Artists will operate on a five-day week starting May 12, and will continue on that basis throughout the summer. Fox and MGM are contemplating a similar move. Columbia's offices are closed on Saturday throughout the year.

SCHAEFER VIRTUALLY PARAMOUNT HEAD; AGNEW SALES MANAGER

Schaefer Answerable Only to Trustees and Zukor, Who Will Give Entire Attention to Production for Indefinite Period

Further reconstruction of the Paramount Publix personnel structure was effected this week when George J. Schaefer became virtually the managing head of the corporation's production, distribution and exhibition business, answerable only to Adolph Zukor, president, and the Paramount trustees.

Mr. Schaefer, who had been vice-president, general manager and sales director of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, was elected additionally to the presidency and directorate of Paramount's administrative theatre subsidiaries—Famous Theatres Corporation, and Paramount Theatres Service Corporation—and takes over these duties vacated last week through the resignation of Ralph A. Kohn.

At the same time, Neil F. Agnew was appointed general sales manager in charge of distribution.

Zukor Concentrates on Production

Mr. Zukor left New York for the Coast and it was announced that henceforth he would devote his entire attention to current and future production matters for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. Schaefer has been in the service of Paramount since 1920, when he entered the company employ as booker at the New York exchange. One year later, he was promoted to district manager of Paramount's New England territory, and in 1926 was appointed sales manager for District 1. Subsequently he was made general sales manager of the company, and last year was named vice-president and general manager of the distributing company.

Just prior to his new appointments, Mr. Schaefer, because of the steadily increasing scope of his activities as general manager of Paramount and its subsidiaries, had announced the appointment of Neil F. Agnew.

Cokell Elected to Board

Succeeding Mr. Agnew as western division manager will be Charles Reagan, midwestern district manager, who has been working out of Chicago. Mr. Reagan will immediately make his headquarters in New York, and will be succeeded as midwestern district chief by Ed Fontaine, formerly Cleveland branch manager.

Walter B. Cokell, treasurer of Paramount Distributing, was elected to the board of directors of both Famous Theatres and Paramount Theatres Service at the same meeting at which Mr. Schaefer's elections were made.

Mr. Schaefer is also vice-president of Paramount Pictures, Paramount International and Paramount Productions, as well as vice-president and general manager of Paramount Distributing. His authority thus extends to all phases of the company's domestic and foreign operations, and his elevation is interpreted as settling for the immediate future, at least, recently revived reports that S. A. Lynch, chairman of the Paramount Publix trustees' advisory committee, and N. L. Nathanson, head of Famous Canadian Corporation, were slated to take over high positions at Paramount.

Organization of Paramount's national theatre advisory committee, which was begun several months ago by Mr. Kohn, will be continued.

This national advisory committee is designed to serve as the intermediary between the home office and Paramount's theatre operating partners in the field, and will be comprised of six operating partners, elected by the partners in the six principal territories of the company's theatre operations. Already elected to the committee are E. V. Richards, who becomes an operating partner on the reorganization of Saenger Theatres; Karl Hoblitzelle, of Interstate Circuit, representing southwestern operations; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, central western operations, and N. L. Nathanson, Canada.

Kuhn, Loeb on Reorganization

L. Kuhn, Loeb & Company, banking house, is working on a project for reorganization of Paramount-Publix, it was announced Wednesday. The bondholders' protective committee has signified its approval of the house as being "well fitted" for the task.

Efforts of certain creditors to oust the Paramount trustees—Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson—were carried to the United States supreme court last week following failure in the lower federal courts. A petition for review of the lower court proceedings was filed in Washington by Norman E. Bessinger and Rose Friedman, Paramount creditors. The complaint charges that the trustees were disqualified from acting in their capacities because of other business connections.

Anderson Theatrical Enterprises agreed last week to settlement of its claim of $85,249 against Paramount Publix for $3,000. The claim was based on theatre leases at Anderson, Ind.

Paramount Theatres Service Corporation, of which Mr. Schaefer is now president and director, is a comparatively new subsidiary, organized to handle all phases of theatre administration remaining with the home office under decentralized operations by theatre partnerships in the field.

Dembow Continues in Post

Famous Theatres Corporation is the subsidiary which took over the assets of the bankrupt Publix Enterprises under the bankrupt's reorganization last December, thereby acquiring the Publix interest in approximately 135 theatres.

Sam Dembow, Jr., is to continue as vice-president of Paramount Theatres Service, and Y. Frank Freeman continues as vice-president of Famous.

A proposal for the settlement of $280,000 in claims against Olympia Theatres on the basis of 40 cents on the dollar will be submitted to Referee Henry K. Davis for approval May 17. Total creditor claims filed against Olympia, Paramount's principal New England theatre subsidiary, are said to aggregate $21,000,000, and of this amount it is believed $13,000,000 is not provable. Of the remaining $8,000,000, Paramount's own claims total $5,092,896, and an additional $1,500,000 claim represents an intercompany liability filed against Olympia Operating Corporation by Olympia Theatres. Thus, only little more than $1,400,000 of claims against Olympia regarded as provable have been filed by outside creditors.

Samuel and Nathan E. Goldstein, former owners of the G. B. circuit of Massachusetts, will resume management of the circuit for Paramount under terms of a reorganization plan for a $1,050,000 mortgage bond issue on the circuit completed by the Paramount trustees.

Bill May Speed Paramount Setup

Passage by the United States Senate late last week of the Corporation Bankruptcy bill, permitting readjustment of the debts of bankrupt corporations by consent of creditors in order to facilitate reorganization and refinancing programs, will speed the reorganization of Paramount-Publix and may result in the company's ultimate discharge from bankruptcy considerably earlier than expected.

Although Senate amendments to the bill will make it necessary to return the measure to the House for conference, which already has passed it, its approval by the Senate is regarded as certain.

Under the bill, bankrupt corporations may apply for readjustment of their debts outside of actual bankruptcy proceedings on approval by creditors representing 10 per cent of the total creditors' claims against the company and 25 per cent of the holders of any single class of claims.

Congress Approves Loans to Industry

Plans for a loan of more than $500,000,000 to the nation's industries received the approval of the Senate and House banking committees on Monday in Washington and bills authorizing such loans are expected to move swiftly through Congress, with President Roosevelt's approval believed to be assured.

The Senate committee reported the Fletcher bill by which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be empowered to lend $250,000,000 to promote activity in hard-pressed smaller and medium-sized industries. This would be as a supplement to the Glass bill, already reported, by which $278,000,000 would be made available through the Federal Reserve System for the same purpose.

Pathe Exchange to Finance Hoyt Serial on Boy Scouts

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Stuart W. Webb, president, will finance a Boy Scout serial picture being produced by Harry Hoyt at the Mack Sennett studios in Hollywood.

Plans are to finance this one production only with no definite possibility of the Pathe group re-entering active production, Mr. Webb said Tuesday.

Penwomen Name Best Films

"Alice in Wonderland," "Death Takes a Holiday" and "Little Women" were chosen as the best feature pictures of 1933 by the National League of American Penwomen, gathered at its annual convention Tuesday in Washington. Walt Disney's "Old King Cole" was selected as the best short subject.

NEW RULES COVER APPEALS ON LABOR

National Board to Decide Cases Carried Up from Regional Units; Test Case Filed by Denver Projectionists on Hours

The National Labor Board of the NRA this week in Washington set forth new rules and regulations governing procedure on appeals by labor and employers to that body from Regional Labor Boards in the field.

At the same time, throughout the country, attempts were being made to straighten out labor difficulties which have been vexing theatre men and their employees, union and non-union, for several weeks past.

The new rules provide that when a Regional Labor Board has been invoked as a means of settlement of a dispute between employers and employees, and a party is aggrieved by the determination of such a Regional Board and wishes the National Labor Board to review the dispute, the party concerned may file with the National Board a petition requesting such a review, but this petition must contain only a summary and short statement of the matter involved and the reasons cited by the petitioner for the review. A supporting brief may be filed with the petition. The petition must be filed within one week after the announcement of a decision by the Regional Board, unless the National Board extends the time for such filing.

Notice of the filing of the petition, together with a copy of the petition and the brief, if any, shall, under the National Board's new rules, be sent by the petitioner to all parties concerned, including the Regional Board—simultaneously with the filing of the petition with the National Board. Any party involved may within one week—unless the Board extends the time—file an opposing statement or brief which shall be sent by him to all other parties involved.

National Board to Decide

Also included in the new regulations is a provision which states specifically that "on the basis of these papers and of the Regional Board's record and opinions in the case, the National Labor Board shall determine whether a review shall be allowed on any or all points in issue. It shall also indicate to what extent, if any, new evidence will be received."

The review will be granted, the new rules state, in the discretion of the National Labor Board, for good and sufficient reasons, and subject to such conditions as the National Board prescribes. The following, while neither controlling nor fully measuring the Board's discretion, indicate the character of reasons which will be considered as justifying review:

1. That the dispute is of national importance because of the number of persons immediately or potentially affected.

2. That the Regional Labor Board has interpreted a clause of a statute, code, or agreement in a way that conflicts with an interpretation of the same or a similar clause by the National Labor Board or by any other agency charged with the settlement of labor disputes.

3. That the question is one which the public welfare requires should be decided uniformly in all industries or in all localities.

The Regional Labor Boards were appointed by the National Labor Board of the NRA as a medium for settling local controversies in the field without bringing the interested parties to the National Labor Board at Washington.

Cannot Force Appearances

Regional Labor Boards in the field may investigate labor cases on complaint of either party—the exhibitor or his employees—but they have no direct authority to force anyone to appear before them, 'though, naturally, since the boards are supposed to be unprejudiced, it would appear to be to the best advantage of both sides to appear.

Any decision by a Regional Labor Board may be appealed, as set forth above by the National Board at Washington, to this group by either side.

While the Regional Labor Boards, or their parent, the National Labor Board, have no power in themselves to enforce any of its decisions, failure to comply with any decision may be referred by the Labor Board to the Department of Justice, or to the enforcement agencies of the NRA, for possible prosecution in the courts.

Completing Circuits' Checkup

In New York, the current checkup of service employees in Loew's and RKO metropolitan houses, being conducted by a representative of the Department of Labor, is scheduled to be completed this week and the findings made known by Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt almost immediately.

The investigation is to determine the percentage of employees who are members of Local 118, Theatre and Amusement Employees' Union. If it is ascertained that the local has a majority of employees in these theatres, it is considered tantamount to recognition by New York circuits.

A hearing on a petition for an injunction to restrain the local from picketing the Tivoli, Brooklyn, where a strike has been in progress for several weeks, was postponed to Thursday, when called in supreme court at Brooklyn Monday.

Labor activities in the field included the picketing of Loew's theatre in Akron by Local 127 of the Building Service Employees' Union, affiliated with the New York Local 118. Seven ushers who were discharged last January and ordered reinstated by the Regional Labor Board have not yet been returned to their jobs.

In Denver, what is looked upon as a test case by many theatre men, has been filed by two projectionists against the State theatres. The operators are suing for $550, alleged to be due under the president's re-employment agreement, which, they claim, provided for a maximum of 35 hours weekly to be worked by men of their class. According to papers filed in the case, the operators apparently try to make it appear as though they were working 91 hours each, which is the number of hours the booth operates. About a year ago, the union accepted the offer of the management for $100 a week for booth expenses, it being understood that the two regular operators would hire a relief operator. This has been done, the regular men working 39½ hours each, and the relief man the rest.

In Kansas City, the St. Louis Regional Labor Board this week handed down a decision ordering Ed Dubinsky to reinstate IATSE operators and stagehands at salaries in force at the time of the alleged lockout at the two Dubinsky houses in St. Joseph last November. The board gave a similar decision some time ago.

Close on a federal injunction temporarily restraining pickets at a Milwaukee restaurant, the Rex theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., has filed complaint in Milwaukee Federal Court asking restraining orders against union picketing. The management of the Rex alleges that unions demanded discharge of employees unless they joined the union, but the men refused.

In Minneapolis, booth operators, seeking a wage increase, this week got back a 10 per cent cut which they took voluntarily more than a year ago.

Saenger theatres will restore union operators to the booths of the Globe, Tudor and Saenger in New Orleans on May 15, as a result of a contract concluded between E. V. Richards, and the union.

Helen Kane Loses Action Against Fleischer Studios

Helen Kane, musical comedy singer, late last week lost her suit for $250,000 damages against the Paramount-Publix Corporation, Max Fleischer, creator of the cartoon character "Betty Boop," and the Fleischer Studios, Inc., in which she charged the defendants had wrongfully appropriated her singing and acting manner and style in the cartoon figure. In supreme court, New York, Justice Edward J. McGoldrick, in his opinion, held that Miss Kane had failed to substantiate her allegations.

During the progress of the court action, Miss Kane had testified, through demonstration, that her style had been appropriated by Max Fleischer in his cartoon creation, and numerous subjects of the Paramount cartoon series were shown to the court by the defendants in supporting their denial of her charges.

Kendall Sentenced Second Time for Toronto Offenses

Lew Kendall, Toronto projectionist, now under sentence of one year after his conviction in the bombing of the Cumbac theatre, has been fined $300 and sentenced to three months in prison by Judge O'Connell of general sessions court, on a charge of running a gaming house for betting on horse races.

Kendall has been in difficulties previously in connection with troubles between independents and projectionists. He is still to be tried for attempted perversion of justice because of a claim one witness was paid to swear he had no connection with the theatre bombing.

Sensational Film Exploitation Stirs Kansas City Fight

Protests by the Merchants' Association, the Women's City Club and others resulted in considerable "toning down" of the front of the Publix Royal, small Kansas City first run house, where "Narcotic" is in its second week. Advertised as frank exposition of the drug traffic, "for adults only," the independently made picture was granted a certificate by Guy Holmes, city censor, after an extensive "cleaning" and over the protest of Mrs. Eleanore C. Walton, assistant censor and club woman.

John C. Moffitt, Kansas City Star critic, called attention to the subject matter of "Narcotic" in a review devoted to severe criticism of the Royal's policy of showing sensational pictures sensationally exploited. Mrs. Walton said she agreed with Mr. Moffitt but her hands were tied. Censor Holmes said he could pass films without her consent.

A newspaper "ad" is reproduced herewith.

A representative of one of the women's clubs demanded that the theatre withdraw the picture. Invited to see it, she admitted there was hardly anything objectionable about it. She nevertheless demanded that the stills be changed and the front generally "cleaned up." Some of the stills showed scenes deleted by the censor. A huge banner advertising the film as "from Heaven to Hell with a 'hop head'" was hauled down by request. Despite the criticism, or because of it, business was big.

Mr. Moffitt's condemnation was not only of "Narcotic," but of the Royal's policy since it came under the supervision of Balaban & Katz of Chicago, which has included showings of "Elysia, the Valley of the Nude," and "The Road to Ruin." The nudist film ran three weeks to good business. The Royal's management contends a picture of this type "is the only thing to put the Royal over," as ordinary program films have flopped. To this, Mr. Moffitt replies that at a time when the Catholic church has launched a nationwide movement for rigid censorship and similar movements face the industry from other quarters, this is the worst possible occasion to flaunt "inexcusable sensationalism."

Mr. Moffitt says that because of the Royal's policy there is a great danger that the Kansas City censors will be transformed "from an easy-going board into first-class zealots" under pressure of public sentiment.

REPORTS ON PICTURES SUPPLANT CRITIQUES

Publishers of Ridder Newspapers Say New Policy Is Succeeding and Theatre Advertising Is Reported 20 Per Cent Greater

Publishers of the Victor Ridder chain of 16 eastern newspapers claim that their new policy of substituting a reportorial account of a motion picture, together with a synopsis and an account of the audience reaction, in place of the usual form of personal opinion, or "review" of a motion picture critic, has proved successful, both from the standpoint of exhibitor and public reaction. Theatre advertising was said to have increased 20 per cent.

The idea was first tried out a month ago, in the Ridder Journal of Commerce, in New York. The basic premise was that a motion picture critic's "by-line" is his worst enemy, and that the audiences obviously were better equipped to pass judgment on the form of entertainment they wanted than the so-called "over-intelligent, egotistical critic," according to Julius Cohen, of the Journal, who under the new plan becomes "motion picture reporter," instead of motion picture critic.

Says Reviewer Is Losing Grip

Mr. Cohen said this week that he believes the newspaper reviewer of motion pictures is slowly but surely losing his grip on the reading public. "They are getting wise to him, and it is only a matter of time before publishers everywhere recognize the injustice of the present method of reviewing pictures," he declared.

Mr. Cohen pointed out that "Wonder Bar," when it opened on Broadway, received less than 50 per cent good notices from the newspaper reviewers, which, under ordinary circumstances, would be sufficient to ruin theatre business. However, he added, the public paid little attention to the adverse press reports and crowded the Strand theatre for three weeks. On the other hand, he continued, another picture received four stars from the New York News, tabloid paper, its highest rating, but "couldn't even draw flies."

"A careful perusal of the history of reviewing would probably show that it began as a fertile field for essayists who wrote for the benefit of a limited number of people," Mr. Cohen said. "They chose a book or a play, and around it built a long article, not so much as an opinion on the subject, but as an example of their alleged ability, wit and wisdom.

Quick Information, New Value

"Today, the value of a review is in giving readers quick information about a picture, play or book, particularly in the field of motion pictures with its universal audience. The reviewer should, and must, interpret the general taste, rather than his own. There is a wide divergence between a highbrow, or sophisticate, and the average moviegoer," Mr. Cohen said, adding that the producing companies and theatre owners appear to be pleased with the new plan of reporting audience reactions to the picture, plus the synopsis. Too, letters from readers were said to indicate the feeling on the part of the public that in the light of recent injustices done by certain of the prevalent film reviewing systems in newspapers, a departure is as helpful to patrons as to the exhibitor.

Mr. Cohen declared that some of the critics of the other Ridder newspapers are still fighting the new policy, but, he said, "If I know my critics they will continue to battle until death, unemployment or 'by-line' do them part."

Westerns Lead In School Survey

According to a film survey conducted among 1,100 Madison, Wis., school children by the Madison Council of Parents and Teachers, westerns, comedies and cartoons, and mystery and murder pictures are preferred by the majority of fifth, sixth and eighth grade pupils, respectively.

Parents' advice plays a small part in the selection of films, according to the survey. The percentage of children mentioning various types of pictures in the various grades shows that in the fifth, 57 per cent mentioned westerns; comedies and cartoons were mentioned by 53 per cent, and 36 per cent mentioned murder and mystery. In the sixth grade 52 per cent mentioned comedies and cartoons, 51 per cent, westerns, and 36 per cent, mystery and murder. In the eighth grade mystery and murder rated first with 45 per cent, comedies and cartoons, 40 per cent, and westerns, 35 per cent.

Lou Metzger Heads BIP in America

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Lou Metzger, exhibitor of San Diego, Cal., and former general sales manager for Universal and Columbia, has been appointed American agent for British International Pictures. He will sail late this week from London for New York, where he will open an office in the RKO Building, Radio City.

Arthur Dent, of British International, declared that Mr. Metzger will sell to national distributing companies and will initially offer "Blossom Time," "Red Wagon" and "The Return of Bulldog Drummond."

AMPA Plans Beefsteak

Directors of the AMPA in New York are discussing plans for a beefsteak at the Motion Picture Club, May 22. Following the June 21 meeting, sessions will be dropped for the summer. Armand Denis, explorer and director, speaks at Thursday's luncheon.

EXHIBITORS APPEAL TO PUBLI

From the field of exhibition, from the production front in Hollywood, from the executive desk at the home office and from the typewriters of press commentators has come this week new evidence of the attention aroused and the discussion engendered by the provocative article by Martin Quigley, "The Public Be Damned," which, appearing in a recent issue of Motion Picture Herald, made the point that the feature motion picture, as it is today technically constituted, must be seen from the beginning to be in the fullest degree appreciated.

It is most completely agreed that something should be done about it, and it is equally agreed that the situation constitutes a vital exhibition problem which must sooner or later be faced. It is the expressed contention of Mr. Quigley that sooner is better than later.

Under the impetus of Mr. Quigley's article, there would seem to have been set astir new thought on the matter. The consensus appears to be that a process of education of the theatre's patrons is important to the solution which must eventually be achieved. Meanwhile, the maker, the seller, the ultimate purveyor, the commentator of and about the motion picture speak their minds concerning the problem and Mr. Quigley's presentation of it. And they express their opinions as follows:

R. B. WILBY

A leading showman of the South, Mr. Wilby's faculty of crisp and experienced expression on matters pertinent is well known in the business of the motion picture. He heads the Valatenga Theatres.

We have flirted with about all of the solutions of this thing which we can imagine. We tried the definite fixed running time for shows, bringing about the regular starting hours. That worked out rather badly because of the variation from about 1 hour to an hour and 40 minutes for features. With the 1 hour features we had so many shorts that the show was terrible, which, to our mind, is the worst of all offenses. If, on the other hand, we took, say, 1 hour and 45 minutes as a fixed schedule, then some pictures running an hour and 40 minutes left no place for any variety whatever, which also made for a bad show. After playing along with this for some time, our conclusion was that in our own situations the fixed time of starting shows was not working out well.

We have tried various devices in lobbies giving the time of the beginning of the feature. In some theatres we have a clock arrangement which shows just what subject is on at a given time and what time each of the subjects opens. These in lobbies, however, do not meet the problem for the reason that one must get to the lobby before he finds out, and after the patron is in the lobby, he prefers just to go ahead in even though the feature not be at its beginning.

We have also carried the starting time of the feature in our ads to a very considerable extent but we still find that people do not pay a great deal of attention to this and our telephone calls are about as frequent in the towns in which we do carry the time in the ads as in the others.

I have a personal theory that the number of people who do not come at the beginning of a feature is not as large as you would think.

Mr. Quigley's article is most interesting and certainly demands the consideration and thought of this industry.

E. M. FAY

Mr. Edward M. Fay is chief executive of Fay's Theatres, including the Fay's, Carlton, Capitol, Majestic and the Rialto, all of Providence, R. I., and the Fay's theatre, in Philadelphia.

It is ONE of the industry's problems without doubt and there are many other problems that could be corrected, similar to this one, by concerted action and cooperation if the master minds controlling the industry were so inclined and sincere and had the same interest in doing something constructive for the industry that they have in drawing heavy salaries.

Mr. Quigley's recommendation advising the dropping or adding of short subjects to make the starting time of pictures uniform daily seems to be a practical solution providing theatres in the key cities would cooperate with one another. This policy would retain the continuous performance, a custom which cannot be revolutionized in a hurry, and would impress patrons gradually with the fact that the theatre starts its pictures at regular hours every day. Advertising the starting time of pictures is helpful to certain classes of patrons.

Mr. Quigley's article definitely states the true facts but, unfortunately, few if any in control seem to have time for anything but personal selfish interests.

G. J. SCHAEFER

The vice-president and general manager of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation has just been elected to the presidency and boards of the company's administrative theatre subsidiaries.

I make a point of seeing a great many of our pictures in the theatre and have long felt that something ought to be done, either in the way of educating the public or by proper notice being brought to the public, so that they will see the feature picture from the beginning.

I do believe this is a problem that, sooner or later, will be recognized and corrected by the entire industry.

JACK L. WARNER

Vice-president of Warner Brothers and in charge of production, Mr. Jack L. Warner expresses the thought that elimination of double features is prerequisite to showing pictures "from the start to the finish and not from the middle." He writes as follows:

Martin Quigley's editorial anent the destructive and unfair practice of people seeing a picture from somewhere in the middle to the end and then seeing the first part of the picture, contains much food for serious thought and, what is even more important, serious concerted action on the part of exhibitors.

Everyone will agree with Mr. Quigley that permitting patrons to see a picture backwards does not make for proper presentation of the merits of a picture. But the important question is how to stop that evil

To me, the greatest contributory cause to this destructive practice is the double feature bill. Only with the elimination of double features will it be possible for exhibitors to show pictures the only way they should be shown—from the start to the finish and not from the middle.

By playing double features, exhibitors are stuffing the golden goose (The Public) that lays the golden eggs (admissions) that pay the freight for the entire industry.

It is a positive fact that theatres playing single features with balanced short subjects get a much more favorable audience reaction for the pictures than those playing double features. For one thing, there is a longer spread between the starting time of each feature showing and patrons are able to come to the theatre fully confident of being able to see the feature from start to finish, just as the producers planned it should be seen when making it.

Because of double features it is practically impossible to enter a theatre without running smack into the middle of one or the other of the features. As it is, less than 10 per cent of double feature audiences see both pictures from the opening.

Eliminate double features and you have a grand start toward getting patrons to see pictures to the best advantage.

Once this is done, through education by theatres on their screens—stage address by the manager—in their heralds, house organs and neat signs in the lobbies, patrons can be made to appreciate the advantage of seeing a picture when it starts and not in the middle.

Right now a goodly percentage of theatre-goers prefer to wait outside of the theatre rather than come in the middle of the show. But whatever else is done, it will be ineffective unless double features are replaced with single features and good, well-balanced short subjects. That is the root of not only the seeing the pictures backwards evil, but practically all theatre evils. Advertising the starting time of the single feature in the ads and at the box-office would eliminate this unnecessary wait.

Radio competition is being felt by motion picture theatres. One good way to overcome a large part of this competition would be to install a radio in a very comfortable lounge. Then through screen institutional advertising and heralds, advertise this room where people can come and listen to a favorite program. Only too often, fans will arrive late at the theatre because they wanted to stay home and listen to a favorite radio program. Only too often these radio programs run right up to the starting time of the feature picture. Consequently, the fan arrives late at the theatre. Once exhibitors educate patrons to the fact that they can get to the theatre, listen to their favorite radio program, and still see the entire picture from the start, much of the destructive force of seeing a picture backwards will be eliminated.

ROY W. ADAMS

An exhibitor of long standing, Mr. Adams is manager of the Mason Theatre at Mason, Mich. He has been a consistent reporter to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

I must remark that "The Public Be Damned" is not the attitude of theatres in my territory. Observation shows that most of the theatres in this vicinity observe a regular time for each performance which is announced in connection with their newspaper advertisements, and is usually also posted at the box office, and the cashier or doorman will tell any inquiring patron when the feature—or features—will start.

Of my own patrons a small but noticeable number of discriminating fans have insisted for years upon seeing the feature picture from the beginning or not at all. If the feature has started when they reach the theatre they will wait until another program starts before going in.

The fact that patrons telephone the theatre to learn the starting hour of the feature does not necessarily mean that the manager has neglected to announce his schedule, but very probably that the patron is too indolent to look it up in the theatre page of the newspaper. I have a newspaper advertisement in every edition of my local paper once a week, put heralds into every home twice a week, have paper all over the business section of town and in several store windows, and get 'phone calls about every day to learn if the theatre is open and what is showing. I don't consider these calls a necessary evil; I'm thankful to think I've cracked open their consciousness to the point where they know I'm alive.

DON C. MALLOY

The manager of the Shakespeare Theatre in Chicago, a Warner circuit house, offers a possible solution in the form of program announcements.

The point in your article, "The Public Be Damned," is certainly well taken. During my short time in show business, I have seen the public react to entering a theatre while the feature is running. The biggest majority are always disappointed, and some think it important enough to protest violently.

Long ago, I saw the importance of publishing starting times of features in my programs, and when space permitted, in newspapers, if for no other reason than to afford my patrons an extra courtesy—an added bit of service. But I could never feel that such an idea was anything but a small step forward. The very nature of continuous theatre operation seems to prevent an absolute cure for the subject of our discussion.

However, would such an idea as this be feasible? Suppose you were to show in your programs, for example, the starting and ending times of your short subjects, which would bring out the point that there was a forty or fifty minute period of time when it was more desirable to enter the theatre. For example——

CUT OF FEATURE PICTURE
—Better times to come in—
Between 2:00 & 2:50—4:00 & 4:50—
6:00 & 6:50—8:00 & 8:50—10:00 & 10:50

My idea, of course, is to give greater latitude to people desiring to enter the theatre—to keep them from feeling they had to be there at a certain moment or accept the alternative of missing part of the feature picture. I am convinced that many people remain at home because they know a feature starts at a certain time, too soon for them to get to the theatre.

The next feature might be too late for them. Yet a publishing of the period for your short subjects might have the psycho-

AL LICHTMAN PROPOSES THEATRE ADS SOLUTION

Vice-president and general manager of United Artists Corporation, Mr. Lichtman suggests that theatres advertise prominently the starting time of the feature picture.

Mr. Quigley has raised a very important point that demands the attention of everybody having the best interests of our Industry at heart. It is not practical in our opinion to have reserved seat performances at stated hours, as one of the prime factors which enables the motion picture theatres to exhibit costly productions at popular prices is their ability to give as many as eight performances a day. This enables them to fill their seats many times a day.

My suggestion would be that theatres should advertise prominently the starting time of the feature picture and urge their patrons to so time their attendance as to be able to see each picture from the beginning.

INDEPENDENTS ACT TO BAR RENTAL RISE

First of Three Mass Meetings Held; Allied Session in Chicago Saturday; Companies Speed Plans for Product

While virtually the entire industry was arguing over the future of double bills as a merchandising practice, and exhibitors were organizing protests against a development they feared, that distributors would raise rentals for 1934-35, both independent distributors and the large companies were moving ahead with formation of policies and product schedules for the approaching new sales season.

Independent theatre owners in the East held the first of three mass meetings on Tuesday afternoon, at the Motion Picture Club on Broadway in New York, to organize nationwide protests against the reported plan of producer-distributors to pass along to theatres the cost of the motion picture code through higher rentals, larger percentages and demands for increased playing time in 1934-35. The meeting was held behind closed doors, with 75 exhibitors present. No action was taken but further meetings are planned.

Open warfare between independent producer-distributors and large distributors and the MPTOA appeared inevitable as the independents started to prepare a defense against a movement to abolish double features nationally. This situation is reported on in detail on page 9.

Called by Pennsylvania MPTO

The mass meetings were called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, which invited each of the 49 territorial organizations of theatre owners to attend one of three sectional "Film Buyers' Conventions" in New York, Chicago and on the west coast, principally to "devise an effective program against ruinous film prices."

That the Pennsylvania MPTO's action did not have the endorsement of the national MPTOA was evidenced by a declaration from Ed Kuykendall, national president, who expressed doubt that the protests will accomplish results. "We knew from bitter experience that the film companies would pass NRA costs on to the exhibitors, with the exhibitors passing them on to the public in higher admissions," said Mr. Kuykendall. "There have been protests in the past—the idea is not new—but they never get anywhere."

Directors, leaders and regional vice-presidents of Allied States Association were preparing to leave for Chicago for a two-day session at the Congress Hotel, starting Saturday morning, to talk about higher film rentals, code assessments and the elimination of "filth" from motion pictures.

Only a stubborn refusal by exhibitors to buy new product except on fair terms will save the exhibitors, said Abram F. Myers of Allied.

Meanwhile, both the independent and the large companies were continuing to formulate policies and product schedules for 1934-35.

Fox arranged with Sol Lesser to produce for that company a series of non-western features starring George O'Brien, the first, "When A Man's A Man," starting next month. Sidney R. Kent, president, was due in New York from California to complete convention plans. The meeting will be held May 30th at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York. Fox's 1933-34 production schedule was completed this week, and, at the same time the company and E. W. Hammons, president of Educational and World Wide concluded a deal with John M. Crinnion, head of Amity, whereby Amity will distribute through its 28 exchanges eight additional World Wide features formerly released through Fox, in settlement of an action instituted by Amity some months ago. Features involved include: "The Man Called Back," "Hell Fire" and six Bob Steele Westerns. They give Amity a total of 29 westerns.

Independents Active

Ideal Pictures will have six new features for 1934-35 release. M. J. Kandel leaves New York for Hollywood to arrange production within a week.

Mascot Pictures, in line with its new program of expansion, signed seven writers, including: Earl Snell, C. Edward Roberts, Dore Schary, Douglas Doty, F. Sayre, Marion Orth and Joseph Santley. They are working on new feature product.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will have six '34-35 features produced by Lawrence Weingarten, out of a total of 50 planned. Mr. Weingarten will leave New York for California over the weekend with stories, including "No More Ladies," "Shining Hour" and the Herbert Yardley stories about World War spy systems. Replacing the "Willie Whopper" group of cartoons will be a new color series to be produced by Harmon-Ising, probably one reelers and totaling 12 to 18. Hal Roach will also contribute a new series of color shorts, replacing one of his current Metro series.

Monogram's 1934-35 feature schedule was completely lined up during the week when W. Ray Johnston, president, purchased the last of the stories to make up the proposed 20 releases. The company purchased the two Gene Stratton Porter stories, "Girl of the Limber Lost" and "Keeper of the Bees," and "Women Must Dress," by Tristram Tupper; "Dames and Dynamite," by George Bertholon; "The Mysterious Mr. Wong," by Harry Keeler; "Cheers of the Crowd," by Tristram Tupper, and "Mystery Man," by Albert Payson Terhune.

Resuming Eastern Production

Paramount was unusually active in effecting a completed program for 1934-35, having decided, finally, to resume production in the east. Shortly following the annual sales convention in Los Angeles, on May 18th, the district managers of each division will hold meetings for their salesmen in the field, conferring at New York, Chicago, Atlanta, Boston, Los Angeles, Denver, Kansas City, Dallas, Cleveland and Minneapolis. Twenty-three features will be placed in production within the next three months, according to Emanuel Cohen, in charge of production, who arrived in Hollywood over the weekend, from home office conferences in the east. At the same time it was said that there will be no two-reelers next season; 100 one-reelers and the newsreel will comprise the short subject release schedule. There were 24 two-reelers on the current program. Six "Color Classics" cartoons comprise the only new series, other one-reel groups for 1934-35 including: 25 "Varieties," 18 "Headliners," 13 "Pictorials," 13 Grantland Rice "Sportlights," 12 "Popeye, the Sailor," 12 "Betty Boops." The one-reel "Screen Songs" and "Screen Souvenirs" will be dropped.

Paramount's decision to resume feature production at its Long Island studio at Astoria, abandoned for production concentration in Hollywood quite some time ago, and since used by Erpi's Eastern Service Sound Studios, Inc., came concurrently with an arrangement with Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur to write and produce at Astoria four Paramount features for 1934-35. The team will head a separate unit. The first two Paramount features to be made in the east will star Carlos Gardel, tango singer. They will be Spanish language productions for world wide distribution, work commencing next week. Louis Gasnier will direct both.

Realart Picture Corporation passed control to Ira H. Simmons and a group of independents who plan to produce six features for the new season.

Regal Distributing, headed by S. S. Krellberg, announced a new serial, "The Lost City."

Fifth Cantor Musical Comedy

United Artists' schedule will include Eddie Cantor's fifth annual screen musical comedy, "The Treasure Hunt," to which Roy Del Ruth was this week assigned direction.

Universal's proposed stock company was in the making, with David Werner, casting director at Universal City leaving for a tour throughout the country in search of talent. With the return to New York last week of James R. Grainger, in charge of sales, the company announced the balance of this year's program, as follows: "The Black Cat," May 7th release; "Affairs of a Gentleman," May 14th; "The Love Captive," May 21st; "Little Man, What Now?", May 28th; and seven others. Universal will make 36 features, 26 two-reelers and 52 one-reelers for 1934-35, including six westerns starring Buck Jones. There will also be four serials. The annual sales convention will be held in New York, June 5th to 7th.

Warners will curtail current filming activities to two features weekly, completing 1933-34 production in time to start on next year's pictures late in June. Sixty are scheduled for release this season, of which 53 have been completed. May 14th will mark the resumption of short subject production at the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn. Norman Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, returned to the home office this week from an eleven-week exchange tour, and immediately started discussions to line up the 1934-35 shorts schedule.

CALLS BLOCK BOOKING MONOPOLY UNDER LAW

In his address concerning the NRA, its accomplishments and problems, at Columbus, Ohio, last Friday, Administrator Hugh S. Johnson made one reference to the motion picture industry.

Noting, in retort to the charge that big interests write the various industry codes, that codes are edited by NRA with a view to providing for the interests of the small operator, Mr. Johnson said:

"There is one qualification . . . that there are cases of monopoly based on statutory patent pools—there is block booking in the movies based on copyright laws, and various other disadvantages of small operators with which NRA has nothing to do and over which it has no power of control—because they are permitted under other laws, but the charge that any code of fair competition hurts any small operator is the exact reverse of fact. . . . "

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

TEN YEARS AGO THIS WEEK: Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players, denounced monopolies. . . . Cecil DeMille was billed by Famous as "the greatest showman-producer in the business." . . . Mickey Neilan had just finished directing Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." . . . And then Mary broke down and admitted, "It is no use pretending that I am a Duse or a Bernhardt and go on acting forever; I think it is time to quit." (After that she made "Little Annie Rooney," "Sparrows," "My Best Girl," "Coquette," "Taming of the Shrew," "Forever Yours," "Kiki," "Secrets.")

Viola Dana and Norma Talmadge were tied for first place in the Herald's "Favorite Star" contest. . . . And Photoplay's readers picked these eight "most beautiful stars": Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, Pola Negri, Thomas Meighan, Norma Talmadge, Harold Lloyd, Tom Mix. . . .

The Balaban and Katz Midwest circuit, after consummating "one of the largest deals in motion picture history," reached the staggering proportions of 50 theatres. . . . Organized in Chicago by Al Steffes was a national exhibitor organization, Allied States, for the purpose of effecting "unified exhibitor action on all matters of national concern." . . .

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was born. . . . Bringing under one control "the gigantic circuit" of 106 theatres, making Loew's "the biggest theatre owners in the country." . . . At the helm of this "mammoth" corporation were: Marcus Loew, president; Jimmy Grainger, in charge of distribution; Louie Mayer, in charge of production. . . .

The colorful gas-lit stage of the gay 90's is the link which connects theatricals with silver-haired Mrs. August Belmont, who is engaged at the moment in a campaign to uplift the film through the medium of the Motion Picture Research Council. Mrs. Belmont, then Eleanor Robson, bowed to an audience for the first time from the stage of the old California theatre in San Francisco, some 37 years ago. She finally reached Broadway in 1905, after eight years in stock, opening at the New Amsterdam theatre in "She Stoops to Conquer." Miss Robson retired from the stage on the afternoon of February 26th, 1910, when she became the bride of the noted August Belmont, in New York. She has spent the past quarter century in social and philanthropic endeavors.

If P. J. Wood, Ohio exhibitor leader, does not receive an answer to the letter which he sent to Hugh Johnson at NRA protesting exhibitor code assessments, it is because he addressed him as "Colonel." Mr. Johnson is a Brigadier General on the staff of the regular United States Army, the originator of the plan for the selective draft which was the medium for mobilizing most of the U. S. forces used in the World War. In military and governmental circles on Capitol Hill, it would be said that Mr. Wood made a faux pas.

Motion picture folk traveling eastward from California through the Panama Canal route witnessed an unusual incident of the sea when their ship collided with a rare specimen of a whale shark, about 45 feet in length. It made a great disturbance and a phosphorescent glow as it was pushed through the water by the ship, reducing the speed of the steamer and causing it to vibrate as the body twisted, finally cutting in two and falling away after eight hours across the bow.

MR. HOWARD E. JAMEYSON, familiarly known as "Jamey," and district manager of some 24 Fox theatres in the midwest, is pained to note our Mr. Terry Ramsaye's frequent editorial mention about trout fishing. He presumes, in a belittling tone, that Mr. Ramsaye's early fishing experiences were on the Kaw Rover in Kansas, near his cradle at Tonganoxie, in connection with some inconspicuous yellow-bellied cats, or, at best, a few sun perch of the 35 millemeter variety.

"I am just wondering," writes Mr. Jameyson to Mr. Ramsaye, "whether you are like all the rest of the effete Abercrombie and Fitch sportsmen? I have heard about the genteel trout fishing on the leased streams of the east, and if what I have heard is true, it must be great sport—for Boy Scouts!

"Please be advised," concluded Mr. Jameyson, boastfully, "that I grew up on trout fishing, and was raised in the shadow of Pike's Peak. We catch trout as is trout! You should come out, some time."

Mr. Ramsaye was quite disturbed over the libel, and replied:

> "While it is true that I did some fishing in Big Stranger Creek, a Leavenworth County tributary to the Kaw, my first fishing experience was in the somewhat successful pursuit of the flounder in erudite and historic Massachusetts Bay. Furthermore, I have done post-graduate work with the dry fly on the better waters of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia; and I have, sir, landed a bona fide fontanalis brook trout weighing 8¾ pounds from the waters of the Nipigon River in the great pool at the foot of the Falls of the Virgin. I also beg to state that I am familiar with the muskalonge in his larger dimensions and more uncivilized moments, as he is found in the upper region of the French River and Lake Nipissing. Sir, do not speak to me of yellow-bellied cats and puling sunfish!
> "In other words, Mr. Jameyson, when I speak of fishing, I mean fishing!"

Mr. Jameyson passed.

The walls were filled with pictures and pictures and pictures of herself in polo clothes and polo clothes and polo clothes. Nicely polished mallets were leaning together in a corner. Polo balls were lined up neatly in an expensive glass cabinet.

"How nice," complimented the interviewer, "have you any pictures of yourself in action?"

"I love the atmosphere of the game about the house," gurgled the actress, "but I really don't play polo."

RESTING quietly atop his native North Carolina hills, in the "Land of the Sky," is a tottering old churchman, just turning seventy, who was basically responsible for filling the coffers of the motion picture business with some $15,000,000, and yet is now without money in his last days. The industry will long remember him as the Reverend Thomas Dixon, Baptist, who wrote "The Clansman," from which the son of the late General Jacob Wark Griffith built "Birth of a Nation," the most successful box-office performer in the history of the screen.

Doctor Dixon was a novelist and a playwright of note long before David Wark Lewelyn Griffith walked into the old brownstone Biograph studio at 11 East 14th St. in New York, back in 1907, looking for a job as an actor. In that year Dixon finished his "Clansman," his third successful novel. It did not reach the screen until eight years later. Writing was only a sideline. He was recognized as a good lawyer and was qualified to practice before the bar of any federal court in the country. Royalties of $1,250,000 earned by his novels and plays are now only memories.

LOCAL BOARDS RUSH RULINGS UNDER CODE

New Opportunity to Sign Assent Blanks Considered; NRA Prepares Way for Changes; Darrow Report Still Withheld

Code Questions and Answers ..... Page 56
Pictures of Local Board Members ..... Page 58

Delayed for weeks by the complicated processes of organization, the motion picture code enforcement agencies in the field now appear to be making progress in effecting corrective measures in many competitive situations in distribution and exhibition.

The Local Grievance Boards were adjusting complaints of overbuying, cut-rate admissions, burdensome minimum admissions restrictions, coercion on product deals, free admissions and two-for-ones, unfair advertising, non-theatrical competition and other troublesome practices.

Local Clearance Boards in several sections had completed schedules to give theatre owners equitable protection.

An Aid to the Independent

Exchange executives in the field with no theatre affiliations are said to hold the opinion that the code will benefit the "little-man," so called, and, to a great extent solve the problems that have vexed distributor-exhibitor relations.

Where relatively small film buyers have felt themselves discriminated against, the distributors' explanation has been that circuit opposition merits first choice of product or a longer period of protection. But now, under the Local Boards, it was said that many of the circuits will not find it as easy to get as many concessions.

Exhibitors Protest Assessments

The Code Authority received protests from several hundred theatre owners against the method of assessing theatres for code expenses according to populations and types of run. They charge this is unequitable for subsequents.

Added to the complaints filed last week by Allied States Association, the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, the Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, and individual exhibitors, were protests voiced by the MPTO of Maryland, MPTO of Western New York, and others.

The Code Authority had received $22,000 in assessments for the first six months of 1934 from some 3,500 theatre owners, approximately one-fourth of the amount to be paid. The Authority will mail a second notice to remit, and failure to do so may bring a stoppage of product inasmuch as the Authority has ruled that unless the assessment is paid within the specified period, no exhibitor shall show a motion picture bearing the Blue Eagle, and practically all films carry this NRA emblem.

NRA Outlines Budget System

Administrator Hugh Johnson of the NRA sent to all Code Authorities instructions on the preparation of working budgets under their codes, suggesting they consider the following forms of expenses, and reminding them that industry members of boards are not to be paid, except for traveling expenses:

I—CODE AUTHORITY EXPENSES
- A. Salaries
  - 1. Executive Secretary
  - 2. Other Executive Officers
  - 3. Clerical Employees
  - 4. Other Employees By Classes
- B. Office Expenses
  - 1. Rent and Light
  - 2. Office Equipment
  - 3. Office Supplies
  - 4. Stationery and Postage
  - 5. Telephone and Telegraph
  - 6. Miscellaneous
- C. Traveling Expenses
  - 1. Members of Code Authority
  - 2. Employees
- D. Incidental
  - 1. Legal Fees
  - 2. Accountant's Fees
  - 3. Insurance
  - 4. Miscellaneous

II—COMMITTEES AND FACILITIES THEREOF
(The expenses of these boards should be itemized as in A, B and C above)
- A. Trade Practice Complaints Committee
- B. Industry's Share of the Expenses of Industrial Relations Committee
- C. Other Committees

III—OTHER AGENCIES
(The expenses of these boards should likewise be itemized as hereinabove described)
- A. Local Grievance Boards
- B. Local Clearance Boards
- C. Other Local Boards or Agencies

General Johnson followed through with a statement from NRA headquarters explaining a misunderstanding on the part of several Code Authorities regarding the issuance of the Blue Eagle under codes. He said the insignia will remain the property of the United States Government and will not be issued to those certified as code violators and will be withdrawn from those who have been "administratively" found to be in violation of their code.

It appeared possible that those in the motion picture industry who had not signed the code assent blank may be given another opportunity. On Friday the Code Authority in New York will decide the question, following receipt of requests from hundreds of exhibitors for permission to sign acceptance. John C. Flinn, secretary of the Code Authority, predicted that some 2,500 signatures would be sent in during the first week if the Authority ruled that such tardy assents would be valid.

NRA Paves Way for Code Changes

General Johnson this week opened the way for industries to seek amendments to, modifications and stays of, exceptions to and exemptions from any and all approved codes. The regulations will allow the Code Authority, or the NRA Administrator, or any one or more members or representatives of an industry or anyone whose affairs are seriously affected by the provisions of a code, to propose a modification or exemption therefrom. Such proposals are to be filed with the Code Authority or the NRA Administrator.

Upon the receipt of such request, the Authority shall send a notice of the proposal to each trade association interested and to each member of the industry whose name and address is filed with the Code Authority.

Within ten days, the Code Authority, through the Administration member (Sol Rosenblatt), shall forward to the NRA at Washington a statement of the percentage of members of the industry by number and volume, if possible, who in writing have approved or disapproved of said petition, together with the Code Authority's recommendation.

It is provided, however, that where applicants show themselves truly representative of the industry, or where the code authorizes the Code Authority to propose modifications to be effective when duly approved, then notice of the proposed changes need not be sent to trade associations and members of the industry, but the Authority shall, within ten days, forward to the NRA, through the Administration's member, a complete record with the Authority's recommendations.

If the Code Authority determines that the proposal does not merit approval it shall so notify the parties involved and certify such determination, with a complete record, to the NRA.

The Hollywood Situation

Various studio code committees were continuing enforcement activities, while the Code Authority is understood to have established the fact that the studios would be unable to stand the increase in overhead of a general 10 per cent wage increase and a reduction of working hours, in line with the recent recommendation of the President for a 30-hour week. Pat Casey, chairman of the producers' labor committee, appointed a committee to settle studio labor disputes under the code.

Clarence Darrow's report of the Recovery Review Board's investigation of the motion picture and other industrial codes was sent to President Roosevelt on Friday. On Wednesday the White House had not made public the report and it was indicated that publication may be held up indefinitely.

It was intimated in Washington that that section of the Darrow report covering the motion picture code contains specific recommendations for reopening the code, proposing the elimination of block booking and the insertion of a "right-to-buy" clause. It was also understood to propose a broadening of the scope and application of the 10 per cent cancellation clause.

Coincidentally, it was learned that John F. Sinclair, a member of the Recovery Review Board, sent to the White House under separate cover his own personal report and recommendations on the eight codes investigated. At the same time, Mr. Sinclair resigned his position on the Board, the reason being, it was said, because of the differences of opinion between him and Mr. Darrow.

Code Operations in the Field

Field code board activities were interrupted slightly when John C. Flinn, Code Authority secretary, called board secretaries together at strategic spots to instruct them on methods of procedure. He returned to New York after having conferred with secretaries from nearby territories at Los Angeles and Chicago. He will meet the eastern secretaries in New York next Tuesday.

Mr. Flinn reported all boards are working "100 per cent satisfactorily, and they are doing much good for the industry." He said some of the boards are meeting three times weekly.

The following key city activities of Grievance Boards and Clearance Boards were reported this week:

CHICAGO

Grievance Board withheld decision pending a Code Authority decision in a case charging overbuying, brought against Schoenstadt Brothers by Ben Bartlestein, of the Annette theatre, Chicago. The Schoenstadts claim that the Board does not have power to act because the act complained of was performed last September, whereas the code did not become effective until December 7. Mr. Bartlestein also filed a complaint against Paramount charging failure to deliver a contract.

CINCINNATI

Several complaints were thrown out by the Grievance Board because the complainants had

PLAY "WOULD CUT QUITE A FIGURE"

Declares DeCasseres After Seeing 'Jig Saw'; Four Other Shows of Broadway Stage Are Discussed

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

JIG SAW

The Theatre Guild has been wearing the tragic mask—"Mary of Scotland," "They Shall Not Die!" and "Days Without End." It smiled a little in "Ah, Wilderness!" (which Will Rogers will probably do on the screen), and it went foolish—but delightfully and competently so—in its last production of the season, "Jig Saw," a penthouse gin-sizzler by Dawn Powell.

It will make the screen without a doubt because it is smart, the dialogue snaps and cuts, there are drinks for everybody, and there is a double sex angle, cute but not new.

The Guild, as always under the expert eye of Philip Moeller and Lee Simonson, did a good job. Without this intelligent direction and such fine actors and actresses as Ernest Truex, Spring Byington, Cora Witherspoon, Helen Westley, Charles Richman et al., the play would not have jelled, for its plot is as thin as a 15-cent cocktail.

We overlook Central Park in summer. Claire Burnell (La Byington) keeps a crazy house. Her lover is a Baltimore married man, Del March (Truex). It's been a fifteen-year-old affair. Claire is married but not living with the fellow.

Home from Paris comes Claire's puritanical, idealizing (but oh-pretty-smart) daughter, Julie. (Here's a fine mock-serious part for some screen actress.)

Claire has taken on another fellow, Nate Gifford (Eliot Cabot). Julie met him in Paris at a skating-rink. Well, the cleverness and the drinks flow while we become greatly amused at the fencing between Claire's two lovers and see Julie walk off with mama's new sweetheart, Nate. This little demure lass, Julie, takes Nate against his will and in some bully scenes.

It is all swanky High Ritz, literate farce, and with a tailor-made cast (the Freddy March-Genevieve Tobin-Una Merkel-Roland Young-Herbert Marshall Diamond Horseshoe Set) it would cut quite a figure on the screen as an entertaining quarter's worth.

PICNIC

Gretchen Damrosch is the leading disciple in the drama of that great Russian, Anton Chekhov, master short-story teller and the author of three or four dramas that for portrayal of the Boredom that perpetually follows the human race (and how we pathetically stuff it with illusions, which, in turn bore us to death) has never been exceeded by any playwright for sheer power and overwhelming pessimism.

Miss Damrosch's latest presentation of the Chekhov theme is called "Picnic" (Arthur J. Beckhard producing). She tells a slow-moving tale of cumulative interest that might have been so much better if she had cut loose from the Russian and gone on her own. And why doesn't Miss Damrosch cut loose? She has unquestionably great gifts. She can create character, literate and penetrating dialogue, she knows stage technique, and has imagination.

A somewhat fading family of gentility and former wealth live in the country near New York. Helene (Jean Adair) is a nagger. Her maiden sister, Lois (Esther Dale), is elderly and has missed romance. Philip, a nephew, is for Revolutionary Uplift. Robert, brother of Helene and Lois, is a cheerful, fairly well-to-do lawyer.

Now, the play turns on the effect of these two radicals on the characters of the American gentle-folk and their friends. The upshot of it is that at a picnic Robert runs off with Vera, and Lois, the sex-starved, goes with Guba, to "mother him" while he fires the Ephesian Dome of Capitalism. Even the servants leave. The picnic-moon did the job.

There are three or four good comedy characters in this play, and what with the romance, the unexpected break-aways and the clean-cut dialogue, there is plenty of material for an odd, a quite different but a very interesting picture. It needs pepping.

Picture value, 70 per cent.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA

If anyone wants to know just what immense progress we have really made both in stage plays and pictures, he should go to see either a play by Ibsen or Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead."

Nathan Zatkin, with the best and highest intentions in the world, put on the old Norseman's (thank God!—Norway recognized at last, although it took an Ibsen revival to do it!) "The Lady from the Sea," with a none too competent cast.

Well, this old "masterpiece" of fifty years ago is practically unintelligible today. It tells the story of a woman who, having to decide between her husband and a sort of mystical lover of a former time, decides for the husband when the latter gives her her choice.

But make no mistake about this: Old Daddy Ibsen knew his technique, and no one has ever bettered him. Where he has lost out is in his ingrown dialogue. We spit out everything now—too much so. Old Henrik may return when we go romantic and subtle again.

PLAYS' RATINGS FOR THE SCREEN

Broadway stage plays reviewed in this issue for screen possibilities, by Benjamin DeCasseres, noted critic and essayist, are given the following percentages by him:

"Jig Saw," 70 per cent.
"Picnic," 70 per cent.
"The Lady from the Sea," 0 per cent.
"Late Wisdom," —5 per cent.
"Love Kills," 0 per cent.

LATE WISDOM

As Percy Hammond, the Noah Webster of all critics, said of Nathan Sherman's "Late Wisdom," "the first-nighters retched audibly."

Well, perk up, ye Hollywood producers! Ye have been panned for stupidity and congenital moronity until your very shoelaces dropped their tinny heads in sorrow and shame. But, sez I to you, for sheer banality and obfuscated imbecility nothing can approach some of these Broadway legit. hatchings.

"Late Wisdom" folded in two nights, and there is hardly anything in it that I can recommend to anybody in the picture business who has evolved from post-Kalem days.

Frank Dutton is a rubber-goods magnate. A chemist in Frank's employ invents something that will upset the industry. Creeps up Greedy Wall Streeter who seeks to cop de woiks. (Drama sequence here: see any old Wall Street silent and jam in.)

Sex: Dutton is wife-inhibited, apparently. She "misunderstands" Frank (meaning, she's got the sap's ultimate number.)

Frank has a yen for his secretary. Victory! Black out. Then—"late wisdom"—he gets tired of her. "Here's a check, Nancy." She spurns check.

Do you remember when King Baggot and Flora Finch used to play it?

Picture value, 5 per cent.

LOVE KILLS

In this play, "Love Kills," most of the audience took part. Before the terrible first act was over, pit and gallery began to guy the lines of those persons clumped on the stage.

"Love Kills," as you guessed, hit a new low in play-making. Every line was a Joe Miller. There is something in it about a sold woman. And maybe—who knew?—white-slavery. Then there was something that we guessed was Financial Ruin—but no one was sure (some fellow started a game of solitaire on the floor of an orchestra aisle).

The next sequence brought us suicide—this was also questioned by an irreverent and bawdy fellow in the balcony. Poison stalked the boards. A window-jumper piled on the merriment. A woman was without a job (dice-rattling was plainly heard in a box).

Just before the gay evening ended a fellow asleep next to me said out loud, "I'll come clean, captain!"

Those who snored: Walter Winchell, Konrad Bercovici, Gilbert Gabriel.

DERBY IS KINDER TO REELS THAN INSULL

Financier "Races to Chicago," Say Newspapers, with U. S. Disqualifying Newsreels, but All Catch Cavalcade Doing It

The past week provided the film newsreel men with somewhat of a field day—literally and figuratively—offering them everything from a Kentucky derby to the arrival in New York on Monday of America's most noted wanderer, one Mr. Samuel Insull.

The Kentucky Derby was run at Churchill Downs, in the environs of Louisville, on Saturday. The winner, in 2:04 minutes, was a horse called Cavalcade. The Fox group were on deck early. In addition to four Fox crews, Paramount had five crews on hand; Pathe, four, and Universal, three. The Hearst Metrotone reel still is being made by Fox, and will continue to be until September, when the present contract expires. After that, Mr. Hearst's men will have to cover their own Derbies.

Clem McCarthy for Pathe and Graham McNamee for the Universal reel were the only commentators present; Ed Thorgenson of Fox and Ralph Cram of Hearst did their talking in the New York studios.

One of the most notable evidences of Saturday's influence of the Sport of Kings on the commentators was the marked hovering between the English and American pronunciations of the name of the race. Whether Derby should be pronounced "darby," "durby," or even "doiby," has long puzzled even the radio announcers.

"Derby" Is a Bowler Hat

Strangely enough, when Great Britain's premier sportsman—the Earl of Derby—after whom the Kentucky event was named, saw the Churchill Downs race, he informed questioners on the subject that he didn't much care.

"All I know is that my name is pronounced "Darby," his Lordship maintained. "This is a good race, whatever you call it, but I do know that a 'derby' is a bowler hat."

Samuel Insull apparently proved a bit more difficult to photograph than was the Derby.

The State Department had planned his arrival in New York harbor and the subsequent "escape" to Chicago with great secrecy. The State Department even went so far as to "request" the radio networks to refrain from any news broadcasts of the former utilities magnate's arrival.

One Microphone, Gets Little

The only newsreel microphone which got close enough to Mr. Insull received comparatively little satisfaction from him.

"I have nothing to say. I have made my statement to the press," Mr. Insull told the film men.

In any case, despite the fact that Paramount sailed down the bay to welcome Mr. Insull in a plane and the rest of the reels besieged him on tugs engaged for the occasion, it was reported that the photographing of Mr. Insull's return from "foreign strands" was generally pretty unsatisfactory.

The New York daily press obviously had beaten the film men to the gun, for the noon editions carried feature interviews and banner headlines which screamed:

"Insull Races to Chicago."

Cavalcade's time was 2:04 minutes.

Fox Settlement Seen by Sept. 1

A settlement in the Woolf-Shanberg court actions in Kansas City, which are holding up reorganization of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Companies, is now expected around June 2. Two months after that date, it is estimated, will be required to declare a dividend to creditors and dispose of various other matters, with September I set as the final date for settlement.

Though the Pacific Coast division of Fox West Coast completes reorganization soon, as reported, the companies tied up in bankruptcy in Kansas City still could remain in their present status, it is pointed out. It has been expected that the west coast group would be out of bankruptcy first, since they have met no opposition such as offered by M. B. Shanberg and Herbert M. Woolf in Kansas City.

Persons reputedly "on the inside" say the delay in working out a settlement with the former Midland owners has been occasioned by Chase National Bank's opposition to paying their claim of almost $500,000 out of its resources. Chase National is said to be unwilling to do any more financing of Fox West Coast and insists on having Woolf and Shanberg compensated out of the theatres' current profits. Since the circuit's operations have not been showing a profit, this so far has not been possible, but a settlement is being worked out with a view to reorganization, it has been unofficially declared.

Chase National is dealing with Woolf and Shanberg because they hold a claim secured by prior liens. Non-secured creditors will have to wait until the sale of the properties for their share of the proceeds.

In New York, no plans for reorganization of Fox Theatres Corporation are in sight and it probably will be some time before the circuit is brought out of receivership, William E. Atkinson, president and receiver, said this week.

While the circuit does not operate any theatres, gross annual rentals for its five units average around $350,000. In addition, rentals are coming in from commercial properties owned in New England. Theatres owned and leased are:

The Academy of Music, leased to Skouras; Audubon in New York and the Fox in Elizabeth, N. J., to Fox Metropolitan Playhouses; Isis, Denver, to Rick Ricketson of Fox Rocky Mountain; Nelson, Springfield, Mass., to Harry C. Arthur.

Columbia Pictures Corporation has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on the preferred stock, payable June 1 to stock of record May 17.

Zanuck on Hunt For 'Big' Stories

Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of 20th Century Pictures production, arrived in New York this week from California amid all the publicity attendant upon the success of his "The House of Rothschild." En route to Europe and Africa for a three-month business and shooting trip, Mr. Zanuck was planning to stay in New York for six days only, spending that time conferring with authors and completing arrangements for purchase of stories for 1934-35.

While Mr. Zanuck has produced twelve pictures during the first year of 20th Century, the exact number he plans for the new season has not been made known. Three of the current twelve—"The Affairs of Cellini," "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back," and "The Last Gentleman," will be held to begin the autumn presentation list of United Artists, through which all 20th Century pictures are released.

Thus far, Mr. Zanuck has announced the purchase of but four new stories for production late in August, when he returns to Hollywood. These are "Half Angel," magazine serial by Fanny Heaslip Lee, planned for Constance Bennett and Fredric March; "Richelieu," starring George Arliss; "The Mighty Barnum," written by Gene Fowler and Bess Meredyth for Wallace Beery, and "The Red Cat," a stage play to be produced in New York by 20th Century in association with A. H. Woods.

Mr. Zanuck expected to buy at least six other stories while in New York.

The present trend of public taste, he said, is for subjects which are big and important. And so he is contemplating a picture dealing with British imperialism in India, possibly another on the life of the Queen of Sheba, and still another on life in Arabia, which he will visit next month. The 20th Century producer is a staunch supporter of newspaper headlines as the source of the most interesting stories, and holds that star names, unless supported by good, substantial stories, are valueless.

"Social Control" Of Screen Urged

Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, on Tuesday in Washington advocated "social control" of motion pictures, representing a "trusteeship in the best interests of the whole people." Dr. Morgan was addressing a conference on educational uses of the radio.

His recommendations pertaining to films were part of a general proposal that the principle of public control be applied to broadcasting, the press and motion pictures as the three greatest mediums of transmitting culture to the nation.

In New York, crime pictures were condemned at the opening session of the 151st convention of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York. A resolution was offered calling upon the Catholic Church, the Federal Council of Churches and leaders of the Jewish faith to unite and bring pressure to bear on producers who make such films.

logical effect of more leisure time for them to arrive at the theatre, and be a direct build-up for your business. It seems to me that people could be educated to appreciate and use such an idea.

Let's have more such questions for open discussion.

JACK FINK

The manager of the Capital Theatre in Miami, Fla., is one of the individual theatre executives in the Wometco circuit, operating houses in Miami, Miami Beach, West Palm Beach and Cocoanut Grove, Miami.

One of the most forceful articles ever to appear in a trade paper was your recent editorial on "The Public Be Damned." Needless to say it created a deep impression among the managers comprising the Wometca group of theatres, in this city.

At our weekly managers' meeting the article came in for a round table discussion, terminating in the unanimous opinion that something should be done about letting patrons know the starting time of the feature picture.

The writer and Mr. Sonny Shepherd were appointed a committee to call on both newspapers, seeking their cooperation, the result being that we were successful in putting across the plan with the evening paper, but met opposition from the editorial staff of the morning publication. However, we are not drawing the line at newspaper publication alone. A plan was suggested and approved for each theatre to place in the most practical place in, on or near the box-office a display in the form of a large clock with the hands pointing to the starting time of the next feature. Above the face of the clock there will be copy reading "THE ——— IS NOW ON THE SCREEN. . . . THE NEXT FEATURE STARTS AT ———." The first blank is to be filled in with an insert reading COMEDY, NEWS, CARTOON or NOVELTY depending on what happens to be on the screen. The change will be made by the doorman or curbman.

We will be glad to mail you a photograph of this display as soon as our art department completes same.

In the meantime, we urge you to keep up your excellent suggestions for the improvement of motion picture exhibition. Please accept our heartiest congratulations.

PAUL COVEY

As manager of the Beaver Theatre, at Beaver, Okla., Mr. Covey says he is going to do something about the matter of getting his patrons into the theatre before the feature starts.

I am going to try and swing the majority of my patrons into the habit of getting into the theatre before the feature starts, by hammering at them with trailers and also in the newspaper ads, heralds, etc.

I think this will work many benefits, not only make the feature more engrossing, but also lessen confusion of patrons coming in and going out during the feature.

J. M. Blanchard, managing the Strand theatre at Sunbury, Pa., is trying to educate his community to starting times in his newspaper advertisements.

W. J. POWELL

The manager of the Lonet Theatre at Wellington, Ohio, is a close student of affairs of the theatre. His comment on product he has played is a regular contribution to "What the Picture Did for Me."

I most heartily concur in the opinion advanced in your recent editorial that many worthwhile features are condemned by patrons for no other reason than that they are not concurrently viewed; there being few pictures whose entertainment values are not lessened, to a greater or lesser degree, for patrons who enter the theatre after the feature has begun.

Even admitting that we are practically unanimous in agreement on this subject, I still fail to see what we are going to do about it. In spite of the fact that for fifteen years I have published, day after day, week after week, the starting time of my shows, there has never been a period in all that time when so many people make their entrance during the showing of the feature as right now. For fifteen years I have also made it a uniform rule that no patrons are to be seated on the last reel of a feature: and, again, I find patrons complaining against this practice as never before.

Time after time I have stood at my entrance door on mystery pictures and begged patrons not to enter in the middle of the feature, explaining that it would utterly spoil the picture for them, but not ten per cent could be induced to wait until the next show. I am convinced that if I were to refuse entrance to my theatre during the showing of the feature I would lose so much patronage that I could not continue to operate.

I would classify the matter under complaint in your editorial as a generally recognized destructive practice—but one that is unavoidable and without a satisfactory remedy.

A. E. HANCOCK

A salesman before entering the motion picture field 13 years ago, Mr. Hancock operates the Columbia Theatre at Columbia City, Ind. His pointed remarks appear regularly in "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

We have found it very hard to regulate the other fellow's habits.

I am in complete accord that many pictures are spoiled through entrance in the middle or any part of them.

Our ads carry the time of box office opening, and also when the show starts. True, we do not advertise the time that the feature starts, but we watch our schedule and do not miss by five minutes on the second show, from the time advertised.

Though we carry substantial ads in the paper, it is surprising the number of phone calls that we get as to what the feature is, and what and who are the cast, which shows that the public is not very observant of the ads that are run.

I am frank in saying that I do not know the remedy for this, but our patrons should know from our ads that there is some twenty minutes of shorts, usually, before the feature goes on.

Our box office opens on the minute and the show the same.

JOHN M. CLOUD

From outside the motion picture field, Mr. John M. Cloud of "Playthings" magazine, "a business monthly for toy men," writes that many a picture has been ruined for persons coming into the theatre after the showing of the production has started.

I sincerely believe that the motion picture exhibitors should give some thought to the public and take action on your suggestion that the time that the feature picture, or pictures, are shown should be listed in the advertisement or somewhere on the movie page of the newspaper. Exhibitors who do this will be serving the public and will be helping themselves. As an ardent moviegoer I know that there is nothing more disconcerting than to walk into a picture house and get your first impression of the picture in its closing stage. Many a fine picture has been ruined for people who have come into the house well after the picture has started.

I live in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., and that city handles the problem in an excellent fashion. The Daily Argus, the city's newspaper, prints a movie time table and this table lists the various pictures that are showing and the time that each one begins. The motion picture houses are: Loew's, Proctors, The Embassy and The Plaza. This time table which appears on the same page as the advertisements of the picture exhibitors is used extensively by a large number of my friends.

S. H. RICH

The proprietor of the Rich theatre at Montpelier, Idaho, is an aggressive showman and a regular contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me" department.

I honestly believe that every first-run house could have a better house and make more money by having two shows daily. Many a good picture is spoiled by people who arrive in the middle of a picture, and of course are unable to properly follow it.

Keep up the good work.

J. M. BLANCHARD

The manager of the Strand theatre at Sunbury, Pennsylvania, comments that the motion picture theatre business "is no longer a 'drop-in' business."

Since the advent of talking pictures the Strand theatre at Sunbury, also the other theatres in Sunbury which we have in charge, have always advertised the starting time of the shows and the feature. The public know that there will be one of two times: 2:00, 3:45, 5:30, 7:15, 9:00, or 2:00, 4:15, 6:30 and 8:45. Now what they want to know is which schedule we are using and if we don't let them know they will find out over the telephone, which is a great deal of trouble for the house as well as the patron, and I believe you often lose a customer who will not go to the trouble to phone in. At least you have started them into the picture in a better frame of mind if they read the time in the ad and are saved the trouble of telephoning in.

This, no doubt, seems of more importance to the old-timers than it does to the new blood, who seem to have an entirely different slant on the entertainment game. They seem to have the same feeling that the majority of the publicity men put into their press sheets, that the world at large is absolutely dippy about moving pictures and the people that make them. The play is the thing and it is getting to a point where it has got to come clean and it is also getting to a point where you have got to have action.

Many of the failures are due to the way a picture is handled. The public is no different in Sunbury than it is in Seattle, but bring a man in the middle of "Death Takes a Holiday" or any other worthwhile picture, and you have spoiled the picture for that patron. This business is no longer a "drop in" business. The people prefer to go at a certain time and see a performance start if they have some way of finding out what that time might be. It is just as big a mistake to seat people during the last half of the picture; it is not fair to the patron already seated.

A short time ago I stood in front of a large city theatre, an ace house. A woman said to a man in uniform standing by the box office, "What time does the seven o'clock show start?" The man answered, "At seven o'clock" and had a good, hearty laugh. The woman was offended and walked away. We can't keep this kind of stuff up and get by with it.

W. WARD MARSH

Motion picture editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Mr. Marsh takes up the subject of continuous performances in his Sunday column, "One Moment, Please!"

One day in the distant future something will be done about it. The most encouraging sign right now is the fact that critics are beginning to write about it.

I'm referring to one of my most ancient "pet peeves"; that of showing continuous programs of motion pictures, thereby permitting audiences to see stories from any point backward or forward. That is a practice which ruins more pictures than does Hollywood in its most careless mood. . . .

The Motion Picture Herald, powerful trade publication and certainly one of the industry's better pals, has just taken up the subject.

. . . There is the way I have recommended for seasons. That is, thoroughly publicize the beginning hours for all performances. Cut out one showing on the continuous program; this time to be split over the day's program, leaving long enough intervals between shows to clear the house and admit new audiences for each performance.

When that is done—and what courage the exhibitors will have to have to do it—I'll wager you that at least 50 per cent of the talkies now condemned by the public will be greeted with praise.

The whole experiment will of course be greatly profitable—in the long run. But what courage the first showman will have to put over this idea!

Writing in the Commercial Appeal of Memphis, Tennessee, Mr. Martin reviews the situation in his home city, in his column, "Footlights and Flickers."

Mr. Quigley has hit upon an important matter and one which the movie industry should consider. Nothing interferes so much with the pleasure of a good movie as to come in right at the middle. Yet oftimes it is impossible for the patron to learn when the pictures actually begin. The theatres fail to supply the newspaper with their schedules now and again, or they do not include the schedules in their ads, or the schedules given to the papers are wrong.

We could hardly expect movie houses to suspend their programs between each picture. It is essential that they get in as many performances during each day as possible.

Certain of the theatres here do make a practice of using a standard schedule as far as possible, having each program last exactly two hours so that a feature will start every other hour, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10. If this practice could be generally adopted and advertised extensively to the public, I believe the theatres would find their patrons grateful.

It would not only be a benefit with respect to seeing the picture from the start, but would be a tremendous boon to those inside the theatre who must suffer the annoyance of people entering and leaving right in the middle of a picture. From this standpoint, I would like to see each theatre fix a definite time for the start of each picture and refuse to admit a patron after that hour.

HEROINE'S SCREAM IS HIS STARTING TIME

If one were to question Manager B. F. Liddon of the Coliseum theatre, Corinth, Miss., with regard to the realism of the modern western film, he would come to bat with the best argument possible, an actual demonstration.

It all came about when he was showing Paramount's Zane Grey western, "The Last Roundup," at a recent matinee. The blonde heroine screamed according to script, the hero was approaching to the rescue but the villain was nearly at her side. Her scream awakened some echo of dormant virility in an elderly masculine patron in the balcony. He shouted encouragement in answer to her scream, but the rest of the audience failed to understand. One man rose suddenly, and in another instant, the entire audience was pouring through various exits to the street, while someone turned in a fire alarm. When the finally calmed patrons returned to the theatre, the heroine was nestled securely in the hero's arms, and Mr. Liddon was seri-

Meeting Charlie Chaplin in an out-of-the-way drug store where the comedian was chancing his luck at a slot-machine game of skill, the writer, between nickel shots, asked him about his forthcoming production.

Charlie was more inclined to discuss the prize Zeppo Marx won for a nickel the night before, but unfolded the fact that his much awaited next picture will have a down-to-earth theme with rural flavor.

Paulette Goddard, former Follies girl, will play opposite him.

Chaplin's production will be silent with sound and musical effects only. Charlie will stick to pantomime.

For the first time in his production career, he will work from a completed script, so he said, and at the moment is completing the scenario.

Additional sound stages have been built at his studio for the production.

He said the film will be released the first of the year.

Knowing the charming vagaries of the comedian, it may be confidently said that all of his best intentions, as outlined, may be diverted at less than a moment's notice.

Once before, after it had been in the mental stage for over a year, Charlie promised the delivery of his film to his distributors in three months. The film was delivered by Chaplin two years later.

Production

Production turnover balanced this week as six new pictures started and six finished. The total number of pictures on Hollywood stages remains the same as last week, with 37 in work.

Of the new pictures, comedy predominates with three. Drama is the keynote of the fourth, mystery melodrama is the tenor of the fifth and romantic drama for sixth. Those finishing, with the exception of "Cleopatra," are dramatic romances.

Radio has two of the new pictures. "Bachelor Bait," comedy, features Skeets Gallagher, Pert Kelton, Chic Chandler, Stuart Erwin, Edgar Kennedy and Rochelle Hudson. "Afterwards" stars Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville.

Columbia's "Punch Drunks," likewise a comedy, features the erstwhile Ted Healy stooges with Dorothy Grainger. Warner's starting pair are "British Agent," topical drama in which Kay Francis is teamed with Leslie Howard, and "Dragon Murder Case," mystery melodrama starring Warren William. At Universal, a romantic drama, "There's Always Tomorrow," features Frank Morgan, Elizabeth Young and Lois Wilson.

Finished at Paramount is DeMille's feature, "Cleopatra," in which Claudette Colbert heads a lengthy cast. MGM completed "The Thin Man," mystery drama, starring William Powell, Myrna Loy and Maureen O'Sullivan. "Charlie Chan's Courage," in which Warner Oland and Drue Leyton are the principals, finished at Fox. Another romantic mystery drama, "Black Moon," teaming Fay Wray and Jack Holt, checked in at Columbia. Viking Productions completed "Our Daily Bread," directed by King Vidor and starring Karen Morley. The sixth completed picture is a Chesterfield, "Green Eyes," in which Charles Starrett and Shirley Grey are the featured players.

not signed the code. The Board took under consideration a complaint lodged by the Grand at Union City, Ind., against Phil Chakeres, operating the State, 13 miles away at Greenville, Ohio, charging cut rates.

The Clearance Board is expected to recommend heavy penalties, possibly through delayed availability dates on pictures, to theatres charging 10 cents admission. The new zoning schedule will be ready next week and will be based, generally, on admission charged and type of operation.

DES MOINES

The Clearance Board probably will bring in the final draft of the new zoning schedule at its meeting May 16.

DETROIT

The Grievance Board received its first two cases, Arthur Early, Grand theatre, Kalamazoo, charging Butterfield Theatres with unfair protection, and Bert Silver, of the Family, at Greenville, asking relief from several film contracts forcing him to play pictures at a 15-cent minimum. The Board will start functioning May 12.

KANSAS CITY

The Grievance Board received a complaint from H. L. Dunnuck, Madrid theatre, Atchison, Kan., charging Fox Midwest with having entered into an agreement with seven large distributors to deprive him of product, and charging further that the defendant exchanges will not sell him second runs after the pictures play the two Fox theatres at Kansas City.

The Board issued a cease and desist order against J. D. Wineland's Majestic theatre, at Webb City, which had been charged by L. P. Larsen's Civic theatre with unfair competition by using two-for-one tickets and cut rates.

The Clearance Board completed a new zoning schedule for Greater Kansas City, embracing Kansas City, Kansas, and Kansas City, Missouri. Both circuit and independent subsequent houses are expected to protest vigorously. The schedule will reduce protection for first-runs charging 25 cents, as well as those double featuring. All theatres offering premiums, rebates and the like will also be penalized. Theatres have been reclassified according to admissions, with first-run scales set as the basis. Protection has been reduced as much as from 28 to 49 days, and no feature shown singly at first runs shall be exhibited by subsequents on dual bills until double the effective clearance over subsequents shall have elapsed.

LOS ANGELES

One highlight of the Grievance Board decisions was a ruling by the Los Angeles board ordering Fox West Coast Theatres to make available to the complainant, the Garfield theatre, at Alhambra, 20 first-run features, beginning May 17. The Garfield charged West Coast was creating a monopoly by buying up the majority of the major distributors' product for 1933-34, and with holding out on such product.

The Clearance Board started drafting a new zoning schedule, with admissions forming the basis for granting protection.

MEMPHIS

The Clearance Board made public its suggested protection schedule, and immediately the independents, led by M. A. Lightman, voiced objections. The new schedule compels suburban runs charging 40 cents to wait 67 days after the first-run, with a sliding protection scale to 180 days for lesser admissions at subsequent runs. It also requires theatres in the territory to charge 40 cents to play on the release date.

MILWAUKEE

The Grievance Board ordered L. J. Burkitt's Classic theatre, at Sparta, to desist from admitting women free on ladies' night. The complaint was filed by La Crosse Theatre Co., which also withdrew a complaint against the Vernon, at Viroqua, charging two-for-ones. The Board held over for further hearing the complaint of the Henrich Brothers, of Milwaukee's Burleigh theatre, against Saxe Amusements, charging the circuit with operating a cooking school and giving away a gas stove and other prizes at the Garfield theatre.

The Clearance Board will start activities Friday.

NEW ORLEANS

The Grievance Board was understood to have received a complaint from a theatre at McGee, Mississippi, charging a state hospital is showing films in unfair competition.

NEW YORK

The Grievance Board ordered postponement of the first two complaints.

Howard Cullman's Roxy theatre complaint charges Walter Reade's Mayfair theatre with unfair distribution of free tickets, and the board postponed hearing until next Tuesday to permit Mr. Cullman to produce a witness and Mr. Reade to submit a list of 1,800 locations where he is reputed to distribute the tickets.

Also postponed, until Thursday morning, was a complaint filed by Rogowsky Brothers, of the Embassy theatre, Port Chester, against the Skouras Brothers' Capitol, Port Chester, charging that they could not get pictures from seven of the large distributors, and when they finally did sell them product, it was only after the Skouras interests had rejected them.

A complaint has been filed by the Roxy against the Casino, nearby on Broadway, charging unfair newspaper advertising.

The Little Picture House filed a complaint against the Windsor for premature advertising.

Moe Streimer, of United Artists, resigned as a member of the clearance advisory committee for Manhattan and Bronx territories.

The Clearance Board was considering numerous complaints against New York theatres charging that present clearance and zoning schedules are unfair, and the New Jersey advisory board postponed a hearing pending a decision on its jurisdiction.

PHILADELPHIA

The Grievance Board withheld decisions on two cases, one charging Fox with serving the Penn Athletic Club with pictures before all runs had finished, and the other, filed by Jay Emanuel's Grand Jackson theatre against the Venice, involving alleged discrimination of exchanges in enforcing a double bill restriction.

ST. LOUIS

The Clearance Board has decided to adopt existing zoning schedules.

SAN FRANCISCO

The Grievance Board ruled against George Naify's Victoria theatre, accused by J. McCauley's Cameo of lowering admissions through cut-rate tickets. M. L. Markowitz' Davies theatre filed a complaint against Irving Ackerman's Casino, charging unfair competition by awarding free prizes.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The present clearance and zoning schedule was adopted by the Clearance Board, pending any disposition of complaints, filed within 30 days by exhibitors.

Zohbel President Of RKO Theatres

Herman Zohbel, treasurer of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and vice-president of all RKO subsidiary companies with the exception of Keith-Albee-Orpheum, has been elected to the presidency of RKO Theatres.

Mr. Zohbel succeeds J. R. McDonough in his new post, due to the pressure of Mr. McDonough's various capacities as president of KAO and RKO Radio Pictures.

Last week, it was reported, Mr. Zohbel and William Mallard were succeeded by I. E. Lambert and Leon Goldberg on the executive staff of the KAO group, a move sponsored by Mike Meehan, largest individual stockholder in KAO, in an effort to divorce the operation of these theatres from RKO.

Newsreels Freed from Censorship in Five States

Complete freedom from censorship for the newsreels has been accomplished in five states through repeal of regulatory measures, the most recent case being in Illinois, the editors of the five newsreels were told Wednesday at a meeting in the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The other states are New York, Kansas, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Legislature of Mississippi Did Act, Says Cook

The esteemed legislature of the sovereign state of Mississippi most emphatically did meet during the legislative period just expired, and went on a wild rampage designed to tear the hapless theatre owner into small bits in its insatiable thirst for revenue, Grady Cook, president of the Joy Theatre, Inc., at Pontotoc, Miss., is at considerable pains gently to point out in a communication addressed to MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The fact is somewhat at variance with the comparative docility of most state legislatures, as revealed in a survey of the situation in the HERALD of April 28.

The emphasis which Mr. Cook has figuratively placed on the word "did" applies in particular to that action of the legislature. "All they did," says our informant, "was to add new teeth, make them sharper, throw in a flock of steel-tempered claws, grease the new law with some additional jail sentences and pass her." The "her" is a friendly, if not exactly affectionate, reference to the state Emergency Amusement Revenue Act of 1934, a latest edition to a law in force for two years past.

Mr. Cook continues: "Son, sit yourself down and read this thing (copy of revenue act) that I am enclosing—no, better apply to the president of the publishing house for at least a week off and digest it, because merely reading it won't mean much. Or, better still, come to Mississippi and buy yourself a few theatres (Oh, one will be enough), and just watch 'er work. The tax checker comes around regularly, but that wasn't enough, so the recent session passed another bill providing for an appropriation to hire 24 more new field men to go out and gather in these sheckles. And, brother (this just between us) they are getting said ducats. You see, this Emergency Amusement Tax Law, if you hadn't heard of it before, has been in effect for the past two years. Most of the boys were patriotic and agreed that perhaps an emergency did exist and took their part of the load without hollering. But of course some are not so patriotic as to take the food out of the mouths of their babies—which would have happened in many instances if the tax checker had been present at every performance—hence the new teeth in the law and the additional men to enforce it. Business at some theatres is reported increasing. . ."

Lynn Farnol, publicity director for Samuel Goldwyn, came upon this traveling projector combination in the back country of Ireland on a visit from which he has just returned. It was on the road near the Bay of Galloway. "Cinema—All the Latest Productions" was the way the itinerant showman identified his caravan.

RCA Licenses Sonotone Hookup

Attachment of hard-of-hearing equipment to RCA Photophone systems without special amplification is now possible as the result of a licensing agreement entered into by RCA and the Sonotone Corporation, manufacturers of instruments for persons with impaired hearing. The Sonotone device employs bone instead of air conduction.

The agreement was announced by Dr. Hugo Lieber, head of Sonotone, and E. O. Heyl, sales manager of RCA Victor, at a luncheon in New York Tuesday.

According to the sales plan devised by Sonotone for the theatre field, the instruments and necessary seat arrangements may be purchased with a down payment and the balance in weekly amounts for 50 weeks. The minimum number of units in the initial installation is six, and these may be added to as needed. The equipment is sold, not leased, but it was said that purchase will probably include certain servicing rights.

Pulitzer Prize Play Made Into MGM Film

Included among the winners of Pulitzer Prizes for 1933, announced this week, was Sidney Kingsley, for his play, "Men in White," just filmed by MGM.

Other winners are Caroline Miller for her novel, "Lamb in His Bosom"; Herbert Agar, for his American history, "The People's Choice"; Tyler Dennett, for his American biography, "John Hay"; Robert Hillyer, for his poetry, "Collected Verse."

Stella Mayhew, Stage Star, Dies

Stella Mayhew, musical comedy and vaudeville star, died last week in the French Hospital, New York. Her death was caused by blood poisoning and erysipelas resulting from a fall. She was 59.

Miss Mayhew's last theatrical success was "Hit the Deck," in which she scored the outstanding triumph of her career with her singing of "Hallelujah." Among other productions in which she has appeared were "Lace Petticoat," "Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh" and "Hello, Paris."

Research Council Is Incorporated in New York

The Motion Picture Research Council was incorporated this week in New York, the papers being approved by Justice Alfred Frankenthaler of the state supreme court.

The incorporators include Eleanor R. Belmont, Thomas J. Watson, Herbert S. Houston, Alanson B. Houghton, Henry F. Osborn, Rev. William Harrison Short, Henry J. Fisher, and Stephen P. Cabot.

Announcement was made Tuesday that Mrs. Belmont had been awarded the gold medal of the National Institute of Social Sciences "in recognition of her national and international services for the benefit of mankind in connection with the American Red Cross, the women's division of two emergency unemployment relief drives, as national chairman of the Motion Picture Research Council, and in numerous other ways."

Change of Heart

(Fox - Winfield Sheehan)

Romance, Comedy, Drama

With such a cast, Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell reunited, James Dunn and Ginger Rogers featured, in an emotion-stirring human interest love story, the business creating showmanship of "Change of Heart" is evident.

It's clean, satisfying entertainment, probably not as sentimentally appealing as previous Gaynor-Farrell features, nevertheless a romantic drama of definite charm. That the leads are presented in a more mature vehicle, one in which realism rather than illusion predominates, gives it a uniquely colorful character.

The story is modern. Convincingly portrayed, it deals in a natural way with situations and conditions with which ordinary folk are familiar. While the realism of actuality motivates, applied theatrical technique successfully produces the necessary contrasts in drama, comedy, suspense thrill and surprise.

It deals with four young college graduates who come to New York to carve out careers in four widely diverging lines. One would be a lawyer, the second a writer, third an actress, fourth a crooner. Love, the closest influence to each, is given scanty consideration in relation to their aspirations. But it changes the whole course of each one's life. Catherine loves Chris, who in turn is mad about Madge, the idol of Mack's affections. Life plays queer tricks on all four. But in the end, the love that life has destined comes to each one.

The production is teeming with salable assets. The fact that Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell are teamed again gives it a head start worth plenty of money. The picture offers much to hold the interest and arouse the enthusiasm of both the young and old folk. It has plenty of appeal for both men and women. The amount it should check in at the box office is in direct ratio to the ingenuity and aggressiveness applied in bringing to the attention of patrons the entertainment qualities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Affairs of a Gentleman

(Universal)

Mystery Drama

"Who killed Gresham and why?" is the showmanship essence of this dramatic mystery. It is short in running time, and dialogue predominates in story interpretation. Told in semi-episodic fashion, where the muchly admired author of sexy best sellers is found dead in the opening sequence, retrospection motivates.

Any one of six women, all of whom had been in his life, or two men might have killed him. Each had a motive; the women because they were disappointed that they no longer interested him, or were jealous; the men because of the age old axiom—protect the woman you love, wife or sweetheart.

As Gresham's various affairs with the various women are retold, the comedy contrast of the baffled police up against a stone wall serves to accentuate the drama and mystery. In turn, the guilty finger points at each one. But only one could have been the killer. And further to stir up the situation, it is suggested occasionally that the author may have been a suicide.

For mystery fans this picture has abundant values. The complicated romances make for alluring love interest, and the familiar dumb cop methods, enmeshed in a case too deep for them, are provocative of comedy. Where the cast names, particularly Paul Lukas, are ticket selling angles, they should be used. But probably the most effective method of interest creation is capitalizing on the "Who Killed Gresham and Why?" angle, and depending upon the concealed finale to let them justify their advance conclusions.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Last Gentleman

(United Artists - 20th Century)

Comedy-Drama

Because of the success of "Rothschild," the Arliss name naturally is the most important showmanship feature of this picture. It's a quality show; a character comedy drama in which there is all-family entertainment in both story and personalities, a familiar human-interest topic for everyday patrons as well as irregulars.

Well presented, with dialogue necessarily predominating in interpreting the story, the picture nevertheless moves with attention-holding speed. A novel twist is introduced in the climax, when the deceased Cabot Barr in a talking motion picture announces distribution of his wealth, the only bond of interest between the old gentleman's kin and himself, to the assembled family. While Arliss is the principal character of interest, other highlights are the dramatic sly plots of the various relatives, fearfully but avidly cultivating the old man's favor in hope of future financial reward; the intriguing connivance of Donald Meek to gain the lion's share for himself, and the romance surrounding Charlotte Henry and Frank Albertson. Contrasting all these theatrical elements is a line of smart human comedy that continually livens up the picture.

The locale is New England; the time the present. A niece reported dead, Barr summons his family for a memorial service. Characters and identities established, Barr taunts each one, claiming that their only interest in him is his money. As the report is proved false, Barr sends the group away. Only Marjorie, who has ridiculed one of his pet eccentricities, seems to be the object of any sentimental affection.

Weeks later, Marjorie and her mother, Augusta and Allan are invited to Barr manor. As the old gentleman fosters the romance between Marjorie and Allan, the act of son Judd in seeking to have Barr declared insane is a shock that eventually kills the old man.

Again the family is gathered. A curtain is drawn and the old man appears in a talking picture. In turn he tells each relative exactly what he is leaving him or her. The villainous Judd is cut off with a shilling. The others are substantially remembered, but Marjorie is given the bulk of the estate as Cabot declares her the only one worthy of carrying on the Barr traditions. Allan is instructed to marry the girl and take her name Barr as his family's cognomen. The climax has the deceased Barr announcing that he hopes to have the pleasure of meeting them all again in another world.

As there is a definite departure from standardized formula in presenting the picture, the interest-creating campaign, while principally focusing on Arliss, should also emphasize the fact that the picture is different entertainment. The most necessary line of action will be so to present the advance that young folk interest will be stimulated.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(MGM - Weingarten)

Romantic Drama

This is a dramatic and romantic story of a girl from the other side of the tracks and her vivid adventures in life and love. Presented in a 1934 atmosphere, realistically and elaborately produced, it's the kind of show that carries definite entertainment for the modernes. There is a particular appeal to boys and girls just beyond the teen years. As it runs the scale of standby theatrical elements, it's lively without being too sexy, a valuable asset in stimulating interest among the more mature patrons. Yet because of its theme, it is hardly a suitable attraction for juvenile audiences.

Presenting Joan Crawford in a role uniquely adapted to her screen character, the picture is well acted. Among the supports, Franchot Tone and Gene Raymond, personalities of proved name value, are effective. Yet Edward Arnold, the man whom Joan married to reform and who gave her everything only to consent to divorce that her future happiness should be assured, is always the recipient of audience sympathy and practically steals the picture.

There is romance and drama in the situation which bring three men into Sadie's life. In the beginning it's poor girl-rich boy puppy love for her and Michael, romance that her mother strives to foster in the beginning but which the social gap will not permit. There's real drama and romance in the episode when fascination for the crooning Tommy awakens a spark of ambition within her, an interlude that carries her to New York and fame, to be followed by her desertion of the boy. There's human interest drama and romance in her marriage to Brennan, a wealthy dissolute whom she reforms to gain luxury and position. As Michael and Tommy continually influence her life, there is a tragic note as sympathetic love for the sick Tommy impels her to beg her husband for a divorce that she may marry the boy, only to have her husband's death create a situation to throw her into the arms of Michael, the childhood sweetheart who always loved her.

Realism of small town life and romance characterizes the first part of the picture. The color, excitement and thrill of gay life in New York sparkles in the balance. Both combine to give the show attention holding interest. Both, while pointing a moral, never become preachments. Still there is a punch lesson in the story that should not be overlooked. For practical purposes a campaign in which full advantage is taken of cast name strength, which has for its essence that the picture is intimate and alluring without being too flaming, seems to be the most logical patron interesting medium. Recall, too, that the story is adapted from a Liberty Magazine serial by Vina Delmar, author of "Bad Girl," and "Woman Accused," which was widely read.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by MGM. A Larry Weingarten production. Directed by Clarence Brown. Original story by Vina Delmar. Screen play by John Meehan. Music and lyrics by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed. Photographed by Oliver Marsh. Running time, 88 minutes as seen on Coast. Release date, May 11, 1934.

Many Happy Returns

(Paramount)

Comedy

Senseless, farcical, hokum packed nonsense with a loud laugh in every character, line of dialogue, and bit of action is the entertainment and showmanship of this picture. It has but one objective and that is to amuse.

It moves fast and furiously. There is no letdown; no pauses waiting for something to happen. Even the sequences featuring music by Guy Lombardo and his band, and dance routines by Veloz and Yolanda, are atmospherically hilarious. The sustaining story, practically meaningless, inasmuch as it looks as though the script was forgotten many times, is actually only the occasion for one funny episode to succeed another. So many undreamed of twists and gags are worked in, that interest is confined simply to what further foolishness is in store.

It's fun from the minute Gracie assumes the management of Papa Horatio's shop, turning it first into a broadcasting station and then into an aviary, while the distracted father is trying to get beauty contest winner Florence married before she can get into the movies. The fun moves on to Hollywood. Kidnapers are kidnaped. The Burns and Allen chatter reaches a new intensity and picture making is satirized and just plain kidded. The color of Movieland night life, with Lombardo, Veloz and Yolanda, also is farcically depicted. In the end, it's just a case of try and figure out what it's all about; the only thing to be remembered is the fun comedy.

This is the kind of show that you can broadcast as an all-laugh feature. The advance should be as funny as the picture, so that word-of-mouth advertising may carry on.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Norman McLeod. Based on the story, "Often A Bridegroom," by Lady Mary Cameron. Screen play by John P. McEvoy and Claude Binyon. Stingaree

(Radio)

Dramatic Romance

A dramatic romance, colored by charming music, "Stingaree" affords several unusual showmanship selling features. Because of its different character, it is the type of picture that requires special efforts to create the patron interest which its quality merits. The story idea is novel. So are the time, locale and atmosphere and the manner in which it is produced. It is well acted, particularly by Richard Dix. But where good music is appreciated, Irene Dunne's singing, particularly the theme song "Tonight Is Mine," is a saleable asset of which every advantage should be taken.

The sustaining elements—drama, romance, comedy, excitement, suspense—all motivated by well balanced dialogue and action, are logically developed. There's a human interest realism generating and maintaining interest. As audience sympathy is focused on the two principals, the supporting cast is effective, with Mary Boland, Una O'Connor and Andy Devine supplying the comedy contrast and the others aiding in developing the romance and drama. The music is of the ballad operatic class rather than the hotcha variety.

Australia is the locale; the time is the 70's. Ambitious, but impossible to the point of being laugh-packed farce comedy, Mrs. Clarkson sings and awaits the arrival of Sir Julian, famous British impresario, as her household is tortured. Stingaree, Robin Hood of the era, bent on robbing the Clarksons, hears Hilda sing. Posing as Sir Julian, he gives her the theme song, and learning her story of denied opportunity, he kidnaps her. As love for the pair blossoms, he and his gunman, Howie, hold up the Clarkson musicale as the agonized Julian and guests endure Mrs. Clarkson's warblings, and force them to listen to Hilda sing "Tonight Is Mine." Julian knows a budding opera star when he sees one; of course, Mrs. Clarkson is frustrated and of course the police capture Stingaree. Happy that the girl is assured a career he goes to jail, as interpolated sequences show Hilda as the sensation of European capitals. With love for the man who made fame possible, Hilda decides to return to Australia. In Melbourne she awaits Stingaree, who has escaped. Her concert is mediocre until Stingaree, who has robbed the Governor-General of his uniform, enters to take the "God Save the Queen" salute. As suspense predominates, everybody knowing the chase is on, Hilda again sings "Tonight Is Mine" as Stingaree and Howie flee. As Sir Julian pleads his love, Stingaree comes to her hotel. All they want is each other. She sacrifices career for the man she loves. The trio—she, Stingaree and Howie—beat the officers in a flight to the fastness of the impenetrable bush.

While the picture's direct appeal undoubtedly is to the mature among the patrons, a quality that will be aided by word of mouth advertising among that class, and to the woman, proper showmanship should take advantage of the inherent values to give it a general attractiveness. Primarily it should capitalize on the music values, with special drives on music clubs, etc. But for straight commercial purposes, acknowledging the inadequacy of the title in relation to the theme, convincing suggestions should contrast vividly with current trends the fact that the picture is colorfully different.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Loud Speaker

(Monogram)

Comedy-Drama

Its theme woven about the radio as seen somewhat from the inside, this picture offers the exhibitor some opportunity for exploitation and selling which may lean in the direction of ballyhoo. Obviously, any tieups which may be developed with local radio broadcasting stations or sponsors of radio programs should prove helpful.

Although the picture is not particularly strong in names conducive to added patronage when lighting the marquee, the film has lively, if not outstanding, entertainment value. There is considerable comedy, which occasionally finds a target, to enliven proceedings, while the story itself couples romance with something of a behind the scenes view of a radio program in the making and the success thereof. A song or two, which may be re-broadcast in the lobby of the theatre, gives further impetus to the entertainment.

The theme, of the small town boy who is the "card" of the community, and whose abounding ambition to be a radio fun-maker leads him to a success which his continued boastfulness and complete egotism force him to lose, offers an opportunity for catchlines and selling copy which may be made attractive. The top names in the cast are those of Ray Walker, in the lead, and Jacqueline Wells, with others for the most part unknown.

Walker, assistant station master in a small town, persists in his ambition to become a radio figure of prominence, and incidentally sees a girl on a train, whose name he knows and who makes a deep impression on him. When he is fired he goes to New York, and by horning in on an executive conference at a large advertising agency, he sells himself to the manufacturer of a pancake flour, whose radio program is badly in need of repair. He tosses out the dignity which characterized the half-hour and substitutes comedy, wise cracks and a jazz band. The recipe is successful and Walker, now more egotistical than ever, is in a position to write his own ticket.

Accidentally he finds Miss Wells, the girl he had seen on the train, "at liberty," after a musical show which fell apart, and down on her luck. His egotistical approach is resented and his offers of assistance are turned down. Eventually, through a ruse, he obtains an audition for her, and she is successful as soloist on his program. Still she refuses to countenance the advances of the horn-blowing Walker. He, for his part, resents her apparent response to the attentions of the program manager, and in a fit of jealousy, walks into the studio drunk and ruins the program. He is fired, Miss Wells takes his place and is as successful as he was. She sets out to find him, and in a concluding sequence she decoys him back to the studio, before the microphone, and back to the popularity he once enjoyed.

The stunt of Walker eating pancakes in a restaurant to advertise the product his program sells, may offer a suggestion to the exhibitor for a similar idea. The film is probably best played in a midweek position.—AARONSON, New York.

Hitler's Reign of Terror

(Jewel Productions)

Pictorial Record

Much ballyhooed via the daily press by reason of censorship activities, especially in New York and Chicago, "Hitler's Reign of Terror" purports to throw wide to the world, in bold strokes of pictorial exposure, the drastic, brutal reign of Hitler, man of this particular hour. As a matter of fact, it does little of that, although it does give some indication of conditions of the moment, as Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., saw them, and as both Mr. Vanderbilt and News Commentator Edwin C. Hill attempt to interpret them.

As motion picture it lacks considerable of the force which one may have been led to expect, concerning itself between interludes of Hill and Vanderbilt conversing in the studio, with pictures of Vanderbilt, the avid and earnest pictorial reporter, picked up by the camera in various positions in German streets, in German crowds, in the Austrian back country and in his Berlin hotel. There is comparatively little of the brutality of which so much has been said, in the picture itself, and those sequences which show the unnecessary roughing of people in the streets, or the smashing of store windows, or the unsurpassed burning of books, are repeated, which may be taken to indicate nothing so much as the fact that there is nothing else of that nature to be shown.

In several instances Vanderbilt's interviews with the ex-Kaiser at Doorn, Holland; with Hitler himself, with the ex-Crown Prince and his son are said to have occurred, which consists of impersonations of the personages concerned, speaking the lines Vanderbilt remembers. The film resulting from Vanderbilt's excursions into the German state are said to have been smuggled out of Germany. In too many instances of street fighting, parading and rioting, too much effort is made with the use of white circles to indicate that Vanderbilt was in the thick of things. Technically the production is hardly all that it might be, from both pictorial and vocal standpoints.

Vanderbilt delved into the Austrian background of Hitler, and is shown drinking beer with the peasants and making himself agreeable to their children, but little is learned of Hitler, the boy.

From the exhibitor's point of view, it is rather doubtful that much general patronage interest could be excited in the showing, although an active tieup with what is daily appearing in the press may show some results. On the whole, the film does not quite accomplish what it sets out to do, providing comparatively little of real excitement, emerging rather more nearly as a set of correlated clips of the newsreel variety. The fact that the radio-noted Mr. Hill is concerned in an expository manner with the material involved may have some effect.

It is suggested that a too concentrated selling from the expose angle may have some repercussion, inasmuch as that type of selling will lead the patronage to expect probably considerably more than they actually will witness. The sentiment of the exhibitor's community, also, should have considerable bearing on the showing of the film.—AARONSON, New York.

Distributed by Jewel Productions (Samuel Cummins). Photographed in Austria and Germany by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr. Narrator, Edwin C. Hill. Directed by Michael Mindlin. Supervised by Joseph Seiden. Sound engineer, Murray Vichter. Film editor, Sam Rosen. Release date, April 30, 1934. Running time, 67 minutes.

Success at Any Price

(Radio)

Drama

Hitting a fast modern tempo of big business and that type of get-rich-quick ambition which leaves romance and the socalled finer things of life far behind, "Success at Any Price" emerges a sophisticated sort of story, which, moderately effective, is open to active selling. The film, while not outstanding in value, either as a motion picture or in its exploitation possibilities, is susceptible of a selling campaign sold along straight dramatic lines, making the most of the story's theme.

Heading the cast, and of value for marquee purposes, is the name of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., while in support are Genevieve Tobin, Frank Morgan, Colleen Moore and Edward Everett Horton, all familiar names. About the title may be woven many catch lines which should prove effective as selling material, concentrating as they must on a theme which has been often uppermost in the minds of many people in all walks of life at one time or another. Throwing overboard romance, storming through life with a chip on his shoulder, the man reached financial heights as a business leader, a success, but when he reached that position he found he had nothing else but his job. He had no companionship, no friends, and was ready to give up. That is the material with which the exhibitor will have to work in selling the film to his patrons, offering Fairbanks in a capable handling of the leading role.

Young Fairbanks, brother of a gangster who has been slain by gang guns, confides in his sweetheart, Miss Moore, that there is nothing that matters but money. Money is power, he says, and he plans to get it, in large quantities. Miss Moore finds him a job in the large advertising agency in which she is employed as private secretary to Frank Morgan, head of the organization. Fairbanks, at odds with his work and the place, attracts attention when he points out to Morgan and Henry Kolker that he knows his business and that they are runing their's inefficiently. Kolker comes in as a controlling interest in the firm, and Fairbanks is given a chance to make good by Morgan. He does, and incidentally meets Kolker's "friend," Miss Tobin, who is amused by Fairbanks' attitude.

She baits him, he falls, but is not detracted from his goal, incidentally leaving Miss Moore by the wayside. In an arrangement with Kolker which is not quite straight, he gains control of the company, forces Morgan out and rises to head the firm, making money in large quantities, having the power he wanted, but lost to Miss Moore, who refuses Morgan's offer of marriage. Fairbanks marries Miss Tobin, later learns she has been cheating with Kolker, since he himself gives her neither time nor attention, and threatens to expose the whole plan, including their crooked financial deals. Broken in spirit after an interview with Miss Moore, he shoots himself, but is on the road to recovery in the arms of Miss Moore as the film ends.

It is strictly adult material, to be sold along straight dramatic lines, with emphasis on the theme and implication of the title.—AARONSON, New York.

Blue Steel

(Monogram)

Western

The active and athletic John Wayne, star of Monogram's Lone Star westerns, disports himself with his accustomed knock-down-and-drag-out ease, on and off his handsome white horse, as once again he does battle with the villains of the western mountains, who would wreck the lives and homes of the small western community. The result is the kind of fast, active western motion picture which, perennially popular, has its continuing audience of youngsters, and its group of old standbys among the adults.

Of Wayne's popularity there can be little question, and a certain quota of western fans can be relied upon to respond to the call of the Wayne name on the theatre's marquee. "Blue Steel," as a title, has the right ring to attract the youngsters to the house. With Wayne in this case is that extremely capable and active old trouper, George Hayes, who stands head and shoulders above most of the supporting players concerned regularly with western output. Eleanor Hunt supplies the other half of the inevitable romantic interest with Wayne, and Yakima Canutt in a chief supporting role, is another who is well known in westerns.

The running time rather falls short, being under one hour, which points to the necessity of the exhibitor building his program with reasonably lengthy short product. The yarn is cut rather closely to pattern, but that hasn't prevented the inclusion of a full amount of action, in which Wayne takes a full share.

The small western town is on the verge of starvation through inability to bring in provisions, which are regularly confiscated by a bandit gang, of which Ed Peil, masquerading as the friend of the townspeople, is the actual leader. He offers to buy their land in return for any provisions brought in, and it is also revealed that the land is run through with rich gold deposits.

Wayne, traveling through the country, is witness to a safe robbing by the polka dot bandit, and is trailed by George Hayes, the sheriff, who suspects him of being that bandit. They team up, Hayes for reasons of his own, Wayne because he likes the old man, and the two save the life of Miss Hunt when bandits attack the provisions her father is bringing into the town. The father is killed, and under the guise of helping her, Peil holds her prisoner at his mountain hideout. Wayne's suspicions are aroused and he trails the gang and Peil. When Hayes is shot off his horse, over a cliff and into a stream, Wayne dives and saves him.

Set against the beauty of the western mountain scenery, the action moves on rapidly. Wayne discovers Canutt, one of Peil's men, to be the polka dot bandit. Eventually, after decoying the gang away, Hayes and Wayne raid the hideout, get Miss Hunt and a wagon load of provisions, and race to town with the gang after them. Dynamite, carefully placed.

blasts the gang out of existence, and when Hayes attempts to arrest Wayne as the polka dot bandit, Wayne reveals himself as a United States marshal. He and Miss Hunt complete the romance.

Actionful material, it should be played on the weekend.—AARONSON, New York.

Murder at the Vanities

(Paramount)

Mystery Drama

So much different and effective interest-creating showmanship is available in this picture that selection of the most potent local angle appears to be the difficult problem.

It's a backstage show, located in the theatre in which the famous Earl Carroll "Vanities" are presented. As the title completely indicates, it's a mystery murder drama. Nevertheless, the element of romantic love interest is always strongly influential in motivating the yarn. Paradoxically, it's a laugh-packed comedy of a dumb, dame-struck detective and a frantic production manager. Predominantly it's a girl show, glamorous and alluring in its vivid revelations of feminine charm. Beautiful spectacle is featured as a background for the catchy song numbers and novel dance routines. Thrill, always creating new suspense, lends added color to the elaborate mounting. New names, Carl Brisson and Kitty Carlisle, are presented. As it's well acted, realism alternating with illusion and liberal dashes of old-fashioned hokum thrown in for good measure, two surprising performances are included. Gertrude Michael as the menacing villainess, and Dorothy Stickney, brow-beaten slavey maid who brings an electric emotional denouement, come within the "will-be-talked-about" classification.

Possessing the elements that usually enthuse both big and small town patronage, it remains only to present those assets in the most effective way.

For general purposes 'Murder at the Vanities" is the type of show that should be given a circus campaign. The material is there with which to work.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Mitchell Leisen. Based upon the play by Earl Carroll and Rufus King. Screen play by Carey Wilson and Joseph Gollomb. Dialogue by Sam Hellman. Music by Arthur Johnston. Lyrics by Sam Coslow. Dance numbers by Larry Ceballos and LeRoy Prinz. Sound, Martin Paggi. Art directors, Hans Dreier and Ernst Fegte. Photographer, Leo Tover. Running time to be determined. Release date, May 25, 1934.

The Big Idea

(MGM)

Entertaining

Ted Healy and his stooges provide most of the "low-down" entertainment in this musical subject, as the stooges interrupt the fervid authorship of Healey, who, with the charwoman at his office, is deep in the throes of ridiculous composition. As interludes are the Three Radio Rogues with their clever imitations of prominent radio entertainers, and an exotic dance routine with a large girl chorus. Healey's sweetheart breaks in, finds him "enacting" a scene with the charwoman, and she and the stooges provide a hasty exit for Healy. A fairly entertaining number.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Elmer Steps Out

(Columbia)

Fair

There is no better than fair comedy in this subject, featuring Walter Catlett, in which, after a rousing battle with his wife, he runs into difficulty with a traffic cop, two other women, a monkey and his wife again. The humor is rather weakly comic and the situations are reasonably amusing now and again. Catlett decides to go out for a good time with his friend, is arrested for speeding and his friend uses the line that he is an expectant father. The cop goes with them to see the "baby" and Catlett is hard put to it with an organ grinder's monkey and a large Scandinavian servant. His wife returns and the cop leaves him to her tender mercies.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Attention, Sucker!

(MGM)

Clever

Luis Zingone, "hand-is-quicker-than-the-eye" expert, is entertaining as he sits in on a game of poker, wins a huge pot with four aces, then refuses the winnings as he shows his opponents how it is done. With the aid of a plate glass table and the camera recording from below, Zingone shows in slow motion how the sucker is taken in by the expert. In three-card monte, in the old shell game, in black jack, he bewilders the watchers with his deftness and skill. Pete Smith renders the accompanying dialogue. The subject is entertaining.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Little Jack Little's Revue

(Paramount)

Entertaining

Little Jack Little, somewhat popular, crooning orchestra leader, known reasonably well to the radio public, leads his men in numerous numbers, some of them his own compositions, the while he renders them via microphone, which appears an indispensable necessity to his voice. His performance is otherwise assisted by the Do Re Mi Trio and Gypsey Nina, who accompanies herself on the piano accordion. An entertaining subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Little Feller

(MGM)

Appealing

There is a definite appeal, especially for the feminine element, in this subject, featuring Chic Sale. As the old grandfather on the western ranch whose small grandson, the life of the ranch, has just died, Sale renders the narrative poem "Little Feller," with considerable effect. As he gives away to a neighboring rancher the boy's pony, saddle and chaps, Sale tells of the youngster's prowess on the range and the gap that is left. Against a ranch background the recitation is effective.—Running time, 8 minutes.

A Journey in Flanders

(Fox)

Interesting

Pictorially highly effective, this number of the Fox Magic Carpet of Movietone series, of the travel variety, takes the screen audience, via the camera, through the beautifully scenic lowlands of French and Belgium Flanders. In common with the others of this series, the subject is characterized by an intelligent use of the technique of the camera. There is comparatively little of accompanying explanatory dialogue, which proves rather an advantage than a detraction. The short should be found interesting by any audience.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Aw Nurse

(Columbia)

Fair Cartoon

Not outstanding, this is nonetheless a fair animated cartoon, with Scrappy, the pudgy-faced youngster, as the star. Scrappy discovers that his pet cat is knitting baby clothes and rushes it to the hospital, where he and his brother pace back and forth awaiting the big event. It materializes into innumerable kittens, who so disturb the peace and quiet of the hospital that they are all ejected forcibly.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Honkey-Donkey

(MGM)

Amusing

There should be amusement, especially for the youngsters, in this subject, which features the Our Gang kids in a Hal Roach Production. The little rich boy finds the gang in a lot, on a merry-go-round of their own devising, which is drawn by a mule which starts at a sneeze and sits down in response to a ringing bell. The rich boy takes the gang to his home where first the chauffeur, then the boy's mother are chased by the mule, while two of the gang try to stop him with various bells. It is a lively subject which, while not quite reaching the usual Gang standard, is nonetheless amusing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Betty Boop's Rise to Fame

(Paramount)

Amusing

As Max Fleischer, "daddy" of little animated Betty Boop, discusses her growth and development with a reporter, Betty is "drawn" into the conversation by Mr. Fleischer. Urged, she gives a bit from some of her best "films," while the two look on. When she runs into serious difficulty, Mr. Fleischer opens the inkwell and she pops into it, out of danger. Cleverly done, the subject should be especially entertaining for the youngsters.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Goofy Movies

(MGM)

Fair

There is a fair portion of amusing entertainment in this subject, number four of the series. While Pete Smith handles the accompanying dialogue, the remarkable inventions of pure genius are seen, and a misty melodrama of another day of the screen is re-exhibited, wherein that which was once real "movie" drama of the first water becomes incongruous and amusing by reason of the burlesquing imparted by the "explanatory" dialogue. It is a fair comedy subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs No. 11

(Paramount)

Entertaining

This subject, on a par with others of the series, is clever and entertaining in its burlesqued re-exhibition of bits from the past of motion pictures. Shown are a few of the big city police patrol wagons of the tag end of the last century, and a heavy "drammer" of the older days. With heavily burlesqued accompanying dialogue the film becomes highly amusing to the critical motion picture audience of today. Young Fairbanks and Charles Ray are seen on and off the screen of long ago.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THE CATSPAW

Harold Lloyd - Fox

For his annual screen appearance, Harold Lloyd has selected a colorful romantic comedy drama that has a modern political and character background. The yarn is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post serial by Charles Buddington Kelland, whose previous screen credits include "Speak Easily." It was directed by Sam Taylor, who also wrote the screen play.

Of unusual showmanship interest, inasmuch as it presents Lloyd in a role radically different from anything he has attempted before, the production also offers a supporting cast of strong name value. In principal supporting roles are Una Merkel, in the past year in "Blonde Bombshell" and "Beauty for Sale" and currently appearing in "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back"; Nat Pendleton, featured in many MGM pictures; George Barbier, a familiar veteran; Grant Mitchell, remembered for "Dinner at Eight" and now in "Twenty Million Sweethearts." Others who will be seen are Warren Hymer, James Donlan, Frank Sheridan and Grace Bradley.

The yarn is modern. It concerns a young American, born and educated in China, who comes to America to be whirled into thrilling adventures in love and politics. As mayor of a great city, his application of Chinese methods and philosophies to his political and romantic activities give the picture a novel color and entertainment punch. Paced by smart, witty dialogue, marked by philosophical Oriental quotations, the script calls for comparatively fast moving action.

While the hair-raising physical thrill of previous Lloyd pictures has been eliminated, there is situation excitement fully on par. Title, cast and story value afford potential showmanship values in sufficient quantities.

THE HELL CAT

Columbia

Basically a newspaper yarn, this approaches the subject from a new tack, making the romantic love story the most important feature and surrounding that asset with all the color, action and excitement commonly associated with this type story.

Original story and screen play are by Adele Buffington, author of "When Strangers Meet," "Cheaters" and "Beggars' Holiday," and Fred Niblo, Jr.

Aiming for popular entertainment, Robert Armstrong is featured with Ann Sothern. The supporting cast is composed of Minna Gombell, Benny Baker, James P. Burtis, Richard Hemming, Henry Kolker, Charles Wilson, Lynn Cowan and Nick Copeland. Direction is by Al Rogell, who made "Air Hostess" and "Below The Sea."

Modernly timed, located in a metropolitan city, the story calls for fast moving action. Premised on the angle of a smart girl attempting to and succeeding in outsmarting a smart guy, the yarn becomes exciting as a feud is generated at the outset. Majoring in assets that usually arouse the enthusiasm of the everyday fan, keen advantage is taken of the atmospheric newspaper situations which place the hero and disguised heroine in dramatic situations in which the menace of underworld characters and ways of doing things assumes a gripping importance. The anti-climax has Armstrong depending upon Ann Sothern's courage in saving his skin. In a thrill packed finale is unearthed a Chinese smuggling plot, with a thrilling melee in which the Coast Patrol is the deciding factor.

As excitement is the keynote, the story calls for a brand of showmanship that clearly explains the yarn's character, with title used to accentuate the girl's character as a means of interesting both male and feminine patrons.

THE LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS

(Tentative Title)

Radio

This is a dramatic, romantic story of a woman's love and sacrifice. Adapted from a widely read novel by Louis Bromfield, author of "After Night," it was adapted by Jane Murfin, who did "Silver Cord," "After Tonight" and "Ann Vickers." Direction is by Alfred Santell, who made "Bondage" and a previous Ann Harding picture, "Right to Romance."

Ann Harding and John Boles have the leading roles, and about them the whole theme rotates. Others in the cast are Helen Vinson, the other woman; Creighton Chaney, Donald Crisp, Ben Alexander, Dorothy Sebastian and Alan Birmingham.

The story, keyed to arouse deep emotional human interest, is told in retrospect. It deals with an enduring love beyond the pale, with a woman who remained faithful in the background to her lover, who married and went on to political and worldly success. As years pass the mutual love, despite its handicaps, grows stronger, as the daughter born to their clandestine association grows up. Then, for anti-climax, the man's wife, learning the truth of her husband's other life, murders him, while Miss Harding, to protect his name as well as that of their daughter, confesses and is jailed for the crime. A death-bed confession by the real murderess brings the happy reuniting of mother and child.

On the surface, the story appears to be particularly appealing to women and should be exploited with that point in mind. But because of the character of the two leading players, it has values for adult audiences of both sexes and should be presented from that standpoint.

KISS AND MAKE UP

Paramount - B. P. Schulberg

A novel, modern romantic drama, presented against an alluring Continental locale, "Kiss and Make Up" apparently has in title, cast and story values a sufficiency of latent showmanship quality necessary for a smart spot campaign. Produced on an elaborate scale, the story has a definite modern human interest trend, in which situation comedy accentuates the romance and drama.

The story is an original by Stephen Bekeffi, the screen play by George Marion, Jr., who functioned in a like capacity on "Love Me Tonight" and "Adorable," and Harlan Thompson, who adapted "I'm No Angel." Atmospheric and specialty music and lyrics are by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robbin. In addition to the scenario, Harlan Thompson also directed in collaboration with Jean Negulesco.

The cast is composed of familiar screen names. Cary Grant (his first picture in some months since the two Mae Wests), Genevieve Tobin and Helen Mack, the sensation of "All Of Me," have the leads. Edward Everett Horton, Lucien Littlefield, Mona Maris, Rafael Storm (a newcomer) and Doris Lloyd are featured. Players in minor parts include Toby Wing, now in "Murder At The Vanities"; Sam Ashe, Henry Armetta and Dorothy Christy. Important from an exploitation angle is the premiere presentation of the complete group of Wampus 1934 Baby Stars.

Backgrounded against Paris and the Riviera, with action balancing dialogue and colorful production assets interluding, the story deals with a romantic beauty doctor, Grant, whose operation on Genevieve Tobin not only makes her a fascinating but cold beauty, but captivates his heart. As the inevitable dramatic donoument ensues, he realizes that he has made a mistake in overlooking his charming secretary, Helen Mack, whose enduring love for him is the greatest thing in life.

A modern story for the modernes, with particular appeal for the women, it calls for sparkling, intriguing showmanship, in which there is unusual opportunity for wide commercial contacts.

IT AINT NO SIN

Paramount

Probably the most outstanding showmanship feature of this story is that in production dress and atmosphere it's a companion piece to the first Mae West starring success, "She Done Him Wrong." This is important from a showmanship viewpoint in that the story, written and adapted by Miss West in her full pungent style, features clever and smart dialogue, crisp, but not of the type that might evoke any objections. The picture is directed by Leo McCarey, who handled Eddie Cantor in "The Kid From Spain," and the Marx Brothers in "Duck Soup." Music and lyrics are by Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow, who contributed similarly to many Paramount productions, the latest of which is "Murder At the Vanities."

The cast supporting Miss West, all well-known screen names, are, however, practically new to her pictures. Roger Pryor, who scored in "Moonlight and Pretzels," has the principal male lead. The supporting cost includes John Mack Brown, Katherine DeMille, who made her screen debut in "Viva Villa"; John Miljan, James Donlan, Libby Taylor, Stuart Holmes, Edward Gargan and Warren Hymer. The well-known Duke Ellington and his orchestra, now in "Murder at the Vanities," is featured.

In the yarn Miss West is a burlesque queen of the Naughty Nineties. The sensation of New Orleans, center of gambling, prize fighting and sporting world intrigue, she loses her jewels and heart in many exciting and complicated situations, but gets both back again to her own satisfaction.

The showmanship essentials necessary to make this a box-office companion of "She Done Him Wrong" are amply evident in title, cast, story and production values.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Richard Cromwell, Robert Armstrong—Will get by if your customers are not too particular. Played Apr. 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

FORBIDDEN TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Satisfactory western with more comedy than most of them have. Laughs and action.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HOLD THE PRESS: Tim McCoy—I think my folks are going to like Tim out of his western roles. Extreme cold weather kept this from making expenses, but the ones who did come out enjoyed it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert—This sure is one sweet picture. Entertaining from start to finish, the acting by Gable and Colbert is great; the directing is No. 1. No dirt or smut, clean in every respect. This in my estimation is one of the fine big pictures of the year; they just don't make them any better. What a pleasure it is to run a picture like this. I hope Columbia will give us more like it. Running time, 107 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Tannev. Dorothy Appleby—Okay. The kids fell for this one like a ton of brick. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Apr. 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, Guy Kibbee, May Robson—Heard a lot about what a wonderful picture this was, but it did just program business here. Played Apr. 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—A very delightful picture that played to average Sunday, Monday business and pleased every one.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young —Here is one that fooled me two ways. It wasn't as good as I had anticipated and its drawing power was way below what I had expected. Played Sun.-Mon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook—Here is a show my patrons thoroughly enjoyed. A fine mystery show. Drew considerable extra business.—Harold Smith, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—A very nice little program picture with action from beginning to end. Played Apr. 13.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SOCIAL REGISTER: Colleen Moore, Alexander Kirkland—Nice play but failed to draw. We did a rotten business on this play. The play was fair and should do a fair business. Colleen Moore was the star and played her part good. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Apr. 17-18.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SOCIAL REGISTER: Colleen Moore—Played this on a Sunday to a very dissatisfied audience. Very poor picture. Might get by on a bargain show.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SPEED WINGS: Tim McCoy—A good action picture. The best we have had with McCoy this year. Played Apr. 21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones—Good weekend picture to average business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—An old one, but a good one. Played Sat.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Bette Davis, Charles Farrell—A new kind of racketeering picture that will please most of your patrons. Played Family days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone—Very good. No extra business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis —Went after men patrons on this but seems that the trailer sold it to them, as they all came along with the women to see it. It will please in most any spot. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis —This is an excellent show. Plenty of comedy supplied by Frank McHugh. Wonderful sets. Played to good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon, Glenda Farrell—This is Aline MacMahon's first starring vehicle and she does not disappoint her admirers. My patrons said picture was too short, they wanted to see more of it. Played Saturday-Midnite.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—This is a very good drama set in the tropics. It is the same old story that has been produced many times before. The story of a woman's battle for regeneration and her success. The excellent cast will help the box-office. The Warner trailer sold the show in advance to our patrons and therefore we played this one day to a very good business and pleased about 90 per cent. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Pleased very well. Had fairly good business and more good comments.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Joe Brown has always been one of our best bets, but somehow this one failed to register. No fault of the picture, however, as it's one of his best. Played Sun.-Mon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Dorothy Coonan, Frankie Darro—Played this too late. It is good and used a year earlier would have done business. Very ordinary business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—This is a drama of American history of the past 75 years and would have been one of the greatest pictures of the year except for the gruesome scenes of a woman going mad. Too bad this could not have been omitted but Warner has made a picture that everyone that saw it will remember. The trailer sold the show for us and we played one day to a very good business. Running time, 93 minutes. Played Apr. 18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Fox

CAROLINA: Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore—This drew quite a bit better than the last three or four pictures with this star. It is truly a splendid picture. It did not depend entirely on Janet. The story is outstanding and so is the cast. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Apr. 17-18-19.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—The best picture Rogers ever delivered and I predict he will never make a better one. Played Apr. 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta Young—Just another picture that don't mean a thing. Played Family Days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DEVIL TIGER: Kane Richmond, Marion Burns—A fine human picture.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian —A dumb picture and dumber directing and to cap it all, the paper had bathing girls on it and that is swell paper to put on a star that is known to be a western star. Next thing we will see George in soup and fish with a high hat.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—A fine western. If your patrons like westerns, give them this one.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Jimmy Durante, Cliff Edwards—This has beautiful routines and as a whole seemed very good, except for a few suggestive lines and wisecracks. Running time, 80 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor —A swell little show to a half filled house. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—This drew very well on a one day showing but I did not have any favorable comments on it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey, Gene Raymond —This picture is a novelty but has entirely too much footage. Played Sun.-Mon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien, Claire Trevor—Very cold weather on Saturday kept this from drawing but it was liked very, very much. A modern western with the cops on motor cycles.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—Not the biggest of the Rogers pictures but it's good entertainment and Rogers is about the only star Fox has except Gaynor that pulls. We have taken a terrible beating on Fox product this year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—A lot of people told me they passed this one up because they did not like "Dr. Bull." It drew only average Sunday-Monday business when it should have done considerably above average.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—Why do producers give such a fine picture such a rotten title. Business built up, but the title kept many away. Running time, eight reels. Played Apr. 22-23-24.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmout Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—If anybody ever produced as silly a concoction as this, I'm thankful that I didn't happen to get hold of it. Played Family Days.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory—A picture that should please every class of audience, particularly the horse lovers. I played this to the biggest midweek business I've had in two years.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Invincible

IN THE MONEY: "Skeets" Gallagher, Lois Wilson—Good comedy. Story of a typical American family. They go broke and stake everything on a prize-fighter. Comedy from beginning to end. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Apr. 10-11.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MGM

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Good entertainment. Play it even if it is old. Nice dance numbers. Morgan is good and so are they all in this story of back stage life. Played Apr. 24-25.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—Novarro more or less over-acts. Director is to blame. At times MacDonald's voice was clear as a bell and at other places it was husky. MGM does not have the best recording. A pleasing picture of the better type. Business above average the first night, but far down the second. The title was misunderstood by the masses. Their disappointment was reflected in the business done the second night. A worthwhile production. Running time, 78 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CAT AND THE FIDDLE, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Ramon Novarro—Good picture of its type, but not the type for a small town. It's too highbrow and foreign settings. The singing is very good but it's just not a small town picture, and my patrons did not like it. It did a fair business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This one disappointed in more ways than one. It failed to draw as I expected and pleased only about 60 per cent of patrons.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—One of the best pictures we have seen for a long, long time. But didn't do so good at the box-office, and coupled with the guarantee the financial result was terrible. Running time, 111 minutes. Played Apr. 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ESKIMO: Native Cast—I do not agree with one exhibitor that said that this picture could have been put into two reels of travelogue. Time and expense is apparent in the making of it and I do not think that there are any studio shots; if so, they are not noticeable. I agree that it could have been shortened and helped the picture and too much footage was given in Mala in irons. But there are some spectacular shots and sound effects in it, but it is not the big picture that should take top price. It takes a damn good picture to reach the average and this one did not for me. It is my opinion that they will like it if you can get them in, but about one a season will be plenty. The producers don't want to work the old cycle on this type.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FUGITIVE LOVERS: Robert Montgomery—A picture that was different and my customers must have known it, as they all stayed away. Did not take in film rental.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Not bad. Less laughs in this than "Tugboat Annie." I am glad we played it, but we just broke even instead of making any money. Played Apr. 28-29.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—It was good, but not a "Tugboat Annie" by any comparison. Business about half of the former.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery, Elizabeth Allan—Very good picture. Every minute it keeps you guessing what will happen next. Play it up big, it will stand advertising. Played Apr. 20-21.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Primo Carnera—Here is a real treat for the men and some of the ladies. Little too much fight, however, for most of the ladies. It drew and it pleased.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—This is by far the best picture Garbo ever appeared in. Her work is perfect. John Gilbert and other members of the cast are excellent. The story is good of its kind, and all in all a good picture. It did not draw for me because Garbo is not popular here, and Gilbert had killed himself in previous pictures. The small town does not like costume pictures; neither do they like Garbo so, of course, we lost money on the run. Another reason why we lost money is because the hero dies in the end. Hollywood seems to think that a picture to be great must have at least the hero or heroine, or both, die so that nobody can go out of the theatre happy. Just at the time Garbo makes every sacrifice possible to be with Gilbert, she finds him within a few minutes of death. With a happy ending the picture would do 25 per cent more business. Almost every exhibitor at the M.P.T.O.A. Convention at Los Angeles expressed themselves as being in favor of happy endings and good, clean family pictures. In spite of every effort on the part of the exhibitors, the producers insist on a sad ending. Is there any way possible to get them to make two endings, one sad for Hollywood, and one happy for the rest of the world. Queen Christina is a wonderful picture, spoiled by the death of Gilbert in the last reel. This kind of an ending kills the box-office value of the picture in the small towns. Played Apr. 22-23-24.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

QUEEN CHRISTINA: Greta Garbo, John Gilbert—Good picture, but not the type small town audiences care for. Garbo's English improved a lot over her previous pictures. Running time, 99 minutes. Played Apr. 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SHOULD LADIES BEHAVE?: Alice Brady, Lionel Barrymore—This one fell flat. More walkouts than any picture played during past year. Alice Brady's talk and giggle were disgusting.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

THE FAR NORTHWEST SENDS CONTRIBUTORS

From far-off Washington state and from South Dakota come two new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. Read the reports in the current issue from these:

B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Washington.

B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, South Dakota.

SHOW-OFF, THE: Spencer Tracy, Madge Evans—Just fair. Only a picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—This was very funny. Customers roared. Business slightly above average and it pleased 100 per cent.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Hats off to Leo for the greatest jungle picture of all time—and a great business getter. If you thought "The Ape Man" was great, just wait until you see this one. Just one thrill after another all through the entire show. Plenty of action, thrills and everything that your patrons could expect in a jungle picture. Nothing that I say here could do justice to the picture. You must see it to appreciate it. Weissmuller fills his part to perfection and Miss O'Sullivan turns in a splendid performance. The entire cast is well picked and put the show over wonderfully. We played this one before the large towns around here but just the same business for two days was very good and receipts much better than usual. This is without a doubt the best jungle picture ever produced. Running time, 116 minutes. Played Apr. 23-24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore, Fay Bainter—Everybody said this was a good clean picture. There is only one Barrymore and his name is Lionel.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WOMEN IN HIS LIFE, THE: Otto Kruger, Ben Lyon—Personally thought his good, but did the lowest gross in 18 months. Otto Kruger's acting superb. Guess the story or title killed it.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

WOMEN IN HIS LIFE, THE: Otto Kruger, Isabel Jewell, Ben Lyon—A good program picture. Gave good satisfaction but did not draw film rental. Story interesting and acting fine by star and all the cast but no drawing power.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING: May Robson, Jean Parker—Dandy entertainment. Will please most everyone if you can get them in, but hasn't much box-office power. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Apr. 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Monogram

BEGGARS IN ERMINE: Lionel Atwill—This is a romantic drama and a very entertaining show from Monogram. The unusual story twist makes the picture very amusing and different from the usual run of picture. We made the one mistake of playing this on Saturday but just the same did a very good business. Monogram has been stepping out this season and another year like this will find them in the ranks of the major producers. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Apr. 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—Just a little disappointed in this one. First one I've used of his Lone Star brand and it is not up to the standard of his with the Warner Four-Star brand. Played Saturday.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WEST OF THE DIVIDE: John Wayne—Average western. Wayne becoming very popular with my people.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—My wife and I were about the only ones who enjoyed this. Read reports that it was a flop, so got the literary club to sponsor it. No, I did not get rich, but made expenses. The shelf is an excellent place for it. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Apr. 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo.

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins—In spite of three well known stars' names in this picture, it fell flat. Had one of the worst Sunday-Monday business this year. It's an unsavory story that even good acting can't redeem.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft, Carole Lombard—We stressed Sally Rand, the fan dancer, in our advertising so played to a little better than average business. Why did the author have to let Raft die? Maybe it was a logical ending or an artistic ending, but people come to picture shows to be entertained. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Apr. 22-23.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BOLERO: George Raft—Pleased fairly well. Not as big a picture as I expected.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

COME ON, MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Good Marine play. People enjoyed it very much. Richard Arlen was the big shot in this play and practically held our patrons' interest by being a woman hater, but toward the end of the play he fell like they always do. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 14-15.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Plenty of action in this picture. Good story and a natural for Friday and Saturday, although I played it on Sunday and it did normal business. There is one of the most hotsy-totsy dances that is done I think by "Fuzzy Night" and the girl is plenty good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen—Just the type for a small town. I had more comments on this than I've had for some time.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Not as good as their previous picture. No music and some unnecessary smut make this one of those pictures you can pass up. Played Mar. 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

FOUR FRIGHTENED PEOPLE: Claudette Colbert, Herbert Marshall—How the mighty have fallen. It's hard to conceive how a man with the reputation of Cecil B. DeMille would permit his name to be released with a picture of this kind. It has no entertainment value, so why release it. My opinion is that it will be a complete flop and failure in every situation.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GOOD DAME: Fredric March—Gave general satisfaction. Have seen both stars in much better shows but this will get by.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOOD DAME: Fredric March, Sylvia Sidney—A good picture to kill both these stars. Both miscast and admirers of these stars were disappointed. Much disappointed. Much vulgarity regarding sex situations.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOOD DAME: Sylvia Sidney, Fredric March—This is very poor entertainment and strictly adult fare. It is a dramatic romance, dealing with crooked carnival gamblers and hootch dancers. This is just the type of show that is ruining the screen and Paramount is overloading the market with them. I personally hope Paramount will secure more likeable stories or writers next year. Played midnight show to poor business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Apr. 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—Splendid. We made the bone head mistake of using it only one day. It's worth special billing and extra time. People who never see westerns came out to see this one.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Emineuce, Ky. Small town patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—Excellent picture. Will draw extra business and please.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Doubled with "Miss Fane's Baby is Stolen" to two full houses. It could use a little more comedy, but is good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Apr. 20-21.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—Double billed with "Lone Cowboy." I think that Alice Brady and Baby LeRoy are the real stars in this picture. Pleased most of the crowd. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 20-21.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—I don't remember when I've played a picture that has given more universal satisfaction than this one gave. Everybody liked it. One or two people came back to see it the second time and brought neighbors with them. Drew slightly better than average.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NO MORE WOMEN: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLagen—Very well acted and written. This team will make a hit in any theatre. Action, comedy and anything else that the patrons like. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Mar. 24-25.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SEARCH FOR BEAUTY: Larry ("Buster") Crabbe, Ida Lupino—This play is something different than we had been having. Our patrons were well pleased. Buster Crabbe was the main actor and stole practically all the scenes. Played Mar. 27-28.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Richard Arlen—Very entertaining picture. Had several good comments.—Harold Smitb, Dreamland Tbeatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—Good play. Sally Eilers always was a favorite here and sbe went over big. The play was good and our patrons enjoyed it very much. Richard Arlen also helps to put tbis play over. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Apr. 3-4.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Charles Ruggles—Very good comedy that pleased my people. Should get by where Ruggles is liked.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Tbeatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Cbarles Ruggles, Mary Boland, W. C. Fields—Good comedy. Just a story of a married couple on tbeir second honeymoon. They take a couple along and they stay at the tavern in Gold Nugget, etc. An uproarious time from the start to the finish of the picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Apr. 7-8.—William Day, Jr., Grand Tbeatre, Dunkirk, Ohio, General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—One of the finest comedies we have played. You can go out and pusb it bard and tben not be afraid to look them in the eye when they come out. Wish we could get more like it.—Played Mar. 25.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Only a pretty good western, not near as good as it was in silent. Running time, 65 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHARF ANGEL: Victor McLaglen—Better screen this before you use it. Didn't please here.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

RKO

AGGIE APPLEBY: Wynne Gibson, Charles Farrell —Not a bad program picture with some pretty good comedy. Farrell miscast. Played Mar. 29.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Tbeatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne, Walter Huston—A very good picture, a little heavy, but the women eat it up. It should do business anywhere. Played Mar. 18.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Tbeatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

DELUGE, THE: Peggy Sbannon, Lois Wilson—Double featured. This picture is old, but the faked scenes are good. Pleased the Saturday night crowd. Everything in first four reels. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Apr. 13-14.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wheeler and Woolsey—A very good Wheeler and Woolsey. I believe the best since "Rio Rita." They bave given them a good story with a lot more action tban usual, and those who saw it were well pleased with it, in fact they thought it was great. Played Apr. 22.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace, Tbeatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY!: Wbeeler and Woolsey—Very good. Plenty of laughs and not near as smutty as "So This is Africa." Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston, Frances Dee—Went okay with the men, but had lots of walkouts from the ladies. If you want some shots of army life, this is it. We were led to believe that this was a great show for the kids on account of the horse story. Take my advice and don't play it for the school children like we did. One cartoon would suit them better. Played Apr. 26-27.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Tbeatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—There bave been so many favorable reports on this, all I can do is to add my endorsement. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katbarine Hepburn—Really not such a swell show from the angle of money expended in production or from entertaining story angle, hut acting very good and certainly "one of those things" that hit the industry every so often. Bill it heavy and it will at least double business in any town from Podunk to New York. Played Mar. 11.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hephurn, Frances Dee, Jean Parker, Joan Bennett—Excellent play. We hilled this play big and advertised it very heavy. It did a fair business but nothing like it should, in other words we were disappointed. Running time, 107 minutes. Playd Mar. 31-Apr. 1.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LOST PATROL, THE: Victor McLaglen, Reginald Denny—This picture is strong meat all the way. Dramatic and gripping. Every man hut one is killed but it is marvelous acting and when I say that the picture grips the audience, I mean that McLaglen was never better than in this role. A good deal better than his pictures with Lowe, which shows when he has a he-man part he can do it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Teatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel—Pleasing comedy drama. Seemed to satisfy fairly well on Sunday; however, believe it would prove more satisfying if placed on a Saturday change. Running time, 62 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness —A good picture that did not draw half the film rental we paid for it and that's tbat.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—Ridiculous! Don't play it even as a gratis show. I'm telling you, yes, I'm shouting to you! Running time, 69 minutes. Played Apr. 27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—This was quite a pleasing change from the regular run of shows. This was our second Hephurn picture and she has quite a following already. While it does not have the drawing power of "Little Women" it seems to he almost on a par with it in entertainment value. Running time, 88 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

SUCCESS AT ANY PRICE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Not much of a show, too heavy and slow for a small town, the redeeming feature being a good ending, but it did not please my public. Played Apr. 8.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft, Frances Dee—Just so much film. Pictures of this kind mean nothing in an entertainment way and are not worth even regular film rental. These United Artists boys produce some mighty fine pictures such as "Gallant Lady," "Roman Scandals," "The Bowery," "Palooka," etc., then tbey turn loose and give you a thing like "Blood Money." The trouble is with the story. There is a wonderful opportunity for good story writers in Hollywood. The producers seem to think if they have a popular star the picture will be a success. My advice is to cut the salaries of the stars and pay some one who knows how to write, what they are wortb. —S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding, Clive Brooks—Truly a wonderful picture. Every man, woman and child liked it. When you play this one you can tell your patrons you have a real picture. Films of this kind are few and far hetween. It's a beautiful story and that's what makes a good picture. They can all do excellent work.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding, Clive Brooks—A splendid entertainment. Story fine and acting real. Done a very poor business at box-office, but pleased all we did get and deserved a better crowd to see it. They say business is picking up in the cities. Well it never was as bad in this neck of the woods as it is today. Played Apr. 22-23.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Stuart Erwin—A real comedy, but did not draw the ladies. Spent a lot of dough advertising it. Erwin steals the show. I should have played it on Saturday instead of Sunday. Running time, 83 minutes. Played Apr. 15-16-17.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor, Gloria Stuart —Pleased everyone, including the box-office. Nuff sed. Played Apr. 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Universal

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe, Onslow Stevens, Shirley Grey—A good program picture, a little heavy action and very good acting. Played Mar. 15.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—It's a good social picture with light comedy whicb will please the more sophisticated class of patrons. Was well liked by Sunday crowd. Played Apr. 1.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLER-AT-LAW: John Barrymore—Too high class, I guess. This picture was sold us on a percentage. Our gross, two days, clear weather, no opposition $12.90. It is a good picture hut with the few who saw it, I felt like a kid giving a magic lantern show. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Apr. 13-14.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson, Onslow Stevens—A pretty good murder mystery that moves

Since you lost it, you lost money!

RECAPTURE THE FORGOTTEN AUDIENCE

You may or may not realize it, but a large number of the hard of hearing have not patronized your theatre since sound invaded the movies. Once they were regular fans — and numbered millions. When you lost them, probably you also lost one or more of their companions, for the deafened influence the decision of others in their household, to "go to the movies" . . . Hearing via the bones with Sonotone Bone Conduction Aids now enable this large "Forgotten Audience" to enjoy the talkies once again. Welcome them to your theatre! . . . Take advantage of the fact that R C A Photophone has licensed Sonotone to "bridge-in" on their sound systems; and be one of the first to offer this new and profitable service to the deafened in your community.

No Annoying Sounds from Receivers

When you use Sonotone bone conduction you may be sure that the receivers will not leak sound to annoy others in the audience for the new Lieber Oscillators are sound-proof. along at a good speed. Will please. Played Mar. 4.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

HORSEPLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine, Leila Hyams—One of these light silly comedy shows which I saw no reason for going over, but they fooled me. The action comedy patrons though it was great and asked when I would have another. A good Saturday picture in any small town. Played Apr. 5.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. G. Small town patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Staurt, Roger Pryor—Good entertainment. A comedy drama with music. Marion Marsh getting drunk in one sequence did not add to the picture. Other than that, it's clean and snappy and made a good two-day picture with us. Couple good dance numbers. In fact, a little of everything that spells entertainment. Played Apr. 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Staurt, Roger Pryor—This is a mighty fine entertaining picture. Both stars great and the whole cast good. A year ago this would have been called a special and filled the bill but now nothing short of a three-ring circus or a Broadway revue gets any praise from the natives. They have seen so much. There has been too many big pictures. They have all got to be big to pay film rentals.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—A good picture that can be classed a little above program and pleased all. Played Feb. 25.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains—This is without question an unusual picture. The trick photography puts it over, but the drawback on pictures of this kind is that the parents kick on it because of the scariness of this type. The supporting cast with their cockney accent is not so hot for the average audience in the small towns.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—One of those different pictures. Although it runs a little to the horror angle which they do not go for any more, is entertaining because of the fact that they cannot figure out how the invisible part is done and so they go out and talk about it and bring in extra business. Played Mar. 22.—B. V. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

LOVE BIRDS, THE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Played this on Friday and Saturday and seemed to go over fine. Running time, 64 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damehell—I though it was a good program. It has comedy music and a fair story. Pleased about 50 per cent. The trouble being with this, like all pictures that bring radio stars to the screen, the public has already formed their idea as to what the people will be like and then are either pleased or disgusted. Played Apr. 12.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—Truly a swell picture and one worth pushing. Women go for it in a big way as it makes them sob. Some of the men do not like this, but they have to admit that it was one swell show. Will do Sunday in any man's town. It has a very good story and acting. Played Apr. 15.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Margaret Sullavan, John Boles—Have been running a theatre for 18 years and never before have I seen the work of Margaret Sullavan equalled. It will tear your heart out if it's not made of stone. Truly a wonderful picture. One that you will feel proud in having shown in your theatre. Played Sun-Mon.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall—Personally consider this an extra good western and the best Ken has made. Played Sat.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Western fans enjoyed this one. If you show westerns, by all means play this one. Almost as good as "Strawberry Roan," but lacks some of its drawing power. Running time, seven reels.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

Warner

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, William Powell, Joan Blondell—Wonderful production, good music, big crowds, but I didn't get the money. Running time, 101 minutes. Played Apr. 8-9-10.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Grand. The best musical yet. This makes the rest of them look tame. While it did not do enormous business, due to the fact that it had been played all around, nevertheless it did about average.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal ReRoy, Rochelle Hudson—One of the sweetest pictures to come out of Hollywood for a long time. Put this one on for your high school. Every member of your schools will enjoy it. The mothers and fathers will like it, and it's just all round good clean entertainment. Played Apr. 20-21.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Good show. Should go over anywhere.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Another good picture that failed at the box-office. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Very good comedy drama. Best newspaper story we have played. Running time, 75 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Fine entertainment. Patrons well pleased. But personally think the title poor. Did not draw as well as it should. Titles are necessary to draw, titles that mean something.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez, Gene Raymond—A very good program picture. Very interesting story and well acted. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—This is a very good picture in a town where Kay Francis is popular. However, it did very little for us. Some of the patrons said it was very good and others said it was just fair. So there you are! Played Apr. 14.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—A splendid dramatic picture that did not draw.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Good. My patrons liked it and told me so.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—Another good picture from the fellows who know how to make good pictures. This is entertainment plus. It's not stupendous, it's not magnificent, it's not the greatest picture ever made, it didn't cost five million, but it has an evening's entertainment and that's what they want and what the people pay for. We don't give a tinker's dam what a picture cost. What we exhibitors want is good stories and more good stories. They have stars enough. Any of the five hundred stars in Hollyood can make a good picture if you give him a good story. Please, Mr. Producer, give us good stories. Amen.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—A very good murder mystery picture, which is much more advanced than the majority of this type of picture. William Powell is excellent as well as the rest of the cast. We don't blame Warners for deciding to co-star Powell with Ruth Chatterton instead of Kay Francis so much. Co-star Kay with Paul Muni and you would have two excellent combinations. Played Apr. 17-18.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—A good murder mystery. Keeps you guessing to the last reel. Business average.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

LADY KILLER: James Cagney—Cagney is a good draw for us. He didn't disappoint them in this; it's plenty good. Played midweek.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural natronage.

NARROW CORNER, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A very good picture with an excellent cast. Patricia Ellis is certainly going to be an unusual personality on the screen after a little more practice. There is some excellent dialogue in this picture and with a Warner musical comedy, there should be nothing left to be desired. Played Apr. 20-21.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Short Features
Educational

BEANSTALK JACK: Terry-Toons—Good. Music fine. Well liked.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

BLUE BLACKBIRDS: Moran and Mack—This is really funny, if we were to judge by the laughs of our people. Play it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR, THE: Song Hit Stories—A very fine reel. It adds class to any theatre. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—This is just about the right footage to make Buster funny. A dandy comedy in every way. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOD BAD MAN, THE: Coronet Comedy—Pass this up if you can. It's the biggest lot of nothing that two reels of film can be. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GOOD BAD MAN, THE: Coronet Comedies—Undoubtedly one of the most disgusting comedies I have ever run. Is it that Warner Brothers can produce the only satisfactory comedies? Rather than entertaining, other companies' comedies bore.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GYPSY FIDDLER, A: Terry-Toons—The Terry-Toons are equal to any cartoon on the market. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLAND DAYS: Terry Toon—Clever cartoon about cheese making. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

INVENTORS, THE: Coronet Comedies—Junk! Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

KID 'N AFRICA: Baby Burlesks—A story of the missionary among the blacks all by the youngsters. Quite a few laughs in this. A takeoff on Tarzan. Play it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BOY BLUE: Terry-Toons—A great cartoon! Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsville, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

LOOSE RELATIONS: Andy Clyde—As good as any Andy Clyde to date. Has plenty of laughs and no smut. Just clean ridiculous fun even if it does bring in the old mother-in-law. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

OLD GYPSY CUSTOM, AN: Andy Clyde—Made a good slapstick comedy for weekend crowd. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STAGE HAND, THE: Harry Langdon—Good, funny, clean, entertaining. Running time, two reels.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont, Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

THREE BEARS, THE: Terry Toon—Goldilocks and the three bears brought to life via the cartoons. Vastly amusing. Don't fail to use it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Fox

ELEPHANT TRAILS: Magic Carpet Series—Good shots of elephant at work and play. Book it.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FILMING THE FASHIONS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very enjoyable. Will appeal to the women mostly, but even the men like the bathing beauties of 20 years ago as contrasted with the present ones. Running time, nine minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SCRAPING THE SKY: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Showing how tall buildings and statutes and bridges all over the world are cleaned or repaired. Very interesting, very thrilling and very gruesome at end where a man is shown falling to his death. This last could have been left off. Running time, nine minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TRAV'LLING THE ROAD: Alexander Grey—This did not please very well. We used it to start with, then cut it out on second show.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

BARGAIN OF THE CENTURY, THE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Here is a very good comedy with the famous comedy team of Pitts-Todd at their best. This is very good entertainment and will please all of your patrons. Plenty of laughs and will make a good filler on any program.—Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charlie Chase—Good. Chase takes four parts, four brothers.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charley Chase—Charley does a lot of acting in this one. The title is certainly in keeping with the picture. Lots of laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HI, NEIGHBOR: Our Gang—This comedy has laughs in it and the kids seem to like them. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO: Our Gang—The kids said it was the best Our Gang they ever saw. The adults remarked that it was the silliest short they ever saw.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

OLIVER, THE EIGHTH: Laurel and Hardy—A victory for this team of comedians. They are funny if given the right material. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PLANE NUTS: Musical Revues—This comedy is fair. The musical numbers are cut from the feature "Flying High" that MGM released two or three years ago and several of our patrons told us so. Healy and his stooges are always good for a laugh. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW: Musical Comedies—Poor. A bum effort. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

ROAST BEEF AND MOVIES: Musical Revues—About the poorest musical revue of the series. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ROAST BEEF AND MOVIES: Musical Revue—Fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

ROAST BEEF AND MOVIES: Musical Revue—Some good dance scenes and musical numbers all in color, but the comedy sequences are not as hot, but that is only short, so we will overlook that and recommend it for its beauty. Running time, 15 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

ROAST BEEF AND MOVIES: Musical Revues—Good dance numbers in color, but these comedies are a washout.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROPING WILD BEARS: Oddities—Educational and very interesting. Have not ran one poor Oddity. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BLOW ME DOWN: Popeye, the Sailor—Here is one of the best cartoons I have ever had the pleasure of screening for my patrons. They all like these cartoons and they are fast becoming more popular than Mickey Mouse and personally I think they are much more entertaining. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BROADWAY KNIGHTS: Headliners—Excellent. One dance number and Yacht Club Boys sing two numbers.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HA! HA! HA!: Betty Boop Cartoon—This is another good cartoon from Paramount featuring Betty Boop and assisted by Koko. Betty as the dentist and Koko as the patient are very funny and will please every one in your audience. Just the kind of entertainment we like and want more of them. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Eton Boys—One of the finest Screen Songs we have played, and the first one that our audience ever joined in and sang with the bouncing ball. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

JUST AN ECHO: Bing Crosby—Best of the Crosby comedies. Had several compliments on it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KEEPS RAINING ALL THE TIME: Gertrude Niesen—I wish the producers would check up with each other's output so they would not duplicate songs so often. This is the third short we have had this winter that featured the song "Stormy Weather." This is good if you have not played all the others. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

BRIDAL BAIL: Blonde and Red Head Series—Nothing extra. Barely gets by. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER: Ruth Etting—If you pay express on this you are stung. Two-reelers like this make a person sorry there are such things as movies.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FITS IN A FIDDLE: Clark and McCullough—These good comedians are being wrecked by poor material. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HIZZONER: Musicals—Unusually good comedy, but no music. Running time, 21½ minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Md. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

JUST DOGS: Silly Symphonies—Poorest of all Sillies. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MAD DOCTOR, THE: Mickey Mouse—Mickey Mouse Cartoons are usually good. This one not quite up to standard.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS, THE: Silly Symphony—Nice one in color, but why advertise the pottery business?—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

COUNTY FAIR: Oswald Cartoons—Oswald cartoons are always good. Running time, eight minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Universal Comedies—Played this with a Ken Maynard western and seemed to please. Running time, two reels.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BIG CITY FANTASY, A: Melody Masters—This band is good, but did not seem to please quite as well as some of the other bands. Running time, one reel.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

BUDDY'S DAY OUT: Looney Tunes—I think that all of the Looney Tune Series please. Running time, eight minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Picdmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

EDDIE DUCHIN AND BAND: Melody Masters—Very enjoyable. Running time, one reel.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

NOT TONIGHT JOSEPHINE: Broadway Brevities—Splendid. Has everything that it takes to make a good entertaining short subject. Good comedy, splendid colorful settings, lively musical numbers and good stars. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

THAT'S THE SPIRIT: Melody Masters—So-so as a one-reeler.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre. Cotter, Ark. General patronage.

'TIS SPRING: Broadway Brevities—Very good. Made entirely in color. Running time, two reels.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

The report of A. H. Edwards, in the last week's issue, on "The Wolf Dog" incorrectly named the production a Monogram serial. "The Wolf Dog" is a Mascot picture.

FIGHTING WITH KIT CARSON: Johnny Mack Brown, Noah Berry—We have not played many westerns since this has been run. Good riding, lots of shooting, the hero and the villain are all as per westerns. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY SQUADRON, THE: Bob Steele—A very good serial. It's holding up fine.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DEAR HERALD:

A great many people are becoming panicky for fear that the Government's wheat production curtailment plan will cause a bread famine in this country. They need have no fears on this score, for, according to Senator Capper's paper, the Topeka Capital, there will be 132 per cent more wheat grown in Kansas this year than was grown last. All of which makes us wonder if not raising wheat isn't the best way to insure plenty of bread.

We are in receipt of a letter from Miss Gertrude Merriam who is the secretary of the "Round Table" department of the HERALD. We were glad to get this letter because it convinces us that she, together with Miss Mildred Early and Miss Jeanette Meehan of the Hollywood office, makes the HERALD staff, minus the writer of this colyum, 100 per cent plus with nothing off for good behavior. Thanks, Miss Merriam, for your letter. It was very nice of you.

Miss Merriam quotes from a letter she had received from Fred Hinds of the Strand Theatre at Whitewater, Wis., which says, "What happened to that old cut-throat, Jaysee? He seems to be glued to Neligh. Judging from his column, he's ill. Jaysee generally manages to get around every other year and spend about four days with me." That's a darn nice question for that badger to ask when he has known for four months that we have been confined to the house, and still are, and hasn't written a word just because he is too doggoned lazy. The last time we visited Fred we noticed that he had what is known as "The Lifts." His wife had to lift him up to the dinner table and lift him into the car, but we noticed that he could play golf and row a fishing boat as well as we could and would play "hide and go seek" with the Whitewater ladies every evening that it wasn't raining unless we insisted on going along with him, and yet he calls us "that old cut-throat" after all we have done for him.

According to the Omaha (Neb.) Bee-News, there is to be a nudist wedding there before long. The groom is 29 and the bride is 24, and they are to be perfectly nude as will also be the one who performs the ceremony and the company that gathers to watch the performance. We'll betcha the church won't hold 'em. Omaha seems to have gone from Tom Dennison to nudism. We always supposed until now that Omaha was a part of Nebraska. When they get to going nude we are going fishing.

We don't recall at this time just who wrote the following verses, which we used to recite years ago, but whoever it was must have had a prophetic vision and was writing to encourage the timorous-minded people of 1934, for this is what he said:

Sail on, majestic ship of state,
Sail on, oh Union, strong and great,
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all its hopes of coming years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.

We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workman wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast and sail and rope
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope.

Sail on, majestic ship of state,
Sail on, oh Union, strong and great,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea,
Our prayers, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our prayers, our hopes, our joys, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears.
Are all with thee, are all with thee.

The chances are that we have these verses muddled up a little, since we have not called them to mind for some number of years, but the author of them certainly had confidence in the stability of the country when he wrote them.

We hear people say today that this nation is on the verge of a revolution, that the rich will own and govern the country and the majority of the people will be serfs, etc., etc. The same thing was said back in the days of the Civil War. People argued it during the World War, and there were those who predicted that the wrecking of the Government would take place after the last election. They forget that the Democrats are just as much interested in the welfare of the country as the Republicans (even though they might seem to lack the ability to run the Government as it should be run), but they are nevertheless as much interested.

People tell us that the lack of "Confidence" is what ails the country. Well, maybe it is. We had confidence in four banks in this town and every darned one of 'em went broke, and so did we, and those of the officers who are still living are holding down fat Government jobs and not a penitentiary in sight. Notwithstanding all this, we believe this to be the best nation on earth. How do you stand on this, Gertie?

Notwithstanding that Dillinger and his gang got away, the five thousand federal officers and Wisconsin citizens and state police should receive a life pension from the Government for capturing three defenseless women supposed to be, according to press reports, the "Molls" of Dillinger and his gang. We don't know whether they were or not, but if they were, we will betcha that Dillinger is thankful to the police for helping him get rid of them. Getting rid of a Moll is harder than getting rid of the seven-year itch.

We read in the press that the women all over the country are organizing a drive to rid pictures of sex, dirt and "Going-to-have-a-baby" stuff. That sounds good and we are for 'em, but we have no confidence in their bringing results, for as long as the producers are sex-minded and dirt-minded there will continue to be sex and dirt in pictures regardless of all the women in the country. The producers try to pass the buck to the public and claim the reason they put sex and dirt in pictures is because the public demands it. It is about as senseless an argument as it would be to say that father should take a gun and go out to the barn and shoot a horse to prove to Willie that it is dangerous to handle firearms. All the public know about a picture before they see it they learn from the paid criticisms in the fan magazines, and if it is an adverse criticism our guess is they don't get any pay for it, so the criticisms are all good. Why shouldn't they be?

Did you ever try to write with a hot water bottle up against the small of your back? Well, that's our case right now, and our wife has made it so hot that we have lost a big slab of our skin and our backbone has curled up like a fried weeny.

We've got a spot in our back that seems as large as a washtub and it is so sore that we holler every time we happen to think of it, and the old ladies of the community and the doctor claim it is lumbago. Well, may be it is. We have looked it up in the almanac and find that the word comes from two languages—Lum comes from the Swede, and Bago comes from the Sioux Indians. Don't send us any remedies for it for we tried everything already except stove polish and Old Dutch Cleanser, and those two come next. Your sympathy might help some.

Theatres Facing $208,400 Increase In New York Tax

With Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia's business tax bill in New York City passed this week by two of the municipal boards, despite protests expressed by more than 30 speakers representing powerful financial and mercantile interests, it was estimated this week that an increase of $208,400 annually for 15 major theatre circuits would result from enactment of the proposed license fee bill. The bill, if passed by the General Welfare Committee, will go into effect June 30.

Loew's would be the hardest hit of the New York circuits if the bill becomes law, with an increase estimated at $59,250 annually. The circuit now pays $12,000 yearly. Under the proposed regulation, this would be boosted to $71,250. RKO would be next in line with a rise of $31,700, compared with its current $6,850.

Under the proposed increase, theatres seating less than 600 will pay $300 annually instead of the current $100; from 600 to 1,000 seats, the new rate would be $500; from 1,000 to 1,500, $750; from 1,500 to 2,500, $1,000; from 2,500 to 3,500, $1,500, and for all theatres seating upward of 3,500, $2,000. All open-air theatres are to be taxed $150, an increase of $100.

Following is a detailed listing covering New York's principal circuits and showing present and proposed license fees:

	Present Fee	New Fee	Difference
Century	$2,600	$14,000	$11,400
Consolidated	3,400	14,650	11,250
Elite	700	2,200	1,500
Isle Theatre	1,950	8,600	6,650
Loew's	12,000	71,250	59,250
Manhattan	3,100	11,550	8,450
Lee Ochs	850	2,900	2,050
Paramount	950	6,500	5,550
Prudential	550	1,850	1,300
RKO	6,850	38,550	31,700
Randfore	8,600	38,300	29,700
Rugoff & Becker	800	3,600	2,800
Skouras	5,450	26,250	20,800
S & C	4,650	18,050	13,400
Yoost	900	3,500	2,600
	$53,350	$261,750	$208,400

Mayor La Guardia's tax of one-twentieth of one per cent on gross business receipts of more than $15,000 was passed this week by both the Board of Aldermen and the Board of Estimate. The law, coupled with the proposed license fees, will make the burden of local theatre owners more difficult to bear than any they have experienced heretofore, they said. Theatre interests had attempted to have all theatres exempted from the provisions of the measure.

Under this measure, levies on gross business receipts for 1933 will become payable August 1, and will cost the New York exhibition branch between $400,000 and $500,000 a year.

Manhattan Opera House To Show Films, Vaudeville

Announcement was made in New York this week that the old Manhattan Opera House, 34th street and Eighth avenue will reopen September 3, with a combined motion picture and vaudeville policy. Jerome Rosenberg, New York theatre operator and brother of Walter Reade, has signed a 21-year lease on the building.

In addition to various alterations of the theatre proper, Mr. Rosenberg expects to build a large ballroom, open air cabaret and dining room. More than 25,000 square feet of the roof area will be utilized for this.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

22—GIVEAWAYS IN RURAL SECTIONS

QUESTION—In the case of rural sections, where there are several theatres of small size, not in the same towns but drawing from the same rural townships and county, is it in violation of the code for one exhibitor to work in the territory giving free tickets in quantities quite above the normal amount usually given in exchange for poster space and the like?—MICHIGAN.

ANSWER—Because the theatre which is giving away the free tickets, in the manner described above, operates in competition with other theatres, even though such theatres are not in the same town, but draw from the same territory, the practice is in violation of the motion picture code (Article V. E. Part 3, Section 1-A).

This practice, which is in effect "throw-away tickets," also could be construed as tending to deceive the public, in that part of the patrons are misled into paying a cash admission by believing that all must pay the advertised admission charge. It also violates the standard contract provision for a minimum admission of ten cents, thereby also violating subsection 1-B of the same clause in the code.

23—HOURS FOR SIGN PAINTERS

QUESTION—I am the sign painter and poster artist in a theatre. The quality and quantity of the work required of me makes it necessary for me to work more than 50 hours a week average, and sometimes I work 70 to 75 hours in a single week. Can you tell me what class of employes named in the code a sign painter should be identified with, and also can you tell me if the Code Authority offers me protection if I ask to be allowed to work in compliance with the scale of wages and hours stipulated in the code?—CONNECTICUT.

ANSWER—Sign painter-poster artists are not specifically provided for in the labor clauses of the motion picture code (although "painters" are), and, therefore, it appears that their employment might be subject to Section 8 of Article IV, C, Part 1, which says that theatre employees not specifically provided for, when directly and regularly employed by a theatre, shall be paid not less than 40 cents per hour, or $16.00 for a 40-hour week.

The code specifically prohibits theatres from requiring such employees to work more than 40 hours in any week, except in emergencies.

The NRA Regional Labor Board in the key city nearest the theatre is the proper place to file complaints against theatre labor violations. In previous cases where employees claimed they were discharged by the theatre after having filed a complaint, the Regional Labor Board ordered the theatre to reinstate such employees.

24—CODE DOES NOT SPECIFY AFL LABOR

QUESTION—Has a theatre the right to employ a projectionist not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor? Where a theatre has operated for the past four years with a projectionist other than an American Federation man, does the code specify he shall be replaced by an American Federation projectionist?—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The motion picture code does not say an exhibitor must employ a projectionist either affiliated or not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. But the code does say that no exhibitor shall interfere with the rights of the projectionist to join any union whatsoever the projectionist chooses, and prohibits the employer from discharging the employee because of his joining a union or labor organization.

25—CUT-RATES IN MERCHANT TIEUP

QUESTION—A grocery store owner has approached me with a proposition that he buy coupons from me at five cents each, on which he would imprint, for distribution to his customers: "Through the courtesy of John Smith and Company, this coupon is worth ten cents toward one adult admission to the Blank theatre."

This would net me the difference between the admission price and the coupon value (ten cents), plus the five cents charged the grocer for the coupon. Does this violate the motion picture code? This theatre is the only one in town, although there are several grocery stores.—MICHIGAN.

ANSWER—Cut-rate tickets, or "coupons," as described above are a violation of the motion picture code, except when such a practice is being used by a theatre which has absolutely no possible or probable competition, or when the effect is to deceive the public as to the actual admission scale at the theatre, or when the theatre fails to maintain at all times the minimum admission price specified in the exhibition contract under which the picture is licensed for exhibition.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service for all readers. They contain many explanatory points pertinent to the business as its conduct is prescribed by the Code.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Columbia Club Installs New Officers at Dinner

In the presence of Harry and Jack Cohn, executives, the installation of officers of the Columbians, Columbia Pictures Corporation interoffice club, took place at a dinner dance May 4 in New York at the Theatre Cafe.

Newly elected officers then installed are Hal Hode, president; Milton Hannock, first vice-president; Sam Hacker, second vice-president; Vincent Borelli, treasurer; Clara Gorin, secretary; Minna Stieglitz, assistant secretary; Ruth Cohen, financial secretary; Mary Koban, chairman of the board of governors; Frances Goldberg, exchange representative, and Danny Heiss, press agent.

Mascot Signs Three Unit Producers; Lon Young Joins

Martin G. Cohn, Louis Baum and Sig Neufeld have joined Mascot Pictures as unit producers, following the appointment of Lou Sarecky as associate producer. Mr. Neufeld was at one time in charge of short subject production for Universal. Lon Young has been signed by the company to handle publicity on the Coast.

CODE CHARGES CALLED UNFAIR

Under the new schedule of code charges the Wall Street-owned theatres pay little or nothing and the theatres owned by citizens are over-charged unmercifully.

The Code Authority don't tell us what share the producers and distributors pay. I imagine it is a fair sum. We are entitled to know what it is and without hooey or Hays' mathematics. The total charge seems to be reasonable. The assessment of exhibitors is done in such manner that it is unjust and inequitable.

The Music Hall, New York, which grosses thirty millions a year and is owned by the Rockefellers and the Electric Trust, pays $96 a year. The exhibitor at Mountain Home, Idaho, who grosses $2,000 a year, when he can run at all, pays $12 a year.

The first principle of taxation is ability to pay. Mr. Kent was authority for the statement that all independents are only fifteen per cent of the total film rent income.

Apparently this is to be reversed and independents are to pay 85 per cent of the code charges as far as exhibition is concerned. I have no kick on my own charges which are not oppressive, but I am concerned with the struggling exhibitors burdened by the $12 charges and the little fellow with a 400-seat house 'way out in the Bronx, who is also hooked by the code charges. These charges should be changed, also the threat to exclude from the code if the charges are not instantly paid.

I paid mine. Some exhibitors, however, may be trapped by this.—HERMAN J. BROWN, Inland Amusement Co., Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

Orchestra Leader Dead

Jacob Bohrer, 70, for 28 years leader of the orchestra at the Keith's, Cincinnati, until the elimination of that policy at the theatre in 1928, died there recently following a heart attack. His widow and a son survive.

WE "YES" MR. MAYER

A HOLLYWOOD dispatch to last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald reporting on an address of Mr. Louis B. Mayer before the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said: "He charged exhibitors with sitting around 'awaiting Springtime' and trade paper inserts in colors to govern their buying and with deciding what they'll pay each distributor in point of rental."

Mr. Mayer is entirely correct in his assertion.

We further know of no reason why the exhibitor should not await with interest the product announcements of the producers. We know of no reason why the exhibitor having read those product announcements should not make them a basis of judgment concerning his contemplated purchases for the coming season.

All that we need to add for Mr. Mayer's further information in this connection is that Motion Picture Herald is where the exhibitor looks. It has an audited attest to its circulation, with some 12,000 exhibitor readers.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"COMFORTABLY COOLED"

Not so many years back, a well-working cooling system was all that was needed in the summer months to bring patrons to the box office, and theatres so favored were not overly beset by the problems of profitable attendance during the dog days. Product could be indifferent, creature comforts minimized, and yet the ticket machine would tinkle merrily and often.

But not today.

Weather-making competition now appears in many forms and in many places. Department stores, restaurants, hotels and railroads, learning from the theatre the profit lessons of manufactured weather, have installed air conditioning systems, that have opened new avenues of escape from the heat, away from the box office. Folks do not now have to depend solely upon the theatre auditorium to protect them from the scorching rays of the sun.

So the theatre must have more on the bill this season to hold its own, and must more vigorously proclaim it. Which leads to the only out—the showmanship behind the product.

Exhibitors must unloose the strings around the bankroll and allow their managers every reasonable latitude in putting over the shows. Daylight savings, shorter working weeks, cheap cars, better roads, renewed interest in professional baseball and other outdoor recreations are tough competition. Extensive installations of cooling plants make it still tougher.

This is no time for hesitancy. The exhibitor must fight back and fight hard for his share of this summer's business.

"DELEGATED AUTHORITY"?

In the discussion of the advantages of chain operation versus independent management, or vice versa, the opposing sides may be able to gather some effective ammunition from a recent Saturday Evening Post article by Jesse Rainsford Sprague, entitled, "What About the Small Merchant?"

In favor of the independent, Mr. Sprague states that the main trouble of big business is delegated authority, and gives his opinion that the most efficiently run store is the one where the proprietor takes care of all trade personally. When assistants are hired and when authority is delegated to others, then the business does not function as profitably.

In favor of the chain operator, this author then declares that in spite of this delegation of authority, big business progresses because it is more efficient, because employees have to measure up to a certain business standard to which the independent merchant may be indifferent in the conduct of his establishment.

To an appreciable extent, the breaks are with the independent, opines Mr. Sprague, insomuch as local sentiment is with the home-towner. Bankers, newspapers, chambers of commerce pull for him for economic reasons. Civic clubs prefer him for membership as the permanent resident is at liberty to come and go on club affairs, an advantage not enjoyed by the chain store manager.

Delegation of authority, as Mr. Sprague says, may be poison in the system of big business, but not as concerns the motion picture theatre. For, in our opinion, the refusal to delegate the necessary authority to managers is, in too many instances, one of the main reasons why circuit operation fails.

From Round Tabler Frank Larson, skipper of the Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho, the following wire of anguish as we go to press:

> "Mike A Call For Help SOS Stop Ask 'Em Please To Lay Off Those Large Press Sheets Today I Have Next Week's Program And An Office Twenty Five By Forty Stop Should I Rent A Stadium To Find Out What Next Week Is All About Stop Like A Brother From The Lodge I Ask You Please Stop They Ain't Fooling Us Stop And For The Love Of Pete Ask Them To Stop I'm Asking You Regards."

Frank evidently remembers with fondness the good ole days when a press sheet was a press sheet and not a production.

PERSEVERANCE WINS

"Honorable Mentions" in the January and February competitions only served evidently to inspire Manager Walter Golden to greater efforts, with the result that his "Nana" April campaign was chosen unanimously by the three judges for the fourth Quigley Award. Exploiting any theatre successfully today is no pushover, and that Walter is doing so well at his independent, neighborhood house in the face of the keenest opposition indicates the tougher the going, the harder he fights.

"Perseverance wins" may be nothing but a dated copybook maxim, but in Golden's case it still seems to be paying sizable dividends.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"Hilda, I told the manager he was going to clean up on this campaign."

London Exploiteer Clicks on "Parade"

The fast moving Dillon Damen, London Warner ad chief, who was responsible for that excellent ostrich feather tieup recently reported in these pages, again clicks strongly, this time on "Footlight Parade," at the Royal Cinema, Marble Arch, London.

The accompanying photo shows one of his lobby displays measuring 30 feet in width by 20 feet high and six feet deep. Giant sized cutout figures of Cagney and Keeler were placed on either side, bordering the center piece, a reproduction of the waterfalls scene. Fresh flowers were banked along the bottom and special lighting effects enhanced the effectiveness of this well executed flash.

For a street stunt, Damen put out a ballyhoo sound truck which he states is the biggest "mobile shop window" ever used in England. It measured 35 feet, with art displays behind windows on each side, the P. A. system playing the song hits. Dillon reports that the bally covered over 1,000 miles touring London and all its suburbs, arousing more than passing comment in its travels.

This Round Tabler's activities are a good example of the pace the overseas members are now setting. Aces, men.

Damen's Lobby Stopper

Francis Deering Clicks Hard on "Tarzan"

Newly-appointed Manager Francis Deering, at Loew's State, Memphis, Tenn., sends on a well executed campaign on "Tarzan and His Mate," as his first contribution to the pages from his new post.

Working with the newspaper that runs the "Tarzan" strip, Francis put on the coloring contest, breaking it with a page one story and continuing for an entire week. Credit lines were carried on the strip and paper bannered all trucks as an extra plug.

In advance, Deering arranged a lobby display of skins, stuffed animals and cutouts of the stars, the flash being transferred to a prominent main street fur window during the run. Particular attention was paid to schools, a sound truck carrying papier mache elephant making the rounds playing the special "Tarzan" record and from which the circus throwaways were distributed.

Book marks were utilized in all libraries and inserts placed in match packages in cigar stores. Over 200 news stand cards were also planted and in addition to radio tieups, taxicab and street advertising plus extra billing, Francis also worked on a "Tarzan" prize swimming contest with the YMCA.

Cohen Cracks Editorial On Run of "It Happened"

There is very little that tops favorable mention on newspaper editorial pages to advance theatre prestige, and smart showmen always strive to break that very desirable spot. Add now to those who have accomplished this the name of Manager Ben M. Cohen, College Theatre, New Haven, Conn., gaining this rare award on "It Happened One Night" at the end of its three weeks' run at his theatre.

Ben switched to the sport page of another paper for a contest on "Show Off" wherein guest tickets were given to those compiling the best list of the "Show Offs" in the various sports, the grand stand players who by their flashy tactics annoy the customers.

Caldwell Puts On Crime Want Ad Gag

A few weeks back, we spoke of Wally Caldwell's "detective" classified hookup with one of his Toledo papers, in which crimes supposedly committed by "Mr. X" could be solved by clues inserted in the different classified columns. It made a swell buildup for the picture at the Valentine Theatre, and the following dope forwarded by Wally will be interesting to members.

Each day for six consecutive days the paper ran a brief outline of a "crime," the synopsis containing a clue referring readers to certain sections of the want page where the answers could be found. At the end of the six days the answers, to win prizes, had to be sent to the paper at one time. These answers of course were the proper ads clipped from the page. To get around postal laws, contestants were allowed to copy these notices.

Here is how one of the "crimes" started: "A man out of work found a string of pearls with a tag affixed, saying they were from a leading jeweler."

To find the owner of the pearls, the reader would turn to the "Help Wanted Male" Column, to start, as the man was unemployed; then to "For Sale Miscellaneous," as the jeweler would be listed there. The rest of the crime referred to taxis, vacant houses, broken windows, lack of rugs on floor of house, no bulbs in lighting fixtures.

All in all, the various clues took in all the paper's ad classifications, which were covered during the six days of the contest.

Legion and Boy Scouts Parade for Madden

Two good newspaper contests were put over by Manager J. J. Madden, Granby Theatre, Norfolk, Va., as part of his advance on "Forgotten Men." The first in cooperation with one paper being a "scrambled word" contest in which the title was spelled out as follows: "Go For Ten Ment" with passes given to the first forty sending in the correct title. The second contest was put on by a furniture store in that form of a puzzle, the picture and the theatre being plugged in all store ads.

Excellent cooperation was obtained from the American Legion and Boy Scouts, these organizations in uniform parading on the opening night and attending the theatre (see photo) in a body. A snappy street idea was the parading of soldiers in uniform throughout the business district in advance and during the date.

Madden's American Legion Tieup

INVISIBLE? Manager Cliff Work, Golden Gate, San Francisco, and his publicity chief, Emil Umann, are responsible for this stop-'em display on "Invisible Man." Good use was made of the 24- and 3-sheet cutouts.

Wax Star Figures Plug '20th Century'

[Picture in Pictorial Section]

The stars could not get away from the studios, so George Brown and his Columbia ad crew did the next best thing to plug the New York premiere of "Twentieth Century" at the Music Hall. They rigged up two life-size wax figures of John Barrymore and Carole Lombard, and planted them on the observation platform of the crack "20th Century" choo-choo as it pulled into Grand Central Station.

The figures, waving a smiling welcome, were said to be so lifelike that they drew early crowds of commuters and film fans, many of whom mistook them for the real stars. As an extra plug, the officers of the New York Central turned out to greet the arrivals.

The wax stars were exhibited at Grand Central in advance of the opening with posters calling attention to the date, and as additional publicity, 30 revolving advertising signs in the station were turned over as a further plug on the picture and show.

Egan and Bayne Work Fast on "Carolina"

Teaser cards with the copy "Coming Carolina" were sniped in all sections of the city ten days ahead of the date of "Carolina" at the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, as part of the drive put on by Pete Egan and his exploiteer, Dave Bayne. Then a week in advance, 22 by 28 cards in black and gold bronze with theatre copy were also sniped, a number of these planted in promiment spots within a 40-mile radius.

A lucky number herald gag was tied into a music shop window display with copy advising patrons to obtain their copy of the Palace program for the prizes. Small cards were made up to fit over serviette holders in restaurants and soda fountains, with other eat shops featuring special dishes named after the picture.

A "See Tobacco as It Is Grown in Carolina" hookin was made with prominent tobacco company that returned windows on the picture against the background of tobacco stills and machinery supplied by the smoke firm. Ads were carried in weekly broadcast magazine, stations plugged the song hits and the campaign was topped off with a bowling alley tiein where guest tickets were given to high scores.

WALTER GOLDEN WINS APRIL QUIGLEY AWARD

Judges Decide Unanimously for Campaign on 'Nana' Executed by Manager of the Riverside Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

To the manager of a neighborhood theatre, an independent operation, in the State of Florida, goes the fourth Quigley plaque, awarded to Walter L. Golden, Riverside Theatre, Jacksonville, for his campaign on United Artists' "Nana."

For the first time in the history of the competition, the decision of the judges was unanimous, Messrs. Felix F. Feist, Hal Horne and William H. Raynor all choosing Golden's entry for the highest honors. His campaign and photo will be run in the next issue.

"First Mentions" were awarded to Manager William L. Hendricks, Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., on "Wonder Bar," and to Manager S. S. Solomon, Capitol Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., on "Wild Cargo." The campaigns of both these Round Tablers were of very high quality, and scored way up in the judges' rating.

Twelve other entrants were again selected for "Honorable Mentions," their names and designations, as well as the "firsts," are set down in the column to the right. Certificates in recognition of these honors have been forwarded to these winners. Included in the list are entrants from Canada and England, the former country being represented by Manager John Nelson, of North Bay, Ontario, and the latter, by Manager C. R. Young of Leeds.

Golden has been represented in the Quigley Awards from the beginning, winning "Honorables" in the January and February competitions. Round Tabler Hendrick is a long time contributor to the Club pages, and will be remembered for his recent winning of one of the main prizes in the Paramount Mae West contest. Sig Solomon also received an "Honorable" in the February judging.

Of the 12 April "Honorables," seven or eight have earned previous mentions, and one, Kenneth Grimes, was the winner of the first, the January Award. And to Gene Curtis, of the Palace, Montreal, an extra bow, for being represented for the fourth successive time in the awards columns.

Campaigns for May promise as high a standard as those of the previous months. Quite a few are already on hand, and many more are expected. Managers are requested to be especially careful in forwarding photos, tear sheets, heralds, etc., of everything done in their campaigns, as the judges insist on this visual evidence in considering the individual entries.

Again we invite managers all over the world to compete. The rules have been frequently carried in previous issues, and are called to the attention of those who would like to compete and who are not familiar with the few simple requirements.—MIKE.

Celebrates Second Free Movie Matinee

Lou Smith, New Elton, Brooklyn, N. Y., has inaugurated what he calls his annual free movie matinee, which he ties in with the Food Relief Committee of the Mayor's office.

Circulars were given out, bearing copy to the effect that the bearer could attend a free show by simply bringing edibles to the theatre in lieu of an admission charge. With so much distress around this is at once a worthy cause and a tremendous good-will builder that might be used in any location.

AN ORLOVE ANIMATION

Gene and Ken Click Again On "Lovers"

A guessing contest with prizes given for the nearest totals to the number of miles an automobile tire had operated while in service on a Montreal-New York bus was the main idea put on by that hard-hitting exploitation team, Manager Gene Curtis and Exploiteer Ken Finlay, Palace Theatre, Montreal, on "Fugitive Lovers."

A week ahead, contest trailer was run and a large cutout bus displayed on the mezzanine, an exact replica (see photo) of one in actual use by the bus company which came in on the tieup. Tire was also displayed. The first prize was an all expense trip to New York, including hotel accommodations, and other prizes were refrigerators, permanent wages, etc. Everything was promoted by Gene and Ken.

As a street bally to further plug the idea and also the picture, a bannered bus was put on the street with sound equipment and announcer operator. The refrigerator company planted displays in all their dealer windows and also announced the contest over the radio. The tire people also got behind this strongly, furnishing the coupons and displays for dealer windows. And as a further tieup, two newspapers, one English, one French, also came in.

Man and woman "fugitives" visited different stores, presenting passes to the first five people to recognize them, this being tied into a co-op page with newspaper paying for the bally. A laundry hookin with cash prizes for the best coloring of a bus printed on all shirt boards was another ace angle.

Gene of course spotted the idea in his regular, personal "Hot From Hollywood" weekly broadcasts, had an artist working in the bus terminal window on signs for the contest, printed special route tickets for organizations, paid for by cigarette companies who were advertising on the reverse side and borrowed regulation uniforms from the bus company to dress the house staff as drivers and hostesses.

Managers Planning Cooling Campaigns

With the warm weather right around the corner, showmen are now lining up those ads, stories and stunts to sell their cooling systems. Below is outlined a few of the things that were done last year in various sections of the country, and are sound enough to be duplicated or adapted wherever they are acceptable. We have queried a number of the members on what they are doing in this respect, and their ideas will be published as they reply.

Getting Set

Of course managers are checking up on their systems, giving them a thorough inspection to insure their readiness whenever it is necessary to turn on the cool weather. And with this, a general house inspection and cleanup is in order, heavy drapes to be changed for summery materials, the lighting given that summer treatment, and seat covers made spick and span, etc., etc.

Not Too Much "Arctic"

Smart showmen are soft peddling the freeze angles in their ads and lobbies, and it is well to keep this angle under control. "Comfortably Cool," "Healthfully Cool," etc., are finding more favor than the overstressed iceberg stuff, and although the Eskimo copy will sell a lot of tickets, there are a lot of folks who like their weather ads in milder form.

In a number of instances, managers have used thermometers in the lobby showing the outside temperature, tying this in to the cool interior of the theatre. Cutouts of girls, dressed with summery fabrics, are also in vogue for lobby flashes, which is similar to a gag we used down South some years ago, wherein one of the usherettes was decked out in summer ensemble and stationed near enough to one of the foyer doors so that a slight breeze would agitate her gown. The stunt helped to sell the coolness of the theatre, and plenty of extra tickets.

"Cooling" Catch Lines

Consistent use of attractive trailer and ad copy brings results. Circuit managers will of course be supplied with plenty of trailer and ad stuff from headquarters, and the trailer companies also have a lot of weather-selling ideas for the independents. Short, punch lines register quickly. For instance:

"Always Comfortably Cool"

"Cool—not Cold!"

"Cool, Pure Air Invigorating and Refreshing"

"Spend an Evening in Cool Comfort"

"No drafts—No Humidity—Just Cool, Fresh Air"

"Scientifically Cooled"

These may be incorporated in sig. cuts, or made up into small slugs when used in newspaper and program ads.

Newspaper Publicity

Feature stories on the cooling system, and shots of chorus girls posed around the refrigeration plant do yearly duty, and do it well. Wherever stage attractions are played, the problem is a question of suitable poses. Managers playing straight pictures might use local gals or members of their kid clubs in whatever poses local situations desire, i.e., bathing suit and spray shots.

GETTIER'S CREDO

"... To make our theatre the community center of amusement in the good graces of the majority. To sell our pictures truthfully and honestly, and to give the patron his money's worth in entertainment; to be on the floor at all hours ourself, so that we know him personally and he knows we are really and honestly interested in him. The door of our office, which is on the lower floor and opens off the lobby, is always open; our 'phone is their 'phone. I take care of the lost and found department personally. I call the taxis and I like it. I like the kids particularly, and I believe I know more kids than anyone else in town except my assistant, Whaley. Between us, we know them all and most of their parents."—Quoted from letter from Manager VOGEL GETTIER, Liberty Theatre, Sedalia, Mo.

Popularity Contest For Vacation Trips

Last spring Thomas D. Soriero, Fox West Coast Arizona division manager, put over a very profitable vacation trip voting contest at the Fox, Tucson, Ariz. Theatres, which was publicized in the Round Table pages. For the information of showmen who contemplate such activities this season, Tom's campaign is herewith reviewed in detail.

Due to code limitations, however, managers should be careful in arranging such contests, so as not to conflict with Code Article 5, Division E, Part 3. When in doubt, rulings should be requested from nearest board as applies to local situations. However, it should be kept in mind that vacation trips awarded through stage drawings or lucky numbers, being a form of lottery, are not permitted under the code.

Soriero's Contest

The two first prizes were each a two months' all-expense vacation trip to a Maine summer camp, offered to the local boy and girl securing the highest number of votes given with each adult theatre admission, ballot good for ten votes issued with each of such tickets. Two $100 second prizes were also given. The contest ran approximately five weeks.

The camp operators deposited a certified check in a Tucson bank to defray transportation and all expenses, the winners being transported by air. In the final weeks of the contest, extra ballots were given with admissions to stimulate voting, and two weeks before the finish, tieups were made with two leading stores to give votes with each 25 cent purchase. This participation included special newspaper ads and window displays.

The judges included the Mayor of Tucson, who took part in the award ceremonies from the stage of the Fox Theatre and who spoke favorably of the idea. Local newspapers carried almost daily publicity on the progress of the voting as well as pictures of the winners. Photos of leading entries were published weekly.

Trailers were run considerably in advance and, to keep interest high, the camp director was brought from the east to Tucson, where he spoke before various organizations and otherwise built up the stunt. All theatre advertising, of course, included mention of the contest.

Other Trip Angles

Adaptations of the above idea will be put on this season with nearby resorts or vacation spots some distance away. Two week all-expense trips were used profitably last year by managers via the voting route, the hotels, transportation and other expenses being promoted. Newspaper cooperation can play an important part in the successful execution of this idea, and this slant of course will not be disregarded by showmen this year.

Cooper Arranges Appearance Of "Devil Tiger" Cameraman

Live bears for a street bally was one of the gags reported to have done a fine job of traffic-blocking for Manager Max Cooper, on his campaign for "Devil Tiger" at the Fox Theatre, Hackensack, N. J., who states that he had one of the bruins working the downtown streets, carrying a valise lettered with theatre copy. Three in number, the bears also made appearances at the local Kiwanis Club show and at the county hospital in advance of the opening. On the first day these trained animals were put on at the Mickey Mouse show, performing on skates, bicycles, etc.

All of this was duly publicized in the local papers, as was a coloring contest in which passes were given for the fifty best entries, of one of the production stills showing battling tiger and crocodile. A stuffed crocodile, secured from the Fox home office and supplied by the director of the picture, was also used for display purposes in lobby and in windows.

On the opening night the cameraman of the picture, Richard Maedler, a local resident, made a personal appearance and related experiences that occurred during the production, which the newspapers carried as a feature story.

Co-op Page Sells Theatre Anniversary

To celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the Orpheum Theatre, Gardner, Mass., City Manager George L. Seed arranged for a congratulatory page of merchants' ads, copy in which complimented the occasion.

Full page streamer head at top of page announced the anniversary and immediately below were photos of both Seed and Managing Director George A. Giles, with messages of thanks from them to the readers for their continued patronage. In addition, the page carried the ads of the attractions to be shown during the week.

The observance of theatre birthdays is to be recommended for prestige and good will purposes. Rarely does the manager have a timely opportunity to voice his appreciation to the theatre's patrons, and the anniversary angle is therefore not to be neglected.

Another Smart Lobby From Bill Brown

Again Bill Brown, of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., clicks with an excellent lobby flash, this time on "Cat and the Fiddle." Background was a large black cat sitting on a fiddle, against which were placed musical scales with notes and lettering tinseled. Bill promoted an interior decorator to make up a living room display (see photo) which contained a blackened mahogany fireplace with brass trimmings, log fire illuminated with amber lights. Other furnishings were a white goatskin chair, coffee colored sofa, rich rugs and lamps, the entire flash lit with amber baby spots.

To further sell the title, Bill promoted a large stuffed white cat and an actual violin and bow, placing these alongside the fireplace, these also spotted with amber lights. Bill reports that the flash resulted in more comment than he has yet received on any of his lobby displays, and knowing the quality of this member's work, it must have been very good.

Moss Promotes Wild Animal Street Bally

Of course, the opportunity presents itself only now and then, but Dick Moss was quick enough to take advantage of the presence in Long Beach, Cal., of Director Clyde Elliott, persuading the movie man to make a personal appearance on the opening day of his picture, "Devil Tiger." Among others, this was announced to the local Boy Scouts in a headquarters bulletin, Dick making a special rate for the members of this organization to see the picture.

A well executed jungle lobby was created by mounting the 24 and placing palms and grass matting in front of it. The same idea was carried out front with animal cutouts, a tiger head with flashing eyes in the center and mounted letters for the title. For a street bally, Dick secured a live animal display (see photo) consisting of a lion, monkeys, possums, parrots and varieties of tropical birds.

Good Campaign on Penner Philly Date

Joe Penner is a heavy cigar smoker and this was capitalized by Managing Director Joe Feldman, and Publicist Art Cohn on the star's personal appearance at the Earle, Philadelphia, by a tieup with the makers of Optimo cigars who supplied window cards, copy stressing the exact number of Optimos that Penner smokes during every show, every day, every week, etc. This was tied into a "believe it or not" head, with star name, cut, theatre and date predominating in the copy.

Fine cooperation was obtained from Penner's radio sponsors, who planted displays in many windows and carried imprinted banners on all trucks.

The date was further plugged over other prominent local stations and a bakery hookup also returned numerous windows and inserts in cake and bread package. Many stores tied in the date with display ads, Gimbel's especially going for large space on a toy duck sale.

For a street stunt a stilt walker was used, and featured among the lobby displays was a large poster with the famous Penner line, "Wanna Buy a Duck?" in six different languages. An oil painting of the star was included, surrounded by stuffed ducks, the rest of the display showing a family sitting around the radio tuning in on Penner. Electrically lighted, the flash was good enough to gather crowds.

16 Windows Plug Suits' "Nana" Date

The men in the field have been receiving good cooperation from the various news distributing agencies on novelizations of pictures and picture stories in the fan magazines. However, Manager Bob Suits, Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., went a step further in connection with the book on "Nana" by having his local news company pay for a sizable display ad plugging both the book and the picture, using stills to illustrate and arranging many window displays.

In addition to the various radio breaks, photo distribution and other effective ideas, Bob also put over a little different stunt by having his local Kresge store advertise the star and date in 16 windows (see photo) above the store proper. We have not seen this one in some time and Suits reports a lot of comment on this unusual billing.

Contacting the manufacturer of the "Alice" dolls, Don obtained gratis a complete set for lobby display, also including stills, balloons, doll furniture, tea set, toys, etc. (see photo). Williams also made a three-way tieup with the same manufacturer and his neighborhood Kresge store for an excellent window display, further tieups being made with local book store.

Cooperation of all schools in the vicinity allowed Williams for the first time to distribute circulars in the various class rooms. Announcements were also made by teachers and many essay contests were held.

Fred also sends along a neat card, mailed to patrons in advance so as to reach them on their birthday morning, the message containing congratulations and also advising recipients that the card may be used for free admissions to the theatre.

Lorenzo Publishes Ace "Christina" Program

Excellent house programs are being put out by quite a few of the Skouras' managers. And one that deserves more than passing comment is Tom Di Lorenzo's special souvenir program gotten out on "Queen Christina" at the Plaza, Englewood, N. J.

Size six by nine, the book is 12 pages, including the covers, the entire thing printed on coated stock, the front page in roto. Subject matter, art, and other theatre copy are given six pages with the remainder devoted to outside advertising of local merchants, which no doubt paid for the cost.

Magazine Boys Parade On Strachan's "Wonder Bar"

Many were the activities of Manager J. Knox Strachan, Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, on "Wonder Bar," his campaign starting weeks ahead, with ballyhoo records played at opening and closing of shows, imprinted paper napkins and advance lobby displays.

Two weeks ahead restaurant menus were stamped with date, extra billing was put out and regular ads underlined. A week in advance, imprinted grocery bags were distributed, this being duplicated with tieup on men's hat store. Other windows and co-op ads were effected, including Cinema Hat shop tieup.

Strachan got himself a free street parade with 90 Liberty Magazine boy distributors through the downtown section, each boy carrying theatre card. Incidentally, these boys cooperate regularly with this Round Tabler, who distributes weekly mimeographed "pep" organ with copy along club lines. Another street stunt which aided was a man in black face on a white mule (see photo) copy tying in the picture.

Old-Timey and Modern Costumes Used by Spencer

Too bad the photo is too cracked for reproduction, because we'd like to show you the window display that J. E. (Jaybird) Spencer, Illinois Theatre, Metropolis, Ill., effected for his showing of "Carolina." He had old-fashioned costumes ranging from the year 1827 to the 1934 models, including dresses, hats, capes, parasols and shoes.

The house artist, Everett Swinford, erected a compo-board of light green with darker green lettering on which was mounted cut-out letters of deep magenta covered with mirror metallis spelling "Carolina."

On the doors of all leading business houses Sunday during showing cards were tacked reading, "Closed—We have gone to see, etc., etc." For his street bally a truck with new p. a. system and a radio announcer toured city telling of coming attraction.

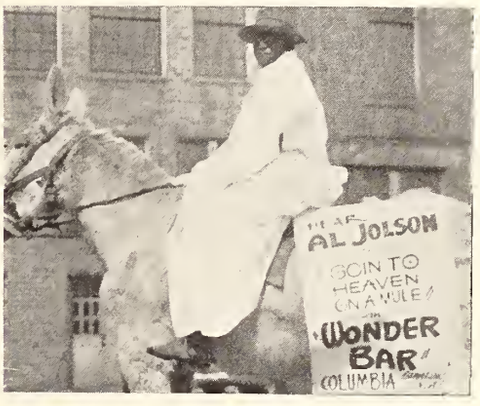
Chas. Penley Crashes Museum on "Henry"

"Henry VIII" and his six wives crashed the British Museum. This was the headline stunt put over by Charles Penley, general manager, Paramount-Astoria Theatres, London, to bally the picture on its second run after it had played for 30 weeks at the Leicester Square Theatre.



For the information of those who do not know, crashing the British Museum on a picture gag is as difficult as doing likewise on this side at the White House. Penley accomplished it by having "Henry" sell the guard (see photo) the idea that the troupe wanted to contribute to a public subscription fund for the purchase of a rare Bible from the Soviet. The stunt crashed all papers. An inspection of the plant of the Daily Sketch, leading picture paper, also netted stories and cuts.

"Henry" and wives also went horseback riding in exclusive Hampton Court, and assembled for a stag-hunting stunt in the royal private park, Windsor Park, which was prevented by the guards. Visits to all sections of London where the theatres were situated resulted in stories and pictures in the district papers.

All in all, complete coverage was obtained at a comparatively small cost, and Penley reports that the campaign undoubtedly helped to increase attendance at the four theatres he supervises by some 20,000 extra admissions over the usual weekly take.

George Fox Puts on Managers' Week

Another good "Managers' Week" was put over nicely by Manager George Fox, Strand Theatre, Philadelphia, who injected a personal note in all advertising by including his picture in house programs and a co-op four page tabloid, space in the latter taken by many neighborhood merchants. Through a beauty school tieup, George offered free treatments in the mezzanine and further hooked into a tea room to give free teacup readings. Also distributed were art star stills, these paid for by a nearby milliner, and a candy shop was promoted for candy given to children at the Saturday matinee.

For a street bally, Fox had his local American Legion band of 35 pieces parade the neighborhood and plugging the big week. These were the standouts of George's campaign, which he reports was entirely costless to the theatre, over and above his usual expenditures.

Hendricks Plants Good Window Gags on "Number"

Manager Bill Hendricks went for the "girl in bed" window gag on "I've Got Your Number," planting a good looking Miss in a prominent furniture window (see photo) on a mattress tieup. Theatre copy on poster at foot of bed proclaimed the gal's desire to rest herself so as to be in condition to handle the giggles in the picture.

Another window stopper featured two operators who phoned many numbers, plugging the date and the same idea was also carried out in the theatre lobbly . A line of good copy in one of Bill's newspaper ads, "211 Laughs and 69 Minutes" is an excellent instance of much selling in few words.

Excellent "Cargo" Lobby Display

Among the outstanding lobby displays recently received are those by house artist Thomas Konesky, of Manager Al Hamilton's Empress Theatre, South Norwalk, Conn., an excellent example of which on "Wild Cargo" is illustrated in the accompanying photo.

The display measures eight feet by ten and is hung over the foyer doors. The background is of black velour, the foliage being all cut out and standing away from the background. Python and tiger in lower left corner are also cut out, the lettering treated similarly, colored green and faintly flittered. Varicolored baby spots helped the effect.

Citywide Celebration Marks Anniversary

The silver jubilee, which marked the 25th continuous year of theatre operation in Springfield, Ill., of Gus and Louis Kerasotes, was made into a citywide event with many things done to call attention to the anniversary. Outstanding was the special newspaper section with much publicity and art, co-op pages in which local merchants congratulated the brothers, radio broadcasts, etc.

George and Nicholas Kerasotes cooperated with ad chief Dave Jones to put the campaign over effectively at the Strand, Senate and Savoy Theatres.

Newspaper Contest On "Sorrell" Date

Announcing his date as the world premiere of "Sorrell And Son," Manager J. Golden, Palace Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., arranged a well executed campaign that was featured by newspaper contests and co-op pages. Cash prizes were given to boys and girls sending in the best composition on the subject, "What I Think of My Dad," children 15 years of age and under being eligible, and entries limited to 200 words. Guest tickets were also given as additional prizes, the paper going for generous sized space.

Golden reports the sizable number of 75 window displays in book, luggage, men's haberdashery shops and in Royal Typewriter agencies, all containing picture production stills. The story was dramatized via radio, and for a street bally, Golden put out a reproduction of the book parading this in the downtown district.

Rosen Stages "Raftero" Dance In Theatre Foyer

Manager Leo Rosen gave free lessons to his patrons on how to do the "Raftero," which he featured in his tieup with the local Beck shoe store on his "Bolero" date, at the Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y. A day ahead of his opening, Leo promoted the head of a local dance studio to do the dance on the store premises (see photo). Crowds of course were attracted and in addition to the actual instructions, dance booklets were distributed with Rosen acting as m. c. and further plugging the date.

Twin City Broadcast Helps "Sweethearts"

An excellent territorial plug was arranged by Sam Clark, Warner exploiteer, for the opening of "20 Million Sweethearts" in Minneapolis and St. Paul, with a broadcasting tieup sponsored by General Mills, who announced the picture and dates in both towns during daily radio programs. As a further plug, the bakers distributed thousands of inserts in packaged goods and printed window streamers.

"Eskimo" Highlights From Here and There

Showmen in all sections of the country have put a lot of fine exploitation behind "Eskimo" and below are set forth some of the click gags reported.

In Herkimer, N. Y.

Bob Anthony, Liberty Theatre, became his own commentator, plugging the picture over his P. A. system during the running of the trailer. The wires were also used in a phone drive that covered the surrounding territories. Many of the press book tieups were made with stores in prominent spots and book marks distributed in libraries.

And in Olean, N. Y.

Manager B. Bordorano, Palace Theatre, working with MGM Exploiteer Darrow, tied up to Kresge stores on a special "Eskimo" sale week on winter clothing, stores plugging event with many banners and ads. Imprinted bags used at all 5 and 10 stores. The only exclusive local furrier gave both his windows for Arctic display.

Window cards with theatre copy with space left blank for special items distributed in all grocery and drug stores. Newspapers ran coloring contest and also carried pages of co-op ads. Lucky numbers distributed to all bus riders brought many to lobby when winning numerals were posted.

Then to Henderson, Ky.

Where Leon Pickle, at the Kentucky Theatre, obtained fine results with a telegram signed by Howard Waugh, zone manager, to all local grade and high school teachers, quoting from endorsement of picture by president of National Education Ass'n., recommending that all teachers see it and encourage pupils to do likewise. Leon also tied picture into lobby display of Heinz's products in connection with drive to open local plant of that company.

West to San Francisco

Manager Arvid Ericson, St. Francis Theatre, aided by MGM Exploiteer Hal Elias, promoted classified contest and also planted stories on invitations to hard of hearing, appeal being made that superimposed titles would aid enjoyment of pictures. Well executed was full-page feature story in paper on filming difficulties in Arctic.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 223.—(A) Explain just why moving the projection lens closer to, or further away from, the film changes the definition on the screen. (B) Is it practicable to alter the E.F. of a projection lens by changing the distance between its front and rear elements? (C) Just why is it not possible to secure a projection lens to match one you already have, merely by sending the markings on same? (D) What must you send if you want accurate matching?

Answer to Question No. 217

Bluebook School Question No. 217 was: (A) Just what would you use to recoat the interior of the lens barrel were some of the coating to come off? (B) Tell us just why the projection lens should be no larger than is necessary to admit the light beam. (C) Just why is it impossible to measure accurately the focal length of a plano-convex lens? (D) Can you give two methods of measuring the approximate focal length of a plano-convex lens?

The following made acceptable answers (and let me say here that R. J. Arntson sent correct answers to Questions 213 and 214 too late for crediting):

D. Danielson; S. Evans and C. Rau; R. J. Arntson; W. Lemke; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; A. F. Sprafke; R. De Totto; D. Ferguson; C. Caladine; L. J. O'Melia; W. Broadbent; B. R. Walker; D. L. Sinklow; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; L. N. and C. B. Traxler; O. Allbright; T. T. Golley; T. Malleby; T. H. Morton, L. Klar and F. H. Klar; M. and J. DeVoy; D. T. Donald and F. Y. Gradley; D. C. Lode and J. Jensen; L. M. Richards; F. L. Granby; D. U. Granger; N. Prane and B. R. Mills; L. C. Northup; G. R. Squires; F. L. Benton and A. L. Dodson; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; M. R. Jones; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; G. Thompson; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; M. F. Fallon; G. T. Ormsby; H. R. Baldwin; L. R. O'Leary; B. H. Thaler and S. Spanner; A. Richardson and L. N. Haynes; B. T. Canter, L. H. Daniels and B. W. Williams; L. R. Doty; D. L. Lode, K. Y. Spencer, B. H. Sanders and J. Gensen; K. L. Hess; J. Jurts and D. Howard; Nic Granby; U. L. Danielson; J. Hendershot; P. and L. Felt; D. D. Davis and L. Thomas; K. L. Knight and M. Henderson; D. H. and L. B. Palmer; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; P. Itt; C. Haugh and J. Turner; M. U. Sampson; J. J. Richmond; E. M. Ingram; D. U. Danielson; L. M. Richards; R. S. Fielder; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan; S. T. and M. Gibson.

(A) S. Evans and C. Rau say, "Recoating of lens barrel interior should be done with lampblack ground in japan, otherwise known as coach-painter's black, thinned down to proper consistency with turpentine."

One of our new fans adds a touch I think important. L. O'Melia of Muscatine, Ia., says, "Were I to find some spots on the lens barrel interior to be bare of paint I would touch them up with lampblack ground in japan thinned down to proper working consistency with turpentine." I regard the use of the term, "touch up," of importance, for the reason that to coat the whole interior merely because the paint was not on the surface at a few spots, would not only be unnecessary, but the new paint, if applied over the old, might cause the old paint to be pulled loose from the metal. I don't say that would happen, but do say it might. Incidentally, Brother O'Melia's first answer is remarkably good throughout. My compliments to the gentleman. I hope he will prove to be a sticker.

I regret that an answer to Section B must be postponed until another issue, probably the next one, when it will be included with the answer to another question.

(C) Out of many substantially correct replies I believe G. E. Doe perhaps has a bit the best of it. He says, "You have, in this question, used the term 'accurately,' and that means much. To measure the focal length of a lens by any means available to the projectionist, the rays incident thereon must be exactly parallel, and even the rays of the sun are not quite that. That objection, however, is only cited as scientifically correct. For all practical purposes rays from an object, such as is suggested on page 151, volume 1 of the Bluebook, would serve the purpose.

"The chief reason why a plano-convex lens cannot be measured accurately is that because of spherical aberration it has different focal lengths at different distances from its center, hence only an approximation may be had."

(D) Dale Danielson says, "The focal length of a lens is the distance from its optical center to the projected image when the image is in sharpest focus and the rays enter the lens parallel. To measure the focal length, using a dark room or shadow box, focus some very distant object on a suitable improvised screen (sheet of paper, white wall, etc.). Measure distance nearest surface of lens to screen. Reverse lens and repeat. Add distances and divide by two. Result will be focal length of lens. The reason for the two measurements is that they determine the optical center of the lens. Were the one having two surfaces to be of like curvature, one measurement from screen to center plane of lens would be sufficient.

"A second, more complicated method, is to use a stereopticon and slide, using the lens to be measured, whatever it may be, as a projection lens. Upon the slide place an opaque marker exactly a half-inch long. Focus this mark as sharply as possible on the screen with the lens being measured. We must now measure the exact distance from center of lens to screen, and exact length of projected mark, reducing both to inches. Next, find the focus by the following mathematical procedure: Divide the width of the projected mark times the projection distance, by the width of the projected mark plus the width of the screen image."

Atkinson Will Continue As Fox Theatres Receiver

William E. Atkinson will continue as sole receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation. He had been co-receiver for the past two years with John F. Sherman, who died recently. Mr. Atkinson has been handling the major part of the work for Fox Theatres since the receivership. The court has informed him no successor to Mr. Sherman will be appointed.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

ANY picture, made on any film, may prove a hit. But the fact remains that the majority of the big motion picture triumphs are being filmed on Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" Negative with gray backing. In other words, this film seems to be an important factor in any picture's chances of outstanding success. That fact is vitally important to every cameraman and producer. HOLLYWOOD REPORTER says:
"A smart honey. A sophisticated wow. This picture will have millions of customers well satisfied and with that well-fed look. A murder story with a brilliant cast, brilliant script, brilliant direction and photography that tells story in no mean terms. Let it be shouted from roof-tops that writing, acting and direction all spell movie with capital M. So let us hasten good work of handing out bouquets. Wm. Powell has time of his life, elegant detective who never finds himself sober enough to have it interfere with his work. Powell is great and your patrons will revel with him. Myrna Loy makes positive the fact that she should stick to being a comedienne."

COAST VARIETY says:
"'Thin Man' is sure-fire ace entertainment. Rating is cinched for all type houses by top names, class production, expert direction, outstanding performances and smart balance of humor and murder mystery in a story which holds suspense in masterly fashion. It is perhaps screen's best approximation of that brand of exciting mystery which has given this type of tale sustained vogue in literary field and for this achievement Hunt Stromberg deserves big share of credit. Wm. Powell gives strikingly human and suavely humorous performance. Myrna Loy is superb."

MOTION PICTURE DAILY says:
"Smartly concocted for big audience reactions with a confident tempo and sly, boisterous humor, 'The Thin Man' is one of the finer mystery melodramas. Adapted from Dashiell Hammett's widely publicized novel, the film attains a nonchalant unfoldment, carefree surface action with volcanic smouldering underneath. W.S. Van Dyke's direction is a model of plot movement and laughter. Hunt Stromberg's production is topnotch. All together, it is a swell, satisfying show."

FORTY CENTS WORTH

THE extensive and animated line of discussions from authorities in all branches of the industry relating to the problem of mid-picture admissions, submitted in Mr. Martin Quigley's recent article entitled "The Public Be Damned," points with exceeding clarity toward the ultimate necessity for classification of theatres and their audiences.

The curse of continuous performance and the admission of patrons in the middle of the show is, as Mr. Quigley so emphatically stated, a heritage of the nickelodeon era. That is not the only unhappy influence of the nickelodeon. One of the most serious handicaps to the current progress of the motion picture is the continuance of the nickelodeon "shot gun prescription" idea of trying to entertain everybody. It was not so difficult in those days before the public had become picture-educated, and before the rise of today's array of competitive amusements, to please most anybody a nickel's worth, or even a dime's worth. Today's problem is to please a much more discriminating audience, against all manner of other attractions, about forty cents worth.

"That there is and can not be, under present circumstances, a selective audience for motion pictures is a greater curse" than mid-picture admissions, Mr. Winfield Sheehan observes in an expression on the subject in our newspages this week.

"Can not be" is mayhap too positive a resignation to the status quo. It is entirely possible that we shall eventually see theatres and lines of production addressed to selective audiences, just as we have had these many years in the world of the stage. Incidentally the upper strata of those selective audiences will be inclined also to arrive betimes and take their entertainment in an intelligent manner.

DIVERSIFICATION

WHEN Mr. Darryl Zanuck, astute student of public tastes, sailed away for a summer in Europe last week he wasa a-pondering over a trans-continental contact with exhibitors seeking light on box office demands.

"After I had talked to half a dozen important showmen," observed Mr. Zanuck, "I found I had heard that many contrary notions. I am now convinced that there is nothing to be done about it except to be very sure that the output is widely diversified in the nature of the material. We not only must make them good, but always different, different in theme, treatment, tempo, different in every element."

All of which would seem sound following of the basic principle that the essence of entertainment is variety, that contrast is necessary to the challenge of attention. Part of the answer is that hardly anyone really knows what he is going to like until he has had it. That goes for all the customers.

PANCHO VILLA "WHEN"

THE advent of "Viva Villa" with its fanfare of screen glories sets us musing on those days now just twenty years ago when we and the movies were young and Señor Villa was just by way of making himself a screen actor and a general.

Mr. Harry E. Aitken was the president of the roaring new independent Mutual Film Corporation then, and was given to considerable excitement of promotional nature. Señor Villa was filling the papers with the excitements he was making south of the Rio Grande.

An agent of Mutual, dispatched by Mr. Aitken, went to El Paso and Juarez, equipped with twenty-five large, round American silver dollars, and closed a contract with Villa to fight his battles "as far as possible" in the daytime, so that they could be photographed "exclusively by the said Mutual Film Corporation." Villa also was to participate in the distribution gross.

The contract was duly executed and Señor Villa went to war again with a camera train in his outfit. The resulting pictures were all of Villa and not very box office, so Mr. Aitken had Mr. David Wark Griffith make Mutual's version of the war in Hollywood, which is still our idea of the best place to make a war.

POSIES BY MR. FARLEY

IN poignant sympathy we observe that the artists are raising a row with Mr. James A. Farley, postmaster general, because the Post Office Department improved upon Mr. James McNeill Whistler's "Arrangement in Grey and Black" on a three cent stamp design by giving "Mother" a vase of flowers to look at. The idea of "Mother" being depicted in a mood of reflection on the travails of life was apparently too much of an abstraction for the Post Office Department. That involves an idea, ideas involve thinking, and thinking is considered trouble. Hollywood years ago evolved a term for it—"dumbing it up." If the post office could do that to Mr. Whistler's mother, what might we expect of the government's Alphabet Bureau Boys in movieland.

DARROW ASKS NEW SETUP; REMOVAL OF ROSENBLATT

Review Board Proposes Inquiry Looking To Elimination of Block Booking, Extension of Code Privileges to Everyone; Industry Goes Ahead With Development of Speed in Action Upon Complaints

Clarence Darrow's "Little Man" Review Board has proposed to President Roosevelt sweeping changes in the Motion Picture Code and its enforcement agencies. It was confidentially learned late Wednesday that the recommendations call for a complete reorganization of the Code Authority and the Local Boards, removal of Sol A. Rosenblatt from supervision of code operation, and special investigation of the possibility of elimination of block booking altogether.

Darrow Board's Code Proposals

(1) A completely new setup for the Code Authority, with the large interests, independents and the Government each to have five voting members;

(2) Elimination of the code provision permitting the linking of short subjects to features;

(3) Divesting the distributors of their control of admission prices;

(4) Elimination of the provision banning double features; [The code does not prohibit double billing but the large interests are now seeking its elimination.—Ed.]

(5) Denying distributors the right to designate playdates;

(6) Elimination of the time limit on the filing of complaints under the code;

(7) That all code privileges be extended to all persons in the industry regardless of whether they have signed the code;

(8) That all amusement codes under the NRA be transferred from the supervision of Sol A. Rosenblatt to some other official; [Mr. Rosenblatt is not charged with misfeasance but is accused of not being "diligent" in protecting the interests of the independent, and is further charged with being sympathetic to the large companies as a result of his relationship with Nathan Burkan, motion picture attorney.]

(9) An entirely new setup for the Local Grievance and Local Clearance Boards which would give the independent complete control of such boards on the ground that they have the major investment;

(10) Appointment of a committee to advise the Code Authority and the NRA whether a provision in the code insuring the right to buy can be substituted for block booking. [The committee would be required to report by August 1, 1934, on a new distribution method. Failing to make a report, the code should specifically outlaw block booking and provide positively for the right to buy.]

The Darrow Board also asks extension of code privileges to everyone, divorcement of distributors from control of admission prices, prohibition of linking short product with features, elimination of distributor right to designate playdates, and removal of the time limit for filing complaints.

The Darrow report has absolutely ignored the brief filed at the "Little Man" hearing by the large interests because "it was intended to discredit other witnesses."

Eight of Ten Members Opposed

Specific charges have not been made in the report against members of the Code Authority, but the report alleges that eight of the ten members either represent large interests or are sympathetic to them.

The recommendations of the Darrow group for a new setup for Local Boards would result in appointment of one affiliated distributor, one independent distributor, one affiliated and one independent first-run and four "bona fide" subsequent-run owners, and one Government representative.

The Local Grievance Boards would be elected in each territory by vote of the exhibitors and would consist of one distributor, one affiliated and two independent exhibitors, and one Government representative.

Block Booking Committee

The proposed Darrow committee which would decide that the right to buy can be substituted for block booking would be selected by the new Code Authority and would consist of two major producers and two distributors elected by a majority vote of the five majors' representatives; and four independent exhibitors elected by the unanimous vote of the five independent members. In the event that the independents cannot agree as to the four independent exhibitors, their appointment would be made by Clarence Darrow. A ninth member, to serve as chairman, would be elected by the Federal Trade Commission in the event of a deadlock.

The Darrow report will state that block booking has been held illegal in numerous courts. However, the board apparently paid no attention to the Federal Trade Commission's case against Paramount, where the Commission's cease-and-desist order was reversed by the federal court.

The Darrow report, it is understood, does not discuss the labor provisions of the code, but a subsequent study is expected.

The clash at Washington between the Darrow Board and the NRA officials appeared to have no effect during the week on the progress being made by the industry itself in adapting the business of motion picture merchandising to the code machinery now in full operation.

Within the industry, preparations were being made under the code to

(1) Fight unfair competitive practices of outdoor amusements;

(2) Effect regulation of premiums at theatres;

(3) Adjudicate its own labor disputes;

(4) Settle dozens of new exhibitor trade practice grievances;

(5) Establish new clearance and zoning schedules;

(6) Speed up all industry code hearings, and

(7) Establish in Hollywood a permanent list of 1,500 extra players, eliminating all others.

Both Washington and New York were awaiting publication of the Darrow report by the White House. It was sent to the President late last week, after numerous hearings during which Mr. Darrow and his colleagues listened to code complaints of the "little man," socalled.

The President has withheld publication of the report until the National Recovery Administration, General Hugh S. Johnson, its Administrator, Mr. Rosenblatt, the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General submit replies to the charges, which will be released together with the Darrow opinion.

Mr. Rosenblatt is understood to have answered the demand for his dismissal on Tuesday when he submitted a 67-page brief to General Johnson, who passed it on to the White House. Mr. Rosenblatt accused the

MANY CODE CASES HEARD IN FIELD

Darrow board of unfairness and impropriety in the handling of its investigation.

Mr. Darrow's report cited Mr. Rosenblatt's failure to appear before the board for questioning during the hearings on the film code. So severe is the board's arrangement said to be that the possibilities of Mr. Rosenblatt's resignation were being discussed freely in newspaper circles at Washington. In any event, it was said that he will be "on the spot" for further attack. Antagonistic interests, it is assumed, are principally those of Allied States, which for weeks have been sending forth from headquarters at Washington severe criticisms of Mr. Rosenblatt, charging him with being in sympathy with the large companies.

The Code Authority will fight those unfair competitive practices engaged in by outdoor amusements which cause losses of many thousands every summer to theatres. The Authority has instructed its committee on unfair competition to take legal steps to safeguard exhibitors against the practice of hundreds of baseball parks and other places of outdoor amusement which award valuable prizes, including automobiles. This practice is prohibited at motion picture theatres.

Procedure Defined for Premium Action

First definite action pointing to local territorial votes on premiums was taken Friday when the Code Authority unanimously adopted a resolution presented by its committee on administration of Local Grievance Boards, outlining the procedure in definition of areas to be defined by each Local Clearance Board where exhibitors may vote on the subject of abolishing rebates in the forms of premiums.

The code prohibits premiums in territories where 75 per cent of the exhibitors have declared in writing that such premiums shall not be permitted. The Authority has now decided that the Local Clearance Boards, within seven days after receiving such written request, shall define such area and file their definition thereof, with the Local Grievance Board, and also communicate such definition to the petitioning exhibitors.

The giving of premiums shall be prohibited after 90 days from the date of filing with the Local Grievance Board the written statement from the exhibitors. The statement shall be invalid if not filed with the Local Grievance Board within 60 days after the first signature.

Adjudication of all code labor disputes will be made entirely within the industry if the NRA at Washington grants the request of the Code Authority for approval to establish divisional, regional or local agencies of the Authority to settle its own labor disputes.

A committee reported this week that:

1. There is no substantial unemployment in the motion picture industry.

2. The industry has already gone as far as it can go, if not too far, in reduction of hours of employment.

3. Any further shortening of hours of work would reduce production, and, therefore, would diminish the supply of available product for the operation of theatres.

Because "there are already insufficient feature motion pictures made in this country to supply all of the theatres," the committee said a reduction of working schedules would curtail product and force many theatres to close. "We have definitely reached a point where further reduction of hours per week will decrease the number of employees."

The Code Authority this week made the following appointments to Local Boards in the field:

Charles Weigel, independent exhibitor, succeeding John Elliott on the Cincinnati Grievance Board.

Harry Nelson, independent exhibitor, replacing O. A. Lee on the Minneapolis Clearance Board.

Reeves Espey, affiliated exhibitor, replacing J. J. Sullivan on the Los Angeles Clearance Board.

Charles Stern, United Artists, replacing Moe Streimer on the Manhattan Advisory Committee to the New York Clearance Board.

Omaha Exhibitors Would Withdraw

Exhibitors in the Iowa-Nebraska territory who are not members of the MPTO in those states have requested the Code Authority to relieve them of the obligations of their code assents and of financial assessments, due, it was said, to the appointment of MPTO members only to the Omaha code boards.

John Flinn, Code Authority secretary in New York, said that there is no provision in the code allowing any one to retract their code acceptance.

Uphold Milwaukee Decision

The Code Authority last week upheld the decision of the Milwaukee grievance board charging overbuying against Ashley Theatres Corp., and granting the Saxe Amusement Management, Inc., 30 Warner pictures. The case was the first one appealed.

Saxe will get 39 pictures immediately from the Ashley company as a result. Of this number, 30 are Warner pictures and the others are divided between Paramount and Columbia.

Grievance Boards Busy

Many additional complaints of exhibitors against competitors were filed with Local Grievance Boards.

In Buffalo, ten complaints were on file. The first decision made by the Buffalo Board involved an order to Ben Bordinaro, Olean exhibitor, to cease and desist from issuing two-for-one tickets.

One of the complaints set for early handling by the Chicago Grievance board is that of Balaban & Katz, whose grievance is a charge of premature advertising of pictures by certain neighborhood houses.

Paramount won three arbitration cases in Cincinnati under the voluntary arbitration clause of the standard 1933-34 exhibition contract. Complaints involved charges of failure to play and pay for shorts contracted for by the Park Hall theatre, suburban; failure of the Hollywood, also a suburban, to play and pay for features under contract, and the Third Avenue Theatre Co. was charged with failure to play and pay for contracted shorts.

In Cleveland Frank Gross charged Sam Barck, Market Square theatre, with maintaining a 10-cent bargain hour from 6:30 p. m. to 7:30 p. m. Five similar cases were filed and the Board ordered the practice stopped in one instance because contracts call for 15-cent minimums.

The Kansas City Grievance Board decided in favor of Columbia against Charles Stanley's Columbian, Wamego, Kan. The decision gives Columbia the right either to force Stanley to fulfill his contract or bring suit.

Fox West Coast Case Up

The Los Angeles Board was scheduled to meet this week to pass judgment on two cases filed during the past week. Fox West Coast, for the second time in three weeks, is made defendant in charges of overbuying. The other case involves three small houses, which, it is charged, reduced their admissions to 5 cents.

The New Haven, Conn., Local Grievance Board heard its first complaints Monday. One was a charge by the Whalley theatre that Paramount was forcing shorts, and the other, by the Pequot theatre against the Dreamland, that free admittance is given Tuesday evenings to women accompanied by men. The Board ordered the free admittance practice stopped.

The New York Grievance Board ordered the Skouras circuit to turn over 22 features from the Capitol, Port Chester, to the competitive Embassy, of Rogowsky Brothers, in its first overbuying case.

Of importance to every exhibitor is the work now underway for the drafting of new clearance schedules for 1934-35 product, with Local Clearance Board because of ill health.

Charles Williams, president of the MPTO of Iowa and Nebraska, resigned from the Omaha Clearance Board. Ill health was given as the reason.

Meanwhile, John Flinn, Code Authority secretary, was meeting in New York this week with the local code board secretaries from Albany, Boston, Buffalo, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Cleveland. The secretaries were being instructed in the modus operandi of their boards.

To Speed All Board Hearings

With the Code Authority instructed to bar technicalities at its future hearings, the NRA will press for speed at all hearings of Local Grievance and Clearance Boards in the field, in order to insure uninterrupted enforcement of the code. Unnecessary delays will not be tolerated, nor will the Boards be permitted to operate with clogged calendars.

Two hundred exhibitors already have taken advantage of the 10 per cent cancellation privilege on product of MGM, Fox and Universal. The names of these exhibitors are being turned over to the Code Authority, which will levy the regular code assessment against these non-assentors who have indicated, by seeking cancellations, that they desire to take advantage of the code's benefits. They may not, however, file any complaint with any Local Board until they have signed the acceptance blank. The Code Authority did not, as had been expected, lift the ban for filing assents.

Code Secretary for Coast

The Code Authority selected Major J. O. Donovan, former secretary of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, to act as paid secretary in Hollywood, and to act as assistant to John Flinn in the handling of coast code matters. Major Donovan started in his new post on Monday, with headquarters at 6331 Hollywood Boulevard.

Major Donovan immediately started organizing the Studio Agency Committee. Permanent alternates for this committee were appointed as follows: Nat Levine for Trem Carr; Louis B. Mayer for B. B. Kahane; Joseph M. Schenck for Emanuel Cohen; Carl Laemmle, Jr., for Winfield Sheehan.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

PICKED FOR PICTURES. Five youthful New Yorkers whom Columbia has compiled as film talent. And 'tis said that they come from Park Avenue as well as Broadway. Seated are James Blakely, Florence Rice and Charles Sabin. In the rear are John Buckler and George Murphy.

HOMEWARD BOUND. Winfield Sheehan, vice president and production chief of Fox, saying goodbye to Madeleine Carroll, British screen star, as she leaves Hollywood en route to London, after completion of her first American picture, Fox's "The World Moves On," which was personally supervised by Mr. Sheehan.

NEW FILM YOUNGSTER. His name is Bixey Paumstead—a distinction in itself!—whom RKO Radio "discovered" in making "No More West."

PASSES TEST. (Left) Irene Castle, former dancing celebrity, as she appeared in a successful screen test which has brought her a long-term Warner contract.

TAKE TO SEA. (Right) Edward Schiller, vice president of MGM, and Mrs. Schiller aboard the SS. Santa Lucia, leaving New York for Hollywood, via Panama Canal.

BIG TOP FLIGHT. (Left) What the still-camera beheld, and with high-speed lens and shutter, imprisoned, as the Flying Escalantes compounded a few thrills for Educational's "Allez Oop," which is really not this serious, Buster Keaton being starred.

HEADS CAST. Wynne Gibson, star of "I Give My Love," which Universal is making from an original screen story by Vicki Baum. Paul Lukas is opposite, while direction is by Karl Freund.

ALL HANDS ON DECK. To wish Darryl Zanuck, 20th Century production chief, and Mrs. Zanuck bon voyage as they sail for Europe on the SS. Conte Savoia. Reading clockwise: Joseph Moskowitz, Al Lichtman, vice president of United Artists; Harry Buckley, William Philips, Harry Goetz, Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists and 20th Century; Zanuck. Center: William Goetz, Mrs. Zanuck.

GETS NEW CONTRACT. (Left) Hugh Herbert, featured Warner Brothers character player, who has been signed to a new long-term contract.

SOUND FOR A SCREEN CARTOON. And no simple business to make it, either. Here, for example, is a small army at work on Vitaphone's "Merrie Melodies" and "Looney Tunes" at the Leon Schlesinger Studios in Hollywood. In addition to Mr. Schlesinger (seated left of orchestra leader), are shown the cartoonist, orchestra, flashback screen and those whose voices are dubbed for cartoon characters.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS FILE CLAIMS AGAINST THIRTY INDEPENDENTS

Protective Association Acts After Warnings Against Use of Music by Producers Without Getting License; Suits Pend

First indications of the action threatened by the Music Publishers Protective Association against allegedly illegal use of copyrighted music by independent producers and distributors came this week when it was established that the Association has approximately $15,000 of claims either outstanding or settled against about 30 independent companies.

Five suits are pending in the courts, with eight more in the preliminary stages. The five currently pending are:

1. A claim of $3,000 against Leo Brecher's Protex Trading Corp., for unlicensed use of music in the picture "Trapeze," a German-made picture starring Anna Sten and dubbed into English. A motion is about to be made for summary judgment, with immediate referring to a referee to compute the amount of damages. If this action is successful, it will mean that a judgment for a subsequent amount will be obtained at once, without the usual trial delay.

2. A claim of $700 against Plymouth Pictures Corp., for unlicensed use of music in "Dance Parade." An attachment for the amount due has been placed on Capital Film Exchange, distributor, against incoming receipts or percentages due the producer.

3. A claim of $325 against Paul D. Wyman Productions for music used in "Taming the Jungle." The Association's corresponding attorney in Hollywood has instituted suit, and it is understood a motion is being made for summary judgment.

4. A claim of $2,200 against the Big Drive Film Co., for music used in "The Big Drive," a war picture. Funds in the hands of First Division Exchanges, Inc., distributor, were attached. Portions of this fund were due the producer and other distributors of the subject. The Association to date has collected $750.

5. Another claim, amount not yet computed, is to be instituted against Plymouth Pictures Corp., for use of an entire score of copyrighted music in "Gold-Diggers of '43."

Among the 20-odd claims settled in favor of the Music Publishers is a judgment taken against Northern Film Corp., and Dwain Esper, producer of "The Seventh Commandment," for music unlicensed and used in that picture, the claim totaling $3,300.

A judgment for $1,000 has been entered against The Film Exchange for one song used in "Let's Go Fishing."

A permanent injunction has been obtained against Jack Minor for showing of the picture "I Love a Parade," which featured Harry Richman; $550 was the amount of the claim.

I. E. Chadwick Productions was the target for a judgment of $250 for five uses of background music in "Law of the Sea," and one other company, name not given, was assessed $350.

The claims and judgments here specified alone total $10,675, and it is stated by the Association that the remaining settled and pending cases may bring the total close to $20,000.

The Protective Association issued a warning last December that independent producers who for years have maintained a "devil-may-care" attitude in the use of music in the hopes they would be able to "get away with something," faced a concerted attack to curb the losses in royalties and the large costs in legal battles.

National Board Cooperates

John G. Paine, chairman of the Association board, and Harry Fox, who handles motion picture relations, set about to work out some form of regulatory measure to save money to both complainants and defendants. A result was an arrangement whereby all independent productions shown for the National Board of Review and at official censorship screenings were witnessed by an Association member and checked for music violations. Producers found violating the law were given official warning to obtain a license. Producers who did not take action were sued.

Cooperation of the National Boards has been a large factor in bringing the cases into court and before referees, Mr. Fox said Wednesday. A considerable amount of the work, however, was accomplished by visits to neighborhood theatres.

In the past, Mr. Fox said, the MPPA has found it virtually impossible to make adequate check-ups on the violations of so called small independents who have not cooperated.

"Such practices have been going on ever since the advent of sound," Mr. Fox said, "and we have been able to do practically nothing about it. We seldom have any difficulties with the major companies, but the little fellows—the men who jump in and out of a town, make one film and then are never heard from again—have always given us a lot of trouble."

Protective Measure

Mr. Fox emphasized the fact that the suits and claims currently being pressed are instituted primarily as a protective measure and as a warning, not to create dissensions.

"It was recently estimated that a large majority of more than 250 independent features and short subjects in production on the Coast and in New York contained music for which no licenses had been issued by us. This sort of thing has got to stop, and I feel we are making very definite progress."

At the present time, and until the MPPA announces its new rates for music reproduction privileges, producers are required to pay flat taxes for the three types of music used: visual and vocal, $150; visual and instrumental, $100, and background, $50.

Exchange Measure Up to Conference

The Senate at Washington late last week passed the Fletcher-Rayburn stock exchange bill, as written by the Senate committee on banking currency, by a vote of 62 to 13. The measure then went to conference for settlement of the differences between the Senate bill and the House measure, passed earlier.

The bills are furthest apart with respect to those sections relating to marginal transactions and administration. The Senate bill carries amendments to the Securities Act of 1933 as prepared by Senator Fletcher. The House bill carries no Securities Act amendments, but administration leaders have expressed the belief the House will concur in the amendments without question.

Acceptance by the House of the modifications in the measure was predicted on Tuesday by Chairman Rayburn of the interstate commerce committee after a conference with President Roosevelt. Representative Rayburn said the House would stand by its proposal to put administration of the Stock Exchange under the Federal Trade Commission. The Senate bill calls for an appointive commission. It was indicated the President would take a hand in the adjustment of differences concerning the measure.

Dill Control Bill Passes in Senate

The United States Senate on Tuesday passed the Dill communications measure creating a commission of five for the regulation of all wire and wireless communications in the country, including telephone, telegraph, radio and cable.

An amendment, offered by Senator Dill and accepted without a roll-call, provided that "no one licensee or organization of licensees, whether effected by purchase, lease, chain broadcasting, or other method, shall be able to monopolize or exercise dominant control over the broadcasting facilities of any community, city, or State, or over the country as a whole."

Mancall Resigns Majestic Post

Boone Mancall has resigned as advertising and publicity director of Majestic Pictures. He plans to resume the publication of technical and business books for other industries.

Gordon Hoeye Dead

Gordon Hoeye, 46, for four years auditor of the RKO exchange in Denver, died of pneumonia there last week. He had resigned from the company two years ago and was visiting in Denver when he was stricken. His home was in Los Angeles.

AD VALOREM DUTY ASKED TO REDUCE BRITISH TAX

Proposed Amendment Would Free Theatres Charging 6d. from Assessment; Korda Signs Milestone and Rowland Brown

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Reviving the suggestion that ad valorem duties be levied on all motion pictures imported into Great Britain, certain trade and political groups here say that increased revenue from this source would permit a substantial reduction to be made in the entertainment tax.

Disappointment at the absence of tax concessions in this year's budget inspires the proposal, which when made previously has received no Treasury encouragement. Difficulties of valuation and, it is believed, terms of commercial treaties have been the chief reasons for official coldness.

Last ditch efforts to obtain a reduction of the entertainment tax in this year's budget will take the form of an amendment in committee stage freeing seats up to 6d (12 cents). The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association is in close touch with Col. Baldwin Webb's committee of anti-tax M. P's., with this object in view.

Another suggestion is that special concessions be made to theatres with less than 1,000 seats.

Alexander Korda, of London Films, has signed Lewis Milestone and Rowland Brown to direct two productions, Milestone to do H. G. Wells' "Shape of Things to Come" and Brown to make "Scarlet Pimpernel" with Charles Laughton and probably Ronald Colman or Leslie Howard.

David O. Selznick is in London selecting an all English cast for "David Copperfield," which he may produce here, following with "Oliver Twist."

Reports that MGM would produce in England were confirmed in New York by Arthur Loew on his return from Europe. Mr. Loew said "David Copperfield" may lead.

LONDON BUREAU IN FULL SWING

A full service of news regarding production activities in London studios and other developments in the British field now is under way following the opening of the London Bureau of Quigley Publications, at Remo House, 310, Regent Street, London W1 (telephone Langham 1038).

An Information Bureau has been organized for the use of British producers and others interested in the American market, and a full range of Quigley publications is on display for the convenience of the British trade.

Bruce Allan, in charge of the London Bureau, has had almost lifelong experience in the motion picture business, including both production and distribution as well as trade journalism in all branches. He was editor of The Kinematograph Weekly in 1926, previously director of publicity for Goldwyn, Ltd., and FBO, Ltd., and for the Rex Ingram unit at Nice, France.

Mike Shea Dead After 50 Years in Theatre Business

Michael A. Shea, veteran showman, who last spring celebrated his 50th anniversary in the theatre business, died at noon Wednesday in Buffalo after a long illness. He was 75 years of age.

Mike Shea's death climaxed a long and colorful career in show business. Born April 1, 1859, he started as a steel and iron worker, and engaged in construction of bridges in many parts of the United States. As a boy much of his time had been spent wandering around the Lake Erie dockfronts, where he laid the foundation for his reputation as a "clean and honest fighter."

First Theatre Burned

When he was 23, having tired of the life of a human fly, he opened Shea's Music Hall in Buffalo and for eleven years many of the most famous artists of the American, English and French stage numbered the Music Hall among their better "dates." In 1893 the Music Hall burned down.

Despite temporary adversity, Mr. Shea built and operated Shea's Garden for several years, and in 1905 opened Shea's Court Street, for years one of the country's noted two-a-day variety houses. With the late B. F. Keith and E. F. Albee he negotiated booking arrangements whereby all the greatest stars of the legitimate and variety stage played the Court Street.

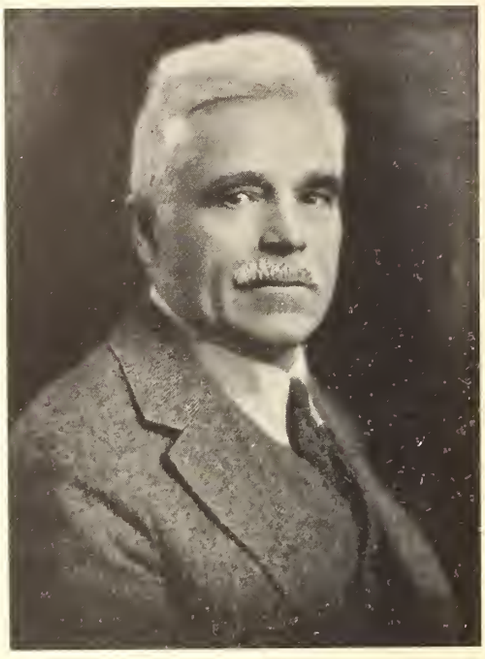
Mr. Shea was widely known for his kindness to down and out players as well as those on the way up. Not a few of these have since become well known on screen, radio and stage.

Mike Shea was also known for his blunt and at times more than slightly profane speech. He seldom minced words in telling the celebrities what he thought of their work and often suggested changes which might mean the difference between top and bottom of the profession.

Shea's Hippodrome succeed the Court Street theatre as a variety house. In 1926 he pooled his resources with Paramount-Famous Players, forerunners of Paramount Publix. He then built Shea's Buffalo at a reputed cost of more than $2,000,000.

Full Control Returned

In 1933, during Paramount's great program of theatre decentralization, entire control of the Shea circuit was given back to him. He never had relinquished final authority in his theatres' affairs under Paramount operation, having retained 51 per cent of the stock.



Mr. Shea on more than one occasion expressed his personal dislike of motion pictures as entertainment, but unlike many showmen of a latter day legitimate theatre, he did not miss the possibilities of films. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" was one of the first big motion picture successes in Buffalo, due, it is said, almost entirely to his genius as a showman.

In 1899 Mr. Shea married Josephine G. Carr. They have one daughter, Mary Evelyn Shea, now the wife of Emil Giffoniello, one of the Shea junior executives.

At the time of his death the Shea circuit was composed of the Shea's Theatre, in Toronto; the Buffalo, Hippodrome, Century and Great Lakes, all first-run Buffalo houses; the Bellevue, Niagara Falls; Riviera, North Tonawanda, N. Y., and Bailey, Elmwood, Kensington, North Park and Seneca, in Buffalo, all neighborhood houses.

Harold B. Franklin, former RKO Theatres head, and now independent producer of motion pictures and plays, was manager of the Shea theatres from 1918 to 1922, and received much of his early training under Mike Shea's tutelage.

Flood of Free Competition Is Swamping The Exhibitor

"Free" seems to be the big word in this story.

A few weeks ago Motion Picture Herald presented an editorial remarking that the motion picture was confronted with the problem of selling entertainment in the face of competition from the advertisers on the air and elsewhere who were engaged in giving away, medicine show fashion, all the box office values they could buy. Now it becomes apparent that the advertisers, at least in some sections, are giving away the screen, too.

Now comes Mr. A. E. Bennett of the Liberty Theatre, Muncie, Indiana, with a striking citation of the competitions that the current trend of the free amusement technique in merchandising can set up.

Mr. Bennett launches his discussion from the point of view of an operator of a code controlled enterprise, with a certain questioning as to what those who ordain a "planned economy" and rule of industry can do, or will do, about it. The answer is yet to be had, if any.

Below we present Mr. Bennett's pointed communication.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

By A. E. BENNETT
Liberty Theatre, Muncie, Ind.

We are just in receipt of our "Code" assessment notice for the first half of 1934, and wish to express our views on this matter, and the reasons for such views.

First of all, we do not complain about the assessment of $18 a year, covering our allocation, which we, however, feel is somewhat out of reason, but would willingly pay more if within our means, to in a measure help to eliminate some of the serious obstacles now confronting the smaller independent exhibitor. In the heyday of the circuit and chain theatres, we were up against every possible racket known to the best minds for the handling and management of these operations, who presented everything from the most antique stunts to the newest and most modern ideas. And all and everything with the support and cooperation of local merchants and newspapers. We have all many times wondered why and how we survived.

One of a dozen or more advertisements that appeared in the Muncie, Ind., daily press blaring forth the "Free Guest Ticket" idea that called for more aspirin dosage for the exhibitor.

Now we have a new order of—shall we again say "racket," which perhaps while not any worse than the old, still in view of the fact that the Code of Fair Practice is supposed to prevail, isn't it reasonable to believe that the following would at least be a little out of order?

FREE moving and talking pictures presented and shown by Sears Roebuck;

FREE moving and talking pictures presented and shown by Ford—at the Muncie High School;

FREE moving and talking pictures presented and shown by the Dawson Sales Co., Muncie;

FREE entertainment and vaudeville with a glass of beer at both our leading hotels, the Roberts and Delaware. (Perhaps we can arrange to give free beer with our theatre entertainment.)

FREE broadcasting show and entertainment at Muncie's biggest department store.

FREE moving and talking pictures and vaudeville at our two local parks, average attendance at each performance five to ten thousand people, these figures from official records of past three years.

AND the last and latest racket, free circus tickets, given by merchants.

Now, all this, with so many and so much taxes that we won't even take up your time to enumerate and include, makes it absolutely impossible and prohibitive for the small independent exhibitor to have any hope of trying to continue to operate his theatre.

There are five theatres in Muncie, owned and operated by local men, most of whom have lived here practically all their lives, in addition to which we have two chain theatres. The code has placed a great number of restrictions upon exhibitors and the motion picture industry in general, prohibiting us from giving away two-for-one tickets, bread coupons, etc., the numerous activities we have all resorted to from time to time to stimulate business, and from observations locally—and we presume these conditions prevail generally—it seems we are not getting an even break, since every other kind of business gives away free tickets, and even our own kind of business, the showing of moving and talking pictures, FREE, while we are told we absolutely must not give

CARL LAEMMLE JOINS INDEPENDENTS IN DEFENSE OF DOUBLE FEATURING

Calls Large Company Attitude A "Ruthless Rule of Thumb" Plan; Problem Brings Heated Argument in Zoning Boards

Principal developments this week in the usual pre-season moulding of product plans, sales policies and trade practices into a single merchandising structure for 1934-35, were:

1. Carl Laemmle joined the independents' fight against the "ruthless rule of thumb" plans of larger interests to eliminate double features during the new season.

2. Allied States Association met in Chicago and at Syracuse to shape the attitude of its independent exhibitor members toward 1934-35 practices.

3. Independent exhibitors in the east called a second rental protest meeting for Friday, in New York.

4. Plans of large distributors for early sales conventions indicates a normal spring and summer selling season, which last year was postponed until fall because of general business conditions.

The fight of the independent producers and distributors, reported on at length in last week's issue, against some of the large interests campaigning for elimination of double featuring in 1934-35, was unexpectedly strengthened this week when Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, in Hollywood, denounced the "ruthless rule of thumb" idea to dispose of the practice nationally. Said Mr. Laemmle: "I can't see that anyone in this industry has any right to rule anyone else out of the business."

Some of the large interests, headed by Louis B. Mayer, of MGM, and supported by Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, have been campaigning for elimination of duals.

Henry Ginsberg, general manager of the Hal Roach organization, predicted that two-feature programs will be a thing of the past within six months. His remarks followed a warning by independents that they will carry their fight to the United States Government if the large distributors attempt to force out duals by inserting a clause in their 1934-35 contracts.

Mr. Laemmle's remarks placed Universal on record as the only large company which definitely intends selling double feature houses. "I shall sell double features 'till the cows come home," he said emphatically.

Indicating that he believed "a good deal of nonsense has been said and written on the double bill problem," Mr. Laemmle charged that "exhibitors and producers and distributors have been equally guilty of making brash statements.

"They are going to run the other fellow's business if it kills them," he continued. "The spirit of the hour seems to be, 'I'm going to have my way even if I wreck the other fellow; I'm all right and he's all wrong."

"I can't see the double feature as a matter which can be handled nationally by ruthless rule of thumb," he added. "I can't see that anyone in this industry has any right to rule anyone else out of business." Mr. Laemmle said that Universal intends to deal with duals "with a good deal of sympathy and plenty of facts."

"There are so many thousands of exhibitors situated in so many different circumstances that it is foolish to try to establish one law or one rule to fit them all," he added. "What is food for one is poison for another.

"If I find that I am hurting more theatres than I am helping by selling on a double feature basis, I shall not sell on that basis. But, if on the other hand, I discover situations where my customer simply has to have double features and in selling him on that basis I am saving his life and not killing off someone else, I shall continue selling duals."

Allied at Chicago on New Season's Plans

Although some two dozen national leaders of Allied States Association went to Chicago for the avowed purpose of taking action against any rental increases for 1934-35 product, there was no indication after adjournment as to what definite decisions had been arrived at. "We are not tipping our plans, or taking the chance of putting 'on the spot' any persons with whom we may be working," said an Allied spokesman.

A committee composed of Abram Myers, Sidney Samuelson and Ed Ansin will work out Allied's proposed plan to produce independently. The matter of double bills will be left to individual members.

Allied's leaders decided against distributors arbitrarily fixing minimum admissions in contracts. Also, they went on record supporting the campaign of the Motion Picture Research Council to uplift motion pictures and to eliminate block booking "which makes it impossible for independents to refuse to show filthy pictures."

They opposed a trailer monopoly for large distributors, and appointed a committee as the first step in building a "technical organization that can put on the pressure" on those distributor and exhibition practices against which Allied has been campaigning for some time. This committee is composed of Mr. Samuelson, Mr. Meyers, Walter Littlefield and Arthur Price. They will take whatever action is deemed necessary on the Clarence Darrow report on the motion picture code.

Another Allied committee, including H. M. Richey, Al Steffes and Col. H. A. Cole, will delve into the theatre sound equipment situation.

Fear 20-Cent Minimum Admissions

The Allied leaders traveled on Monday from Chicago to Syracuse, N. Y., where a second conference was held, the net results being an expression of fear that distributors are "plotting" a 20-cent minimum admission clause in 1934-35 contracts, in an attempt to "kill" off houses now operating on 10 and 15-cent scales.

The leaders criticised Will H. Hays and again flayed objectionable films, declaring the NRA was of no assistance in elevating the tone of pictures. They promised a countrywide war on "sexy" films.

Sidney Samuelson charged that block booking is the cause of Hollywood's dwindling number of producers, and indicated that Allied is now surveying the field to ascertain how much revenue can be derived from features which would be released by the organization.

All committees will submit findings for Allied action at a New York meeting on June 13.

Independent of Allied is a second movement in the East, started by the MPTO of Pennsylvania, to fight any increase in 1934-35 rentals. This exhibitor group, joined by others from as far west as the Mississippi, will convene a second time in New York on Friday, at the Motion Picture Club on Broadway.

Meanwhile, at Omaha, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska voted to demand cancellation privileges up to 15 per cent on blocks of ten pictures, or more. In another resolution the members demanded that the number of guarantee and percentage pictures be limited to 10 per cent of the pictures released on a single contract, the remainder to be bought on percentage only.

Planned Early Sales Meetings Indicate a Normal Selling Season As Five Conventions Are Set During May and June

Five Conventions Set by Distributors

The sales conventions of Fox, Paramount, RKO, Universal and Warner will be held in May and June, with Columbia, Metro and United Artists still undecided, indicating a return to the normal spring and summer selling season which last year was delayed until fall because of the general business situation.

The conventions of the large distributors will get underway May 28, when Warner will hold the first of four regional meetings, at Montreal, followed by a New York conference June 4 and 5, and others in Chicago and Los Angeles, likewise in June.

Second to meet will be Fox, convening in New York May 31 to June 2. Universal will meet in New York June 5 and 7, and at Chicago June 11.

June 18 to 20 are the dates for Paramount's convention, to be held in Los Angeles, with RKO definitely set for Chicago, some time in June.

Columbia, MGM and United Artists had not announced their plans up to press time, but it appears almost certain their conventions will be held not later than mid-July. Monogram already has held one meeting, at Atlantic City, and others will follow in June.

Meanwhile, and in addition to product plans already reported, the following individual company activities involving the structure of 1934-35 release schedules were reported in New York and in Hollywood:

European tour. American companies will be sent abroad. First probably will be "David Copperfield."

Two comedy features will star Laurel and Hardy, Hal Roach producing.

Irving Thalberg announced his next ten features: "Merry Widow," co-starring Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald; "Barretts of Wimpole Street," with Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Charles Laughton; an untitled feature co-starring Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall; "Good Earth," now being made in China; "Mutiny on the Bounty," starring Clark Gable, Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery; "Marie Antoinette," with Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton; a Robert Rinehart book starring Marie Dressler; "What Every Woman Knows," Helen Hayes; "Three Weeks," Gloria Swanson, and "China Seas," Clark Gable and Jean Harlow.

Irvin Cobb's series of shorts will be made by Hal Roach for MGM release, eight in the group. In addition, Roach will have at least eight more Charley Chase Comedies.

MGM announced completion of 71 out of 91 shorts on this year's schedule, the remainder to be completed by July 1. The company said there will be another series of 13 "Oddities" for 1934-35, to be done in Technicolor, with Harmon-Ising also contributing another six Technicolor cartoons.

Monogram

Monogram's next sales convention will be at the Netherland-Plaza at Cincinnati, June 2 to 4 and embracing the territories of Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Oklahoma City, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Little Rock, with W. Ray Johnston presiding.

John Wayne again will make eight feature westerns for Monogram, to be produced by Paul Malvern, while the main Monogram production branch, in charge of Trem Carr, will have three features in work in a few days.

Warners

The first of four regional sales conventions will be held at the Mount Royal hotel, Montreal, May 28 and 29, followed by June 4 and 5 conferences at the Ambassador hotel in Atlantic City, with A. W. Smith, Jr., Canadian and eastern sales executive, presiding at both. They will be attended by district and branch exchange managers, and by home office executives. Addresses will be made by Mr. Smith, Harold Bareford, S. Charles Einfeld, Norman Moray.

Conventions will follow in Chicago and Los Angeles, in charge of Gradwell Sears.

The Vitaphone studio will resume short subject production Monday, and although Warner has 25 features completed and is almost six months ahead of actual release schedules, there will not be the customary summer shutdown of the Warner studio in Burbank.

PICTURE REPORTS DRAW OWN REWARD

Attesting the asset to showmen in their fellow-exhibitors' comment on the studios' individual product in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S "What the Picture Did for Me" department, are the letters from new contributors who each week are swelling the list.

For example: Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, of the Ideal Theatre at Burns, Oregon, whose first reports appear in this issue, have this to say:

" 'What the Picture Did for Me' is of great value to the small exhibitor," adding that "we have found the majority of reports to agree with our own ideas of the different pictures."

And for the one newly venturing into the field of exhibition, Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, South Dakota, comments:

"We are newcomers in the motion picture field and are finding 'What the Picture Did for Me' so helpful that I feel we should add our bit from time to time as a partial return for the many favors we are receiving from this department."

Keen analysis as well as refreshing frankness is reflected in the reports. Take the two following, appearing in this issue:

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—If they gave this horse the leading roles in some of our dramas it would improve them. Equine connoisseurs (how do you spell 'connoisseurs'?) ate this up. Very lucrative and highly eulogized by patrons of local Little Theatre movement.—HERMAN J. BROWN, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—While the two above-named are billed as the leading characters, I believe the top honors should go to Gregory Ratoff. I note several exhibitors criticized this picture adversely, but to one of my depraved taste, it was really an entertaining little picture. One of the exhibitors stated Miss Sothern could neither sing nor act. If this is so, I must be color blind in both ears. I thought she could sing and I thought she could act, and she did both to the satisfaction of 80 per cent of my audience. One of the critics hails from my own state (though it is not really my state) —Miss Fordyce of Selma, La. I don't like to contradict a lady, but what you goin' to do, I ask you? One of us is wrong and it ain't me. Played Apr. 15.—PETE BYLSMA, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

Free This and That Plagues Exhibitors

away anything. And all this, mind you, has nothing whatever to do with our serious troubles with producers and distributors, who are "on us" from every possible angle.

Hoping that these matters may receive some consideration, we have mailed a personal letter to Mr. John C. Flinn, Executive Secretary, Code Authority, New York City; also one to Mr. Hugh Johnson, at Washington, D. C., and have even taken it upon ourselves to write our President, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, on the subject.

Relative to our personal feelings toward our President, the Code Authority and all concerned in the working out of this serious condition in our industry, and to the complete recovery of all business and the general welfare of our Government and its people, we may say that we are proud to have hanging in our office a Certificate of Membership in the Democratic National Campaign Committee, certifying that our manager, Arthur E. Bennett, is an official member of the Motion Picture Division organized for this purpose of helping elect Franklin D. Roosevelt President of these United States. And we are justly proud of our small part in the results thereof.

We wish to add that Mr. Bennett has been in the amusement game here in Muncie and in surrounding towns for the past 25 years, having owned and operated the Liberty Theatre at this location for the past 18 years. For seven years he has been a director in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, Indiana Division, and we believe he is in position to know fully the serious difficulties to which the independent exhibitors throughout Indiana have been subjected.

Theatre Law Shift Vetoed by Lehman

Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York last week at Albany vetoed the Quinn bill, which would have amended what may be described as the theatre padlock law with reference to immoral shows.

The bill, prepared by Senator Quinn of New York City, Democrat, would have held producers alone responsible for immoral shows, excluding theatre owners or license holders from liability under the existing law, provided they filed with the licensing authority a sworn statement noting the name and address of the tenant producer prior to public exhibition of the show.

In his memorandum of disapproval, Governor Lehman wrote:

"I believe that if this bill were signed, it would render ineffective the provisions of the penal law relative to immoral performances. It would open the way for comparatively safe violations by irresponsible tenant producers, with immunity to the principal financial beneficiaries of indecent productions."

THAT CONTINUOUS PERFORMANCE

Production leaders and exhibitors add their comment this week on the complicated problem of the continuous performance and the handicap to the picture itself which is raised by seeing a picture from the middle instead of the beginning, as pointed out in the article by Martin Quigley on "The Public Be Damned" which appeared in the issue of April 21. Their suggestions appear herewith.

WINFIELD SHEEHAN

Vice-President and General Manager of Fox Production

I have read Mr. Quigley's editorial entitled "The Public Be Damned," dealing with the evil of continuous performances and the distorted, inadequate appraisal of pictures by a public which barges in haphazardly on any reel.

In my opinion, Mr. Quigley's summary of the evils resulting from this haphazard manner of looking at pictures is correct to some degree, but under the circumstances what are we going to do about it?

This is only one of many evils—or perhaps we should say unfortunate usages—in the presentation of pictures in our theatres.

One of the greatest of these evils is the fact that all pictures have to be aimed at the same age and the same calibre of intelligence, taste, appreciation and education. This is untrue of any other art form in the world. The galleries of the Metropolitan Museum, the portals of the Theatre Guild, and the stalls of those who deal in intelligent books are open to the public but no one pretends that the entire public must go to the same places for entertainment or intellectual satisfaction.

That there is not and cannot be, under present circumstances, a selective audience for motion pictures is, to my way of thinking, a greater curse than the evil of which Mr. Quigley so forcibly speaks. This has nothing to do with morals because it is conceivable that highly different grades of entertainment may all be moral and clean. It does mean that the same type, form and class of pictorial construction and character creation now has to appeal to every human being, regardless of age, education, taste, sex or experience—an obvious impossibility.

But, until world conditions get better, we must struggle along with this evil, with other evils, and with the evil Mr. Quigley so graphically describes, as best we can.

As far as I have observed, there is never any indisposition on the part of well conducted theatres to give the time of performances and to encourage attendance at certain hours. But to compel attendance at certain hours, to put up an arbitrary rule, which might fill the theater at one time and leave it more or less empty at all other times, cannot be undertaken in this period when all of us, whatever our vocation or profession, are struggling to keep out of the red.

It seems to me that the only thing which we of the studio can do to combat these various evils is to make our pictures better. Time, and time alone, will adjust and improve—or at least we hope it will—the various physical conditions in the theatre. Meanwhile, I haven't noticed that the really fine pictures are seriously suffering, either in attendance or public understanding and appreciation, by the lack of stated hours at which to see them.

WILLIAM A. CRUTE

Manager, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C.

We of the Western Circuit of the F. P. C. C. have a system to which we stick rigidly, that is, all schedules are made out a week or two ahead for head office approval, and a typed copy is in the booth. The cashier is instructed to give out all information re starting time of feature. We have a stock one-sheet card with interchangeable time cards, informing all and sundry that the feature starts at 8.45, or whatever the case may be, and advise patrons to see the show from the start if possible. We endeavor to have the second show start at 9 o'clock, sometimes dropping a news or short to do so, but the problem becomes complicated again when a double bill is shown. Then, again, we have patrons who demand the news and kick if we don't show it.

One night, a week ago, when running a double bill we boxed one feature and ran the best picture twice. The time given us and actual running time was out five minutes per show, so that we were out a few minutes to eleven o'clock, and in spite of warning patrons that we would only show the second feature once we had several kicks about not showing it. This is only a point brought up in the argument but shows the impossibility of pleasing all patrons.

Then again, if we advertise the second feature only once, at 8.30, some customers who come late and are informed that they have missed part of one feature, will refuse to come in, and as the warm weather comes along they begin to come in later, the majority of our business being done between 7.30 and 8.30, with quite a few stragglers coming in up to 9 o'clock.

This subject was discussed thoroughly at our weekly managers' round table meeting in our head office, with Larry Bearg, western divisional general manager, and F. H. Gow, suburban theatre district manager, participating, and we failed to find any solution of the problem, with the exception that we employ the suggestions I have listed.

CECIL B. DE MILLE

Producer for Paramount

I find in Mr. Quigley's editorial, "The Public Be Damned," a problem with which I have mentally wrestled for many years. It is one of those situations in the motion picture industry which has long cried for a remedy.

The present system of allowing an audience to view a picture beginning with the last half and then following it with the opening is not only a strain on the audiences, but it is also uncomplimentary to the producers and artists.

No member of that audience would think of allowing a surgeon to perform an operation on him by making the incision first and giving him the anesthetic afterward. The patient would be in considerable agony for some time, and the surgeon could not do his best work.

So it is with motion pictures on which energy and talent is expended in the building up of situations and characters toward a climax. The entire object of each motion picture is to hold interest through cumulative effect.

Under the present system the public suffers from lack of interest, and the producer and artist suffer because of the lowered appreciation of his work.

Indigestion is bound to follow if the public ate its meals in the same manner, starting out with dessert, coffee and cheese, and then progressing to the oysters and topping it all off with the roast beef or steak.

A statue should be erected to the person who will eventually succeed in remedying this situation and we will make sure that this statue will not be constructed with the hips at the base, the torso and head on top of that and finishing at the top with the legs.

A theatre manager is something like a naval petty officer inasmuch as he takes the onus and blame for a great deal of which he is not responsible.

DOUBLE BILL FACTOR

ture business, and that is the double feature program.

The double-billing practice has become a necessity because of the tremendous amount of trash pictures turned out by Hollywood. It is quite a safe bet to pick one picture out of twenty and say that that picture will stand alone on a program. The industry has developed into a factory, turning out miles of celluloid, and nothing more, and trusting to luck that a few feet of it contains something which will retain the prestige which the nascent days of the cinema promised, but which has only partially materialized.

This mass production only tends to shorten the life of talking pictures, and in the meantime, forces exhibitors to give their long-suffering patrons quantity instead of quality. Granted, the depression has caused the public to seek quantity at the cheapest price, but the depression will not last forever, and, in addition, the old adage about fooling the public for some of the time, although perhaps dormant, still lives and is liable to pop up again in the very near future. When it does, the public will probably turn up its nose at poor product, irrespective of a three-hour performance for a quarter, and the wise men of Hollywood who know sufficient of the psychology of human nature to appear in one picture a year, thereby starving the public, will prove how right they are.

An ordinary theatre runs in the evening from 7 till 11, or thereabouts, and the running time of the complete show is approximately 150 minutes, so that in four hours the manager has to place two complete shows of two-and-a-half hours duration. It cannot be done, so his only alternative is to show the "big" picture twice, and the second feature once, filling the remainder of the time with the shorts. Sometimes the features are long, which brings the last complete round to commence at 8.30, and sometimes they are short, making the last complete round ten or fifteen minutes earlier.

In my particular district the picture-goers turn out between 7:30 and 9:30, and I can quickly imagine the evening's total admission if I made it a rule to ask those who had missed the commencement of a feature to line up and wait until it had finished before letting them in. The verdict would be that the manager was crazy! Even when a patron enters the theatre and is told that the feature will be over in a few minutes, he insists on taking his seat, that is, with the odd exception, which is pretty good evidence of how the majority feel about waiting for the end of a feature.

If Hollywood cut down its product by at least fifty per cent, and spent more time, thought and money on bettering the class of screen entertainment, the nasty situation would then be cleaned up. It would mean that programs would consist of one good feature, supported by a variety of entertaining short subjects. It would mean that performances would start at a fixed time almost to the minute, because the inclusion of short subjects would allow for proper arrangement of schedule. (Double-billing almost eliminates the showing of shorts.) It would mean that there would be less time for patrons to wait before the end of one subject and the commencement of another, but still would not stop patrons being seated in the middle of the feature. That is absolutely impossible whilst the continuous performance is fashionable.

And most important of all, it would put the theatre on a more attractive footing for both patron and exhibitor, for it would give the exhibitor something to sell, and the patron something to see. Mediocre pictures are having a telling effect on the public. That, plus the depression, has taught the better class patrons to shop for their entertainment very stintingly, whilst the poorer type of movie fan accepts the double-bill at the fifteen and twenty-five cents admission. Not, particularly, because they cannot pay more, but they have become educated to get all they can for the least amount of money.

I fail to see how the continuous performance can be abolished now that it has become so firmly established. Most of the trouble lies with the double feature program and the jumping around of starting times. It is useless for Hollywood to complain of the lack of justification its product receives by the public seeing features last half first. The solution, to a great extent, lies in the producers' hands. Cut out mass production! That will help tremendously to recapture public appreciation, and sober up the mad scramble of exhibitors to "get them in at any price." If a picture is not worth twenty-five cents to see, whether it be a first or fifth-run house, then motion picture production must be at a pretty low ebb.

New York Levies Gross Tax

The New York City Board of Aldermen on Tuesday passed Mayor La Guardia's city tax program placing a levy of one-twentieth of one per cent on the gross earnings of general business and corporations, and one-tenth of one per cent on gross receipts of brokers. Theatres had participated with merchants in the fight against the measure.

London Film Plans Six Next Season

London Films, producer of "Private Life of Henry VIII," has set a maximum of six pictures for 1934-35, according to Etienne Pallos, general sales manager, who arrived in New York this week for conferences with United Artists officials. United Artists will continue to release the British product in this country.

Mr. Pallos also will negotiate for American talent, and is seeking either Fredric March or Ronald Colman to star in "The Scarlet Pimpernel." An American director also is to be signed for this picture.

London Films' first release of the new season will be brought to this country in September by Douglas Fairbanks, who also stars in the picture, "The Private Life of Don Juan." Following this will be "The Scarlet Pimpernel," while the third is H. G. Wells' "100 Years to Come," for which Lewis Milestone has been signed as director. The fourth will be Robert E. Sherwood's "The Marshal," with Maurice Chevalier, which Alexander Korda will direct. Charles Laughton has been signed for a Frederick Lonsdale story. The company also has signed Elizabeth Bergner, star of "Catharine the Great," for one picture.

Pathe's Quarter Profit Is $51,900

Profit of $51,900 for the first quarter of 1934, before interest charges, but after deducting all expenses, taxes, amortization and depreciation of properties, was reported this week by Stuart W. Webb, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc. This compares with $31,725 for the same period of 1933.

The figure, Mr. Webb said, includes earnings from the regular quarterly dividend of $49,000 on Pathe's 49 per cent interest in Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation. Du Pont has been perfecting a method of casting film which is said to improve the quality of product.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Ten crates of grapes from the Argentine arrived in Hollywood last Thursday consigned to Cecil DeMille. The director had ordered them by cablegram for his "Cleopatra," now in the making for Paramount.

DeMille had a large quantity of native California grapes stored at the end of the grape season last fall. After remaining in storage for three months, they were used in the early sequences, but they shriveled up and turned into raisins under the studio lights.

In order to be ready for Cleo's big revel on her palatial barge, "C. B." had ten crates of these berries of the vine of the genus Vitis shipped from the Argentine to New York by steamer, and from the east coast to the west coast by airplane.

When the Paramount trustees see the bill for the Argentine fruit they'll probably tell Mr. DeMille that he should have made Cleo eat raisins. On the other hand, if he were a true son of California he would have postponed production a few months until the native fruit is ready.

Mr. Harry Poole, operating two of the farthest west theatres, at Klamath Falls, in Oregon near the sea, drove by the home of one of his patrons the other day and noticed that the husband and wife were vigorously engaged in a good old-fashioned slugfest in the front yard. Harry jumped from the car and attempted to intervene. The husband chewed up his index finger.

Mr. Charles Penley, head of the Paramount-Astoria theatres in London, wrote to Mr. A-Mike Vogel, head of our Managers' Round Table Club, that among the many brilliant exploitation stunts attempted during the run of "Henry the Eighth" was a stag hunt in the King's private Windsor Great Park.

"We actually assembled in Windsor Park," Mr. Penley reported, "but the continuance of the hunt was prohibited by the King's Rangers."

Mr. Vogel expressed amazement over the interference that prevented the conclusion of this masterful stroke of showmanship.

Out in Bisbee, Arizona, where movie reviewers are stark realists, the Brewery Gazette prints this:

> "Dancing Lady" is supposed to be a very extra special picture, probably because of the surprise finish. Laughter turns to amazement when Joan Crawford dances. It is marvellous, astonishing, gigantic, colossal. She shows great talent—and more than talent in the bathing episode. Gable pats her on the back but his aim is low. In fact, he hits below the belt. The finish shows Joan Crawford in the arms of Gable. This is the surprise finish—the hero and heroine united. Or maybe we're wrong; it may have been done that way before.

The insistence of Hollywood producers in using Santa Fe for all railroads in motion pictures is akin to their conception of Hollywood as the only place in the world worth paying any attention to. In the picture, "Dr. Bull," Will Rogers left a small New England town on a train drawn by an Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe locomotive. W. C. Fields and Alison Skipworth in "Tillie & Gus" left Seattle in a Pullman powered by a Santa Fe engine. In "Little Women," Marmee rode from New England to the Capital behind an iron horse of the Santa Fe. And in "Carolina," the ride to Charleston was made on a Santa Fe train.

Railroad consolidation has, evidently, become a reality.

Her majesty, Queen of England, wears those curious little hats to please her husband. This inside information was disclosed by Madame Hilda Grenier, who for years was personal attendant to Queen Mary, holding the position of Royal Dresser in Her Majesty's Wardrobe, and who is now acting as technical adviser on Sylvia Sidney's "Thirty Day Princess." King George likes Queen Mary to show off her hair, and thus the little hats.

The Queen's favorite adornment is a shoulder-clasp made from the last spike driven in the Canadian-Pacific railroad, according to Madame Grenier. The Queen has never worn an engagement ring from King George, but still wears one given her by the King's elder brother, Prince Clarence. When the Prince died suddenly, Queen Mary kept the ruby ring he gave her. She accepted a diamond bracelet from King George, who was then Prince of Wales. The ruby ring now seals her wedding ring upon her finger.

Two photographs repose on a little stand beside the Queen's bed. One is of King George, the other of Prince Clarence.

Mathematician Jack Oakie has figured out that if all the clothes worn by the 68 chorus girls in Paramount's "Murder at the Vanities" were sewn together into a single garment, it would make a nice pair of pants for Baby LeRoy.

Exhibitors may now let centipedes crawl unrestrained. Judge Claude Weaver, in Oklahoma City District Court, ruled against Emily Williams, high school girl, who brought suit against the local Warner Brothers' theatre for an alleged centipede bite while viewing a picture. She charged that a 1,000-legged centipede went on a rampage and chewed a piece of her right leg. The court ruled that the theatre had no control over centipedes entering the house.

The widely-read Catholic weekly, America, edited by Father Wilfrid Parsons, has taken up the fight of the grammarians against the inaccurate phraseology of the New York Fire Department's pet emergency warning to large assemblies, to wit: "Look around now and choose the nearest exit to your seat. In case of fire Walk (not run) to the exit. Do not try to beat your neighbor to the street."

The publication blamed Fire Commissioner John J. McElligott for the bad English, but the New York Sun claims that the lines were written some 20 years ago by none other than Mr. Joseph Johnson, who was then fire commissioner, and who, a few years ago, had a somewhat brief association with the motion picture business as an executive of Fox Film Corporation on the west coast.

Mr. Johnson, Atlanta born, was quite active for years in and about Tammany Hall in New York. At the invitation of Mr. Winfield Sheehan, he joined Fox in November, 1929, going to Movietone City in the west several months later. His title, "general representative," told the extent of his duties, which were terminated quite abruptly after a run-in with the management, late in 1930.

Information about his present activities, like those of other Tammanyites, is meagre.

Phil Regan, who was signed by Warner Brothers from radio, gets fan letters from New York's Sing Sing Prison at Ossining. He was a New York detective and some of those he arrested seem to think well of him.

A new use has been found for autographs of screen stars—probably the best thus far discovered. Some time ago, several Hollywood personalities learned they had innocently signed their names to blank checks, which were subsequently filled in and cashed, while they actually thought they were handing out autographs to admirers. The trick was to cover the check down to the signature line. The latest development emanates from the Missouri town of Marceline, where a westbound train carrying Clark Gable, stopped on a switching track for a few minutes. A young lad pushed himself forward and thrust a piece of rumpled paper into Gable's hand with the request: "Hey, mister, wontcha please sign this for me?" Gable willingly obliged.

Next day a Marceline school teacher was startled a little bit when she read this note from a pupil: "Deer Teecher: Pleze xcuse Willy from bean absent. He had to work. Clark Gable."

We believe it would have been quite fitting if Hollywood had sent a delegation representing production to the 650th anniversary celebration of the little town of Jonkoping in Sweden, on May 18th, for it was in that medieval spot on beautiful Lake Vattern that mass production was born, some 62 years ago.

In 1872 the standardized Lagerman match making machine was put in operation, thereby innocently starting with the then pride of progress the new controversial subjects of mass production and technological unemployment.

RKO would have us believe, publicity-wise, that Joel McCrea, their 29-year-old, six-foot leading man, attends every "sneak" preview of his pictures, and sits through them blindfolded so that he can better sense the feelings and reactions of the audience in order to tell to a certainty whether or not they like the production. BUT, just suppose young Joel happens along in a box-office hoodoo. Would he admit it, or would he charge the reactions of his critical faculties to the chemical warfare of some bad boys of the local union?

Up-from-the-Depths-Department, dramatized by the Whittier, Cal., News:

> Walter McDonald, song leader at the Vom Bruch Gospel Tent on South Painter Avenue, will tell the story of his life and conversion at tonight's service. He is a converted comedian, and his first appearance was with Fred Waring and his well known orchestra. His last appearance was with Eddie Cantor, he says. McDonald was converted from a life of drunkenness and stage entertaining to a gospel song and he will give a detailed account of this in tonight's story.

Johnny Chapman passes along the Toronto Telegram's solution of the problem of what to do with press agents' blurbs about pictures. Instead of doing a rewrite job and eliminating the superlatives, or tossing them into the waste basket, where many of them belong, the editors print everything that comes along under a two-column box reading:

"Comment by Press Agents on Coming Attractions.—Responsibility for Opinions Expressed in These Advance Notices Rests Entirely with the Theatres Concerned."

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR APRIL

● Eight productions have been placed in April's list of champions by the nation's key theatre box offices. They are distributed, however, among only four rankings, there being two tied for third, and four for fourth. The only picture in the April group to have appeared in a previous list of Box Office Champions—Columbia's "It Happened One Night"—was named for both February and March. The April list leans strongly toward two general extremes of appeal, with three dramas and an equal number of musicals. A comedy-drama and an African jungle picture completed the roster for April.

SCHAEFER, PETTIJOHN DEFEND SALES PLANS

Tell Republican Women's Club at Boston That Selfish Interests Are Attempting to Use Public Groups as Catspaws

A sharp defense of present distribution methods which at the same time was an equally vigorous excoriation of those who, under the guise of seeking better pictures, demand censorship "of every form of news, artistic and literary expressions" and would make public groups "catspaws" for trade factors trying to divert interest to a "trial by publicity" of trade practices, was made in addresses made Wednesday by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of Paramount. The occasion was a symposium on "Better Motion Pictures" by the Women's Republican Club at Boston.

Mr. Pettijohn pointed out that better pictures can be produced only by progressively higher standards of public appreciation, explaining:

"In a current issue of a leading national publication—The Literary Digest—in no way associated with the motion picture industry, 21 feature pictures of an outstandingly high character are recommended for the current week's entertainment. Of these 21, 15, more than 71 per cent—are specifically starred by that publication as films specially suitable for children. An industry with such a record of serving family entertainment requirements can afford to ignore the deliberate misrepresentation that has marked this issue. . . .

"Trying Case by Propaganda"

"Nothing could be more absurd than the proposition that the basic problem of better pictures lies in the method or manner by which the industry distributes its entertainment products or by which the exhibitor rents his pictures.

"Consider the tremendously complex problems of an industry which sells not a product but a service in which timeliness of production, distribution and exhibition is the very essence of success or failure; an industry which sells one and the same entertainment program, representing many thousands of dollars of investment, to first-run theatres for $6,000, $8,000 and $10,000, and finally distributes the very same picture to the humblest theatre in the land during the same current season for as little as $6, $8, or $10. . . . Only anarchy, not justice, could result if every business factor with a selfish or false interest to serve were encouraged by equally selfish public groups to try his case by propaganda and ignore the processes of self-regulation and determination by the courts."

Schaefer Warns of Agitators

Mr. Schaefer, declaring that "compulsion upon the exhibitor to show every picture that he rented has never existed," pointed out that block-booking "originated from the desperate need of the theatre owner for a week-in and week-out supply of pictures" and that from the distributor's standpoint the system "reduced the high cost of selling."

"Those who are trying to destroy this system by using public groups as their 'catspaws' are working for chaos, not order," he charged. "In one way or another they hope to benefit from the confusion that would arise." He cited also the fact that under the code the exhibitor may cancel at least 10 per cent of pictures he has bought.

"I defy any group or individual," he said, "to offer the slightest proof that under this system of wholesale selling a good picture—good from your standpoint, the social standpoint—has ever been stopped from exhibition, or that any bad picture—bad, again from the social standpoint—has ever been forced upon any exhibitor.

"You are told that it's the little man, the individual exhibitor, who would be protected by the destruction of these industry trade practices. The hypocrisy of such statements is evident from the slightest consideration.

"If the theatre owner could not contract for his requirements in advance, if he were forced to buy at retail, rather than wholesale, if he were forced to meet the higher—vastly higher—rental charges that this would make necessary, if he had to buy every single picture against the direct competition of every theatre owner, who would benefit? Obviously, the socalled big fellow, the fellow with the largest buying power, the interests with the largest number of theatres to serve."

Midwest Exchanges Merge; Other Distribution Deals

Consolidated Film Distributors, Kansas City, has formed a buying combine with Capitol Film Exchanges of Omaha and Minneapolis. Consolidated now handles Amity, Goldsmith and other independent product. Amity will distribute the Leo Carrillo film, "Before Morning," produced by Stage and Screen Productions, Inc., in 26 exchange centers over the country.

Arthur Sanchez of Trans-Oceanic Film Export Company has completed a deal for distribution of six Tom Tyler and eight Bob Steel westerns in Canada. Standard Film Exchanges will distribute "Enlighten Thy Daughter" through its Albany and Buffalo offices. Graphic Film Exchanges of Detroit has acquired the film for Michigan. Exploitation Pictures is distributing the picture. The Inter-Continent Film Corporation, headed by M. D. Strong, has taken over distribution in New York and southern New Jersey of the one-reel short of C. John Predari, "Two Hard Workers," featuring Molasses and January.

Chicago Theatre Leased

The Princess theatre, Chicago, formerly a legitimate house, has been leased by the Princess Clark Theatre Corporation, and will be operated as a motion picture theatre. The lease was negotiated through Albert Goldman of Chicago.

Fox Metropolitan Plan Completed

A provision for acquisition of the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses by bondholders through a foreclosure sale is included in the reorganization plan completed Wednesday by the committee representing holders of 6½ per cent convertible gold notes and 6½ per cent sinking fund gold debentures.

This committee is said to represent more than 85 per cent of the noteholders of Fox Metropolitan, one of the largest theatre circuits in the East. These holders represent $10,000,000 of the $15,000,000 of the company's bonds. Any other bidder than the committee would have to make an offer of approximately $13,000,000, as the committee is ready to bid the full amount of the bonds held by it, it was said Wednesday.

Walter Reade, New York and New Jersey theatre operator, and Warner Bros. were reported by Irving Trust Co., receiver for the circuit, to have been making inquiries concerning the result of the circuit's operations during the two-year receivership period.

Skouras and Randforce, under the reorganization plan, would continue to operate the circuit as they have done for the receivers. A new company would be organized to exchange new debentures for 50 per cent of the currently outstanding notes and would issue 20 shares of new common stock for each $1,000 of Fox Metropolitan debentures.

If approved by the federal court, the plan probably will be submitted to creditors of the circuit at a public hearing in June.

Insull Is Obliging Subject for Newsreels

Samuel Insull, elderly deposed utilities monarch of the Midwest, back from a world trek in search of freedom, and a patient in St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, out of jail on $250,000 bail, faced a squad of four newsreel cameramen late last week, and was the accomplished performer.

Supplemented by still photographers from the newspapers and by innumerable reporters, the newsreel crews kept their subject busy for some little while, giving directions, having him pose and re-pose. But he was careful. When one cameraman wanted him to hold the outstretched finger with which he punctuated a point in his prepared statement, he refused, declaring it would be called "one of his dictatorial gestures." When he repeated a word by accident, the reel men made him do the whole thing again, and he had it correctly the second time. Throughout he was most accommodating and good natured.

Indianapolis Variety Club Affair May 29

The recently organized Variety Club in Indianapolis is planning an elaborate affair for local and out-of-town members on May 29, the eve of the Indianapolis Memorial Day speed races. Members from other cities who intend to attend the races are requested to communicate in advance with Joseph Cantor, United Artists Corporation, Indianapolis. It is planned to make the affair annual.

'SHOULD CLICK ON SCREEN LIKE TAXI'

Says DeCasseres of "The Milky Way"; Sees "Thriller" Possibilities In "I, Myself," Another Stage Play

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THE MILKY WAY

Here's a show that'll click on the screen like a taxi waiting for a Saturday night booze party on a snowy night.

It spits speed in every movement of the players, something doing every minute. Dialogue and wisecracks cut the air like knives in the hands of an expert juggler. And it will carry the funniest prize-fight in the Yankee Stadium ever seen on the screen —or how a milkman beat a middleweight champion by merely ducking.

It's "The Milky Way," by Lynn Root and Harry Clork (Sidney Harmon and James R. Ullman, producing). It was an instant hit and is good for all summer.

Hugh O'Connell, the drunken newspaper fellow of "The Racket" and "Gentlemen of the Press" and the dumbbell peanut-eater of "Once in a Lifetime," hit a new high of laughs as a milkman who, by a set of funny circumstances, is literally shanghaied into the ring by a gang of fighters and fight promoters who live in an apartment hotel in the New York Fifties.

Burleigh Sullivan (O'Connell), who has a milk route, is calling for his sister, a hat-girl in a night café, when he gets mixed up with Speed McFarland (Brian Donlevy) and his wild-eyed trainer. Burleigh knocks 'm both out by merely ducking, a grand trick he learned when a boy. (This is off-stage, but is grand screen stuff.)

Then follows the training of the milkman, his sister's objections, and the appearance of the handsomest blonde ever seen on Broadway, Gladys George of the late silents, who has just been signed by the Metro-Goldwyn people. Her wisecracks and pep hit the audience right in the puss. She is the best girl of Gabby Cloan, Speed's manager. Leo Donnelly is the Gabby.

The fun and complications are fast and furious and much of the dialogue was lost because of the continuous mirth of the audience.

Emily Lawry, lately of "As the Earth Turns," is the sister of the milkman who is trying to teach Speed to be a disciple of Wagner (Richard) and how he can get a handful of culture.

In a word, nothing but picture angles and angles.

With a bouncing West Coast cast, "The Milky Way" will stand 'em in line.

I, MYSELF

I personally have a weakness for pictures about after-death, like "Outward Bound," "The Return of Peter Grimm" and "Berkeley Square." I believe the public, too, has a yen for death subjects, the last smash hit being "Death Takes a Holiday."

Now, here is the oddest of all after-death plays, "I, Myself," by "Adelyn Bushnell," staged by Charles Hopkins and financed by Malcolm L. Pearson and Donald E. Baruch (son of Bernard Baruch). It contains the potentialities of a thrilling picture, one of those goose-fleshy, breath-holding affairs which grip in cataleptic conniptions young and old alike, and, sometimes, even the Voltaires and Nietzsches of Sutton place.

Bill Trent is a kindly failure. His wife and daughter pan him because he doesn't make enough money. Mrs. Trent, besides, is much beloved by another fellow. When the curtain goes up Bill is sitting unseen in a huge chair before the fireplace.

When his family leave, Bill comes out from his hiding-place in the big chair. He has heard just what his wife and daughter think of him. There is a knock at the door. It is a poor down-and-outer, hungry and cold, looking for work. But, like Bill, the down-and-outer has served overseas; also, he has a wife who is ill and he is trying to get back to her.

During the conversation a big idea hits Bill Trent. He offers the down-and-outer $140 to shoot him. His family will then collect his $50,000 insurance.

Sure!—it's a soldier's business to murder. So the down-and-outer kills Bill.

In the next act Trent moves around the room like Peter Grimm. He meets another A. E. F. ghost, who had committed suicide Over There. We see Bill and his friend at Bill's funeral.

Now comes the real drama. The wife, who has really loved Bill, is accused of the murder. Besides, his daughter, who has loved not wisely but too well, is longing for the understanding presence of her father. Here we see the anguish of Bill, who can do nothing because he is a ghost. There is even the Great Judge in the distance; just faintly indicated, but effective.

Things come out all right, for 'tis said, a murder committed without hate produces different effects Up There. The down-and-outer, through some mysterious urge, is forced to return and confess that he is the guilty one. His wife and child have died. He is eager to join them.

A play like this always leaves a meditative hangover when one leaves the theatre. There is so much chance for speculation.

RATINGS OF PLAYS AS SCREEN MATERIAL

Broadway plays reviewed in this issue by Benjamin DeCasseres, essayist and critic, are given the following ratings by him as screen potentialities:

"The Milky Way"—100 per cent.
"These Two"—50 per cent.
"I, Myself"—70 per cent.

THESE TWO

Many plays are produced on Broadway the picture values of which are to be found in the action that goes on off-stage and also in the required recreation of characters by the Hollywood script-twiddlers that are only verbally existent in the dialogue of the stage play.

Such is the case with "These Two," by Lionel Hale (Leslie J. Casey and James W. Liddle, producing). The audience was continually tantalized by things that were merely spoken of. Now these things were the really important events of the play.

The result of this bungling, this substitution of dialogue for action, was a dreary evening, an evening full of coughs and yawns in which the characters did not crackle with fire until just before the fall of the last curtain. "Too late!," I heard Al Woods ejaculate.

Tom Rowlands (A. E. Matthews, who still mistakes corkscrew mannerisms for acting) and Simon More (Bramwell Fletcher, a good actor in any role) are bachelors and together keep bachelor hall (London style). Tom is elderly. Simon is virginally and boobishly young.

Simon's girl, Celia Desmond (Helen Chandler, delightful and wistful always), has got in a fix with a fellow we do not see (gosh darn it!).

Simon, who loves Celia a la Godey's Lady's Book, marries her to give the baby a father (ever heard of that situation before?). Baby dies. The marriage remains unconsummated for a year (ho, Mr. Ripley!).

Tom's got a girl, Fay Carlile (the swanky and handsome Kay Strozzi). Fay is practically the Delight of the Town. Quarrelling with Tom (always off-stage, drat it!), she tries to "make" Simon the Pure and Simple. We all believed she had made him (off-stage again—O shucks!).

Well, the blow-up comes between Simon (who meantime has "made" his own wife—off-stage, too, fancy that!) and Celia, and Si packs out, leaving Celia (who now loves her husband) contemplating suicide with cyanide (which she probably swallows off-stage).

The dialogue is slovenly, the curtains unexciting, and the characters drink stage sherry and play chess.

You will note the great number of parentheses I have used in this appraisal. These indicate some of the off-stage matter that might work this play into a pretty good picture product.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

NVA Enlists 2,487 Houses

The annual drive of the National Variety Artists, undertaken last week, had the co-operation of 2,487 theatres across the country, the largest number ever enlisted, according to Major L. E. Thompson, drive chairman.

Meehan 'Satisfied' With RKO Change

Mike Meehan, financier and largest individual stockholder in Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation—chief theatre subsidiary of Radio Keith Orpheum—this week was reported to be "satisfied" with the present operating setup of the theatre company. Mr. Meehan for some time has been agitating for divorcement of KAO operation from RKO.

As far as the industry in New York has been able to ascertain, Mr. Meehan's success in this direction has proceeded little further than the accomplishment of having two of his nominees—Leon Goldberg and I. E. Lambert—elected as circuit officers.

Actual theatre operations, however, still remain in charge of Major Leslie E. Thompson, an RKO official, while J. R. McDonough remains as president, M. H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board, and Malcolm Kingsberg, first vice-president—all RKO executives.

KAO and subsidiaries reported net profit for the first quarter of 1934 of $167,522. Operating profit was $413,486.

As a powerful controlling factor in KAO, Mr. Meehan has been seeking a physical separation of all RKO film and theatre operations, and one of the first indications pointing to the accomplishment of this was the announcement three weeks ago that Robert F. Sisk, who has been in full charge of all RKO publicity and advertising, had been relieved of his theatre publicity duties and henceforth would devote his efforts to the publicizing of RKO Radio pictures.

RKO officials, while declining to explain it, have openly admitted their opposition to the Meehan plan. The "inside story," however, was brought to light this week by a spokesman for Mr. Meehan himself.

"It was about a year ago that Mr. Meehan, as the factor in control of 30,000 shares of the 60,000 KAO preferred shares outstanding, determined the rights of the company were to be more specifically recognized," he said. "What had happened prior to that traces itself more to a case of viewpoints than actions. It was more or less natural that RKO officials would approach company matters from the angle of the entire structure. It was just as natural that, with a large investment, the interests holding KAO preferred would insist that more KAO viewpoint prevail.

"That has now been worked out by arranging to give KAO independent officers whose interest rests with the company they represent."

"Insofar as operations are concerned," the spokesman continued, "KAO is now being run as a theatre company should. I suppose in many instances Radio Pictures would prefer that we do certain things its way. In our dealings, however, we are proceeding as an exhibitor and are submitting any deals with Radio Pictures to the same considerations we would, and do, in negotiations with Paramount, Fox and other producing and distributing companies."

RKO this week reported a net loss for the year 1933 of $580,387 for B. F. Keith Corp., and its subsidiary companies. Current assets amount to $766,077, as against current liabilities of $421,241.

Library Is Testing Use of Film Replacing News Files

The New York Public Libary is conducting experiments designed to substitute imperishable motion picture film for the fragile, comparatively short-lived newsprint. The current experiments are an advance on the mere preservation of the material, which has been done to a large extent by the Library of Congress at Washington, having in view the possibility of the research worker casually reading with the aid of a projector.

The actual photographing is done in the Eastman laboratories, with standard 35 mm. width film used. It differs from ordinary film stock, however, in the employment of a base of non-inflammable cellulose acetate, such as is used in amateur film cameras. Space required for storage of newspaper files and for the film reproduction presents an interesting comparison, it is said.

Mrs. Belmont Aids Philadelphia Unit

Mrs. August Belmont, president of the Motion Picture Research Council, in an address at Philadelphia to a meeting called to organize a local branch, urged that the film business "give us freedom for each community to choose what film plays it won't have." Local exhibitors, she said, "plead that 'we can't help ourselves.'"

Dr. Bernard Sachs, president of the New York Academy of Medicine, charged that "the moving picture, in its presentation of excessive sex drama and above all in its presentation of gangster activities has become the veritable school of crime." He took issue with the critics of the Payne Fund studies who have declared films have no adverse effect on the child.

Named members of the national educational committe of the Motion Picture Research Council, under the chairmanship of Dr. William Kilpatrick of Columbia, were: Dean Virginia Gildersleeve, Barnard; Dean William F. Russell, Columbia Teachers' College; Ethel Stringfellow, Miss Chapin's School; Dr. Edward Lee Thorndike, Columbia; Florence Hale, editor of Grade Teacher; Dr. Edward C. Lindeman, New York School of Social Work; Dr. Paul R. Mort, Teachers' College; Mrs. Evelyn W. Adams, Buckley School; Dr. William C. Bagley, Columbia. Appointed to the committee from the West Coast are Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University; Dr. Eliot Grinnell Means, Stanford, and Dr. William Kebb Kemp, University of California.

Mrs. James E. Ayer, chairman of the Boston chapter of the Council, has announced appointment of the executive committee for Boston as follows: Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, vice chairmen; Henry R. Atkinson, Mrs. Arthur H. Brooks, Robert Cutler, Herbert V. Ehrmann, Roger Ernst, Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, Bartholomew F. Griffin, Mrs. Herbert Lyman, Mrs. Maurice M. Osborne, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Mrs. Eva Whiting White. Already named are: Mrs. Harriette Brazzelle, Mrs. Pope Parker, Mrs. Frederick L. Emery, Mrs. F. B. Twitchell, Mrs. V. H. Richards, Mrs. Robert R. Ames, Mrs. John C. Lee, Mrs. J. T. Baldwin.

Oregon Industry Enjoys Its Golf

At the first annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament of the Oregon motion picture industry, held at Medford, Ore., last week, practically everyone in the trade was represented and everyone was pressed into service on some useful committee. The fun was fast and furious and all considered themselves repaid for their trip into the great Rogue River Valley, which never looked better. Final scores and trophy winners will soon be announced.

On the general committee were Dennis Hull, chairman; Sam Whiteside, Ted Gamble, Dude Smith, Dutch Stoever, Guy Matthews, Harry Poole, Robert Marsden and Hank Crabill.

The two efficient bartenders were George A. Hunt and Walter H. Leverette.

On the golf tournament committee were Jack Hueston, pro-chairman; Dennie Hull and Dutch Stoever. Entertainment committee, Gene Childers, chairman; Tom Shearer and Bill Ripley.

On rules and regulations: Jack Noble, chairman; Ted Gamble and Gordon Craddock. Transportation committee: Jimmy Beale, chairman; Guy Matthews and George Jackson. Handicap committee: Frank Clark, chairman; Robert Marsden and Bill Graeper. Grievance committee: Bill Cutts, chairman; Ike Geller, Bob White, Col. Woodlaw, Miss Ruth Doyle. Billy Green was chairman of the instructions committee, assisted by Clarence Tillman.

Russian Film Head Here To Study American Market

Distribution deals of a reciprocal nature between American film companies and the Soviet motion picture trust will be discussed by M. Usievitch, head of Soyuzkinoexport, the combined Russian film interests, who arrived in New York this week.

The executive will remain here several weeks, studying possible outlets for Russian films, and seeking methods of increasing the popularity of Soviet product in America. Vladimer I. Verlinsky, formerly associated with the Russian film trust, has been named president of Amkino, American representative of the Soviet industry.

Open 16mm. Library Branch

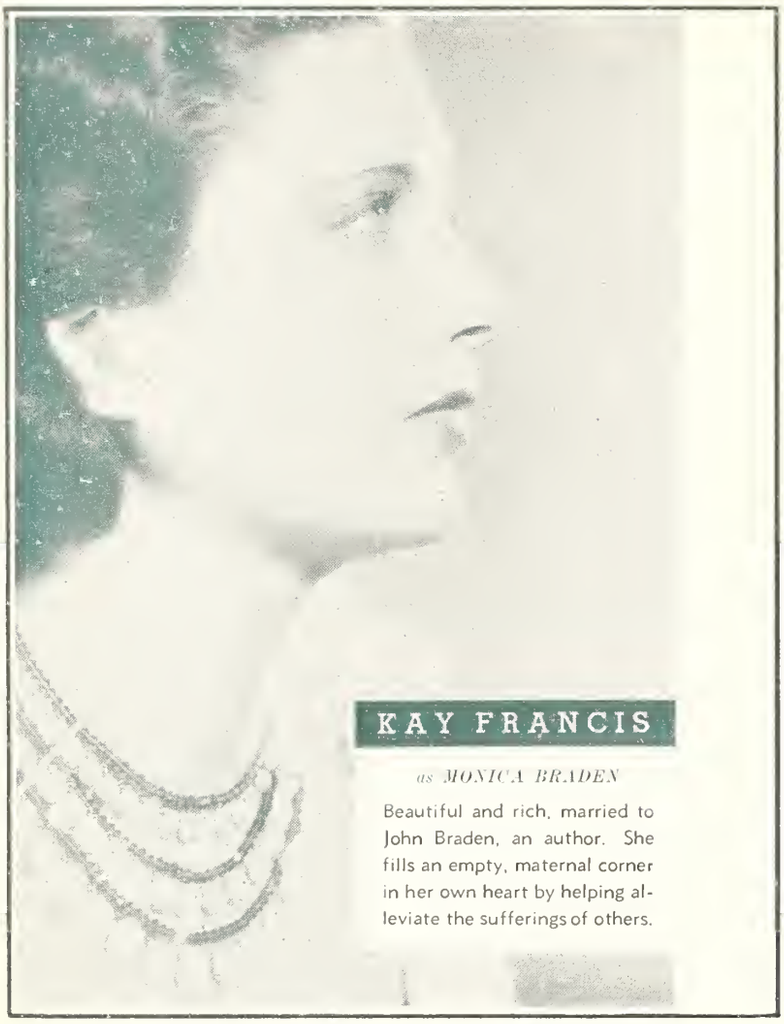
The Sound Film Circulating Library, Inc., has opened a branch office in the metropolitan New York district, through which 16 mm. sound-on-film pictures are available on a daily rental basis. Other branch offices are planned throughout the country.

Mrs. Walton Resigns Post

Mrs. Alma Walton has resigned as secretary of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee and the Memphis Film Board, having been informed by the Code Authority she cannot retain these posts while acting as local code board secretary.

New York SMPE Moves

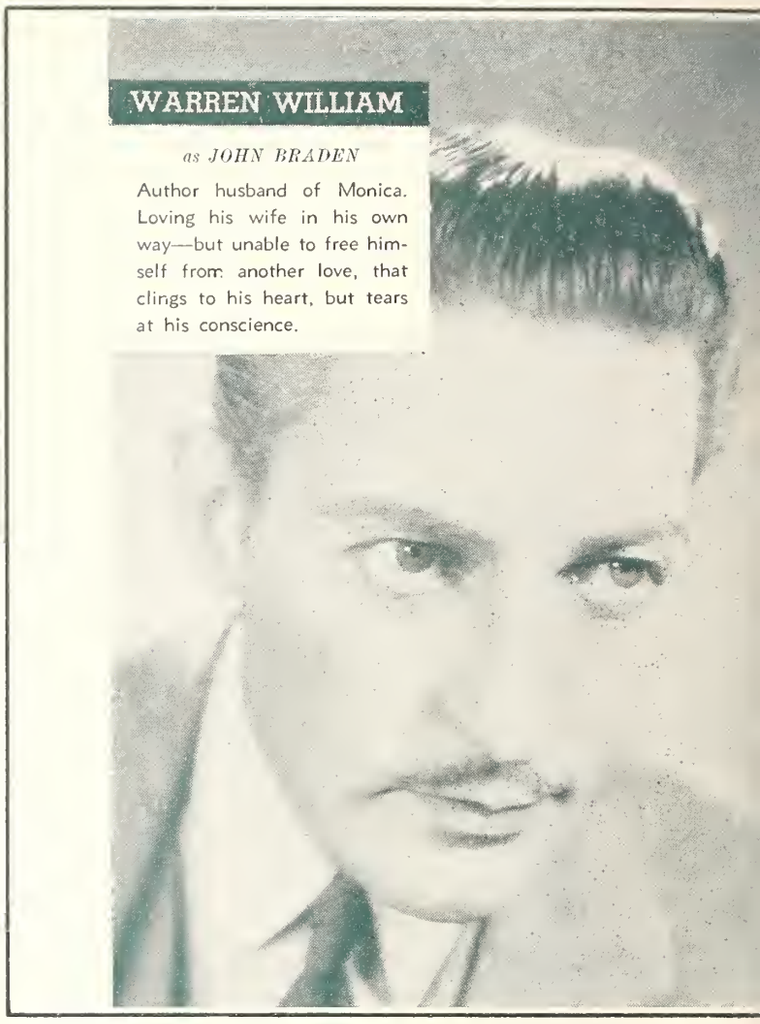
The New York headquarters of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is now located at the Hotel Pennsylvania. Sylvan Harris is editor-manager. The fall convention will be held at the Pennsylvania.



A "PREVIEW" OF

KAY FRANCIS
in
"DR. MONICA"

Because "Dr. Monica" will be one of the most important dramatic attractions of 1934, WARNER BROS. present for the first time in any publication an advance "screening" of this production, in words and pictures...We believe it will be to your financial interest to give special study to the powerful story values of this picture.



"DR. MONICA" • THE CAST

KAY FRANCIS

as MONICA BRADEN

Beautiful and rich, married to John Braden, an author. She fills an empty, maternal corner in her own heart by helping alleviate the sufferings of others.

WARREN WILLIAM

as JOHN BRADEN

Author husband of Monica. Loving his wife in his own way—but unable to free himself from another love, that clings to his heart, but tears at his conscience.

JEAN MUIR

as MARY

Young, beautiful aviatrix — friend and patient of Monica. Not immoral, but life pulses within her like the rhythmic call of primitive drums. Her heart beats only for John Braden.

VERREE TEASDALE

as ANNA

A friend of Monica, John and Mary. Always in the very center of the dramatic maelstrom, she manages to stay afloat and help with the life lines.

DR. MONICA" • THE STORY

Monica has just mentioned that her husband is going to Europe. Casual words—but not to Mary. They send her world crashing about her. She collapses in Monica's arms. John going away! Mary believes he is running away from her—from the consequences of their secret love!

In a soul-searing scene, Mary and John meet for the last time at their rendezvous and agree that they must part forever.

"There's a spark of decency in both of us," she tells him, "that we cannot overcome. Monica must never know. This must be good-bye."

Repressing the tears that welled from her stricken heart, she turns her back on all that makes life worth living for her—Alone she will face—the terrifying future—

MONICA: You must be frank if you want me to help you.

MARY: Nobody can help me.

MONICA: I think I can . . . it's in my line. You're going to have a baby.

The agonizing knowledge that she can no longer hide her guilty secret! John must never know what Monica has told her! Monica must never know who the man is . . .

Reckless—caring nothing for life without the man she loves—she laughs at danger, throws caution to the winds—But forgetfulness does not lie that way . . . she must live to drink deeper of Folly's bitter potion—

● MONICA: Don't you ever talk that way again —don't you ever dare think that way again — why you miserable little . . .

MARY: Then what's going to become of me? Put yourself in my place.

MONICA: Now listen, darling—I'll take care of you until it's all over—I know a little place in the country, where you can go—leave everything to me—

● Monica hears her patient in delirium calling for John! The realization that the man in Mary's life is Monica's trusted husband. Her friend false! Her husband unfaithful! Everything she holds dear is shattered — leaving only sharp-edged fragments of memories . . .

● Knowing the truth now — hatred for Mary burns with a consuming flame.

MONICA: Do you think I would touch her now? I'd kill her . . . it's my right!

ANNA: That woman upstairs is nothing to you but a patient . . . you're a doctor bound by oath to deliver her child . . . you must go upstairs, Monica, and do your duty—

MONICA: I am not a doctor now . . . I am a woman whose best friend betrayed her . . . I have no duty to her . . . none . . . none . . .

ANNA: You have a duty to yourself—to your profession. Do you think you could ever face your own conscience, if you let that girl die because you failed her. You are a doctor—and doctors have a mission too big to be measured by a woman's feelings. Go upstairs to your patient, Dr. Monica . . .

The woman, Monica, fights desperately against the doctor, Monica. The doctor triumphs. She will bring John's baby into the world, and lay it safely on the bosom of . . . the other woman!

"DR. MONICA" • THE STORY

● Mary's baby . . . John's! The womanly soul of Dr. Monica expands beyond the petty bounds of jealousy and resentment. This little bundle of innocence must not be made to suffer. She will love it for John's sake—and forgive its mother.

● He thinks Monica is going to Europe solely to study—but she knows that she will remain away forever, so that John may have his freedom. She loves him enough to give him up. She does not tell him that she knows about his affair with Mary. John, torn between the love of two women is in despair at the thought of Monica leaving him even for a short while. He has given Mary up for Monica's sake and is beginning to realize that it is his wife who really owns his heart. Is it too late?

10

● Mary realizes that with the baby to remind her always of John, she can never forget. There is only one way to still the storm that rages in her soul. She knows that Monica, who can never have a baby of her own, would treasure John's child—

MARY: Take the baby with this note to Dr Monica.

NURSE: How long will you be gone, ma'am?

MARY: Not too long for the baby's good—

And so—Mary solves her problem gallantly . . .

PARAMOUNT BANKRUPTCY ALMOST OVER; $1,500,000 NET IN QUARTER

Bondholders Urge Submission of a Reorganization Plan; Sir William Wiseman Leaves the Protective Committee

With earnings for the first quarter of 1934 estimated at more than $1,500,000 before interest charges, which, it is understood, will not be paid, the financial condition of Paramount Publix Corporation this week appeared to observers as approximating a status where reorganization and discharge from bankruptcy will be a matter of but a few months.

Early submission of a plan of reorganization was advocated late last week by the bondholders' protective committee, one of Paramount's principal creditor groups.

Other developments pointing to the imminence of the corporation's reorganization, included:

1. Resignation from the bondholders' protective committee of Sir William Wiseman, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., associate and former member of the Paramount board, in order that he might dissociate himself from any single group of creditors prior to the submission of a reorganization plan, which must be approved by "various classes of creditors."

2. Announcement by the bondholders' committee of the withdrawal of their $178,000,000 claim on the Paramount Building, New York, which was filed against the bankrupt estate.

3. Expectation that the total creditors' claims provable against Paramount Publix can be scaled down to between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000. Total claims aggregate $282,000,000.

4. Filing of plans for reorganization—to be heard May 21—for two Paramount Pacific Coast theatre bond issues, constituting liens on the California, San Francisco, and the Paramount, Seattle, and aggregating $1,600,000.

According to the Dow-Jones Wall Street Journal, "steady progress is being made in the preliminary steps to reorganization" of Paramount Publix. Auditors for Kuhn, Loeb & Co., representing bondholders, are now engaged in obtaining data necessary before a plan can be formulated, the Journal said. Information being gathered includes details of earning power, cash balances and liabilities of the various subsidiary companies.

While the cash on hand of operating subsidiaries and trustees totals in excess of $12,000,000, it is necessary, the financial paper said, to determine how much actually will be available to pay claims; how much must be retained for the obligations of subsidiaries and how much for essential working capital. Actual earning power of the group must also be established, with a large number of subsidiaries both in this country and abroad.

When these data are completed a plan must be prepared that will be acceptable to the various groups interested in the property; general creditors; bankers with loans totaling about $13,000,000; holders of $25,000,000 bonds of the parent company and holders of the 3,220,903 shares of stock.

The bondholders' protective committee, from which Sir William Wiseman resigned last week in order to dissociate himself from any single group of creditors prior to submission of a reorganization plan, has withdrawn its $178,000,000 claim on the Paramount Building, the claim being the largest single item in the total of more than $282,000,000 of creditors' claims against the corporation.

While the actual amount of valid claims has not been finally determined by the court, as nearly as can be estimated the real liability of the parent company totals between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000. This includes the $25,000,000 bonds, the $13,000,000 bank loans and from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000 worth of general creditors. In this latter amount is included ordinary creditors' and landlords' claims for past and future rents, which have been limited by recent court decisions.

Possible Settlement Plans

The primary problem, financial observers believe, will be to arrive at a settlement with general creditors. If claims are determined at around $12,000,000 to $15,000,000, it is considered probable that most of this amount could be met out of cash balances that will be available over the next six months since the corporation has been accumulating cash from operations for some time. Banking creditors may be induced to accept some form of short term securities for their claims or even to take convertible notes of some sort, particularly, the Wall Street Journal noted, since their position as secured creditors is being challenged by bondholders and trustees, on the basis that the transfer of films to a subsidiary as security for bank loans illegally removed assets from behind the bonds.

Bondholders presumably will be offered a new income note or preferred stock, possibly convertible, or with a bonus of common. A similar arrangement might be made with banking creditors. In view of the current substantial earning power of the corporation it appears probable that there will be considerable equity left for the common stock if a favorable reorganization can be effected.

Recent progress made in settling the affairs of theatre owning subsidiaries, notably Paramount Broadway Corp., which owns the Paramount Building in Times Square, and the pending reorganization of other properties are cited as clearing the way for work on the main problem.

The Saenger Theatres reorganization plan, ending the receivership of the southern circuit, will be completed next week, according to Paramount officials. E. V. Richards, operating head of the circuit, who will retain that post as a partner, is in New York working out details.

Pacific Coast Bond Issues

Plans of reorganization for two Paramount Pacific Coast theatre bond issues have been completed for Paramount Publix by the trustees in bankruptcy and petitions asking Federal court authorization for the plans were filed Monday with Referee Henry K. Davis. Mr. Davis set May 21 for a hearing on the plans.

The issues aggregate approximatelv $1,600,000 and constitute liens on the California, San Francisco, and the Paramount, Seattle. Under the plans filed, the Paramount trustees enter into agreement with the bondholders' protective committee for the San Francisco property and the First National Bank of Seattle, as trustee under the bond issue of the Paramount there, by which the bondholders agree to withdraw pending claims and accept bonds in an equal amount from new companies to be organized in accordance with the agreement.

$178,000,000 Claim Withdrawn on the Paramount Building; Total Creditor Claims Due To Be Cut to $50,000,000

Reorganization of the two issues was regarded as essential to the completion of a plan for settlement of Paramount Publix claims against Fox West Coast arising out of alleged non-performance of lease obligations by Fox West Coast.

Settlement of the Paramount claim of approximately $2,000,000 against FWC under an agreement which replaces defunct leases on five Pacific Coast theatres with new leases, was completed this week.

Fox West Coast Agreement

The agreement gives FWC new 10-year leases on the St. Francis, Paramount and California in San Francisco, and a 10-year Paramount pictures franchise for the houses; a new lease on the Paramount at Oakland, and the Paramount at Portland, with Paramount franchises for both houses.

On the three San Francisco theatres, Fox is to pay $114,299 in back rent to Paramount for the period from December 1, 1932 to February 28, 1933. Additional rent from that date to April 30, 1933 is to be adjusted on the basis of the net income of the houses for the period. The new 10-year leases are retroactive to May 1, 1933, and call for an average annual rental of $98,000 for the Paramount, $75,000 for the St. Francis, and $41,000 for the California. In addition, Paramount will receive 37½ per cent of the net earnings of all downtown San Francisco houses in which FWC has an interest during the period from May 1, 1933 to June 30, 1943.

A new corporation will be organized to take over all the FWC interests in downtown San Francisco theatres, including the three under lease from Paramount, to carry out this part of the agreement.

New Lease for Oakland Paramount

The landlord of the Paramount, Oakland, withdraws a claim of $2,211,500 filed against Paramount Publix for breach of lease on the house and receives, in consideration, a new lease from Fox. Title to the furnishings and equipment in the theatre is transferred to Paramount by Fox and, in accordance with the agreement, Paramount is to sell the title to Solano Theatre Corp., a FWC subsidiary, for $390,000. Fox receives a 15-year Paramount franchise for the house.

The Oakland Paramount was constructed for Paramount in 1930 and was equipped and furnished by the corporation before being sub-let to FWC. The landlord is the Broadway & Twentieth Corp., whose petition put Paramount Publix into equity receivership January 26, 1933.

Under the agreement, Fox also pays Paramount $35,030 in defaulted rent on the Paramount and Rialto, Portland, and the Paramount, Seattle. The Rialto has been repossessed by the landlord and is not included in the present agreement.

Paraport Leasing Corp., a new corporation formed to take over the Paramount at Portland, on a new lease will be 75 per cent owned by Fox, the remaining 25 per cent of the capital

CONFOUNDING CENSORS

Exhibitor Head of Review Board Finds Himself Showing for Charity Mae West Film He Had to Bar

By EARLE E. GRIGGS
Atlanta Correspondent

About a year ago Mae West's picture, "She Done Him Wrong" was banned in Atlanta by action of the Atlanta Film Board of Review.

James W. Setze, Jr., is president of the Atlanta Film Board of Review.

The Buckhead theatre is just outside the city limits of Atlanta, a deluxe theatre located in a deluxe residence section of Fulton County.

The edicts of the Atlanta Film Board of Review do not extend to the Buckhead theatre.

The foregoing recital of facts sets the stage for an unusual and mirthful situation which brought together Mae West's picture and Jimmie Setze. Mr. Setze is also chairman of the board of the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's Home, which operates the theatres of Atlanta and vicinity on Sundays, following a supreme court decree that theatres may not be operated on Sunday under the law except for charity and actually must be operated by the sponsors of the charity involved.

Mae West Comes to the Buckhead

On the very first Sunday following this court decree Mr. Setze and his committee took over the actual and physical operation of the theatres. Pictures for that showing had been scheduled days in advance by the regular bookers of the theatres.

Now, following the decree of the Atlanta Board of Film Review that the Mae West "She Done Him Wrong" was not good for the citizens of Atlanta to see on the screens of Atlanta, Willis Davis, owner and manager of the Buckhead theatre, knowing that his theatre was out of the jurisdiction of the Atlanta board, and being a good theatre man, booked it for showing at the Buckhead. It played for one week to the largest gross the theatre ever had done. This was a natural aftermath of the review board's banning of the picture, for their decree had been widely printed in all newspapers, not only of Atlanta, but over the state, and many local columnists took sly digs at the official decree. Reams of unpurchasable publicity followed the board's action.

Then the Supreme Court Acts

The Buckhead booked the picture for a second week's showing. And, at the behest of hundreds of patrons, it was brought back again and again for two-day showings. This game of off-again-on-again was played for about a year, and each subsequent run of the picture did as much business as earlier runs, until not less than 47,000 persons (some two and three times) had seen the picture, and still it had not played itself out.

Then came the supreme court decree that theatres may not be operated on Sundays unless for charity.

Whereupon Mr. Setze and his committee of Scottish Rite Hospital sponsors took over the actual physical operation of the theatres.

Then it was discovered that the Buckhead theatre unwittingly had booked "She Done Him Wrong" for the eighth two-day run and one of these days was that fateful Sunday.

Thus Mr. Setze, president of the Atlanta Board of Film Review, whose committee officially had banned the Mae West picture a year before, became the official sponsor of all pictures shown in Atlanta on Sunday by reason of his position as chairman of the Scottish Rite Hospital theatre committee, and therefore sponsor for "She Done Him Wrong" as a Sunday show.

When this ironic situation became known Mr. Setze, a likeable and cordial young man, just grinned. Come to think of it, what else could he do.

P. S.—No other Mae West picture has been banned in Atlanta.

Schlaifer Quits Sales Post with United Artists

L. J. Schlaifer, western division manager for United Artists, has resigned. Al Lichtman, general sales manager, has appointed no successor as yet. Mr. Schlaifer is expected to announce a new connection shortly.

Bernard Simon, of the home office publicity department, has resigned, as has William Sully of the studio publicity division. Mr. Sully has joined Columbia.

Morris Halpern, of Fox's home office publicity staff, will succeed Bernard Simon at United Artists. Charles Wagner of the New York Daily Mirror joins Fox in Mr. Halpern's post. C. N. O'Dell, of Fox, has joined the Paramount studio publicity department on Long Island. Jeannette Sauer replaces Mr. O'Dell at Fox.

Consolidated Film Net For Quarter Over 1933

Preliminary reports of Consolidated Film Industries for the first quarter of 1934 shows net profit of $317,781 after all charges, which compares with earnings of $265,400 for the corresponding period of 1933. A 50-cent dividend on preferred stock has been voted, payable July 2 to stockholders of record June 8.

Monogram Pays Quarterly Dividend

Monogram Pictures Corporation has paid a dividend of one and one-half per cent on its capital stock. The payment is a regular quarterly dividend declared at the annual convention in Atlantic City last month.

William Bernower Dead

William C. Bernower, 62, for many years identified with theatres in Akron, died there last week. He was leader of the pit orchestra at the Colonial for a long period.

Paramount Speeds Settlement Plans

stock being retained by Paramount. In addition, Fox gets a 10-year Paramount franchise for its Portland and Seattle houses. The Liberty at Portland also is to be controlled by the new corporation.

Canadian Note Renewal Factor

Also involved in the settlement of the Paramount claim against West Coast is a Fox agreement to renew Famous Players Canadian notes which it holds in the event a request for renewal is made by Famous on the maturity of the notes, next July 8. The notes aggregate $693,000 and represent the balance of a $1,155,000 purchase of Fox properties in Canada in 1931.

The entire settlement is contingent upon Federal court approval, which will be sought May 21 by Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake, Paramount trustees in bankruptcy. Trustee Charles E. Richardson took no part in the settlement because of his former association with Fox.

An order authorizing the Paramount trustees to proceed with the settlement of an $85,250 rent claim on the Riviera at Anderson, Ind., filed against the company by Anderson Amusement Enterprises, was signed in New York Monday by Referee Oscar W. Ehrhorn. Other minor claims set for early hearings are those of St. Louis Properties Corp., for a rent claim of $43,333 on the Missouri, St. Louis, heard May 17; Indemnity Insurance Co., $229,842, to be heard May 28; a claim of $816,666 by the Citizens' National Trust & Savings Bank, Los Angeles, on two notes of Paramount Land Corp., to be heard June 13; two additional claims by the same bank for $28,550 in connection with the Paramount property at Third and Broadways, Los Angeles, to be heard May 28, and a claim of $58,749 by the First National Bank of Boston, for the same date.

Barney Balaban on Council

Barney Balaban, Balaban & Katz head, was named to Paramount's national theatre advisory council as Chicago district representative last week by Sam Dembow, Jr., vice-president of Paramount Theatres Service Corp. John Balaban was named as an alternate.

The council, originally intended to include only six Paramount operating partners, each representing an important theatre division of the corporation, may be enlarged to include eight, Mr. Dembow said. Already elected to the council, in addition to Mr. Balaban, are N. L. Nathanson, Karl Hoblitzelle, E. V. Richards and A. H. Blank.

Appointed this week were M. J. Mullin and M. E. Comerford to represent New England and Middle Atlantic States partners, respectively. Alternates are Sam Pinanski, for Mr. Mullin, and M. B. Comerford for M. E. Comerford.

Decrying what he termed "unwarranted criticism" of Emanuel Cohen, Paramount production head, Adolph Zukor arrived in Hollywood Sunday and attributed the situation to Mr. Cohen's refusal to "play Hollywood politics."

"It takes years to become familiar with all angles of production," Mr. Zukor said. "Mr. Cohen has been in charge of production for only two years and for that reason he should receive all possible support and cooperation instead of opposition. And I am going to see he gets it."

Trans-Lux in RKO Building

Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corporation has taken space on the 21st floor of the RKO Building in Radio City, New York. The new quarters will be used for executive and sales departments and for equipment demonstration offices.

MILLION SAVING A YEAR CLAIMED FOR RADIO FILMS BY PRE-EDITING

Studio's Planned Production, Started by David Selznick, Blossoms under Merian Cooper to $25,000 Saved on a Picture

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Representative

With the hue and cry for quality films at reasonable negative cost constantly in the air, significant it is that at least one studio, with a prime purpose to accomplish just that, has gone in for "Planned Production" in a big way.

Quietly, under David Selznick, Radio carried forth experiments with this revolutionary idea. After the chrysalis stage, "Planned Production" sprang to full bloom under the aegis of Merian Cooper.

It's Pre-editing

In a word, "Planned Production" is pre-editing, and is no longer considered an experiment by Radio. Pre-editing starts after a script has been whipped into shape by writer, director and producer, and is on paper. Before a shot is fired by the camera, the production is charted, graphed and battled out on paper, as an architect blueprints a skyscraper or a general staff plots an objective.

Pre-editing attempts to assure inclusion of all the showmanship stuff of the story in the finished film. It aims to eliminate overshooting or undershooting. It purports to minimize "retakes," "added scenes" and extension of shooting schedules. It permits checking charted plan with daily rushes. It uses red and green signals to avoid production traffic jams.

Here is how the innovation works at Radio Studio.

The first draft script goes into the consulting room for analysis and X-ray. First the scenario is divided as to dialogue and action. Exact shooting time is then measured for speeches and the same is done for action. A metronome is used to gauge dialogue. Facts of ear and eye fatigue decide length of scenes and sequences.

Tempo playing its part in footage, a yardstick of one of five different tempos is applied for slow society drama, American drama, comedy drama, broad comedy, farce comedy.

Then Studied for Balance

After approximate footage is computed for dialogue and action in definite tempo, the script is X-rayed scene by scene, to see if all box-office values are included and are in balance.

Plot, drama, romance, comedy, thrill, suspense, and so on, are all lined up and timed, to see if all show elements are spaced and spotted for length and strength in accord with intent of writer, director and producer.

After the first diagnosis, with scene footage and showmanship highlights timed and measured, the charts usually shuttle back and forth from production office to chart headquarters, with changes in script and graphs made between trips.

When the script has been okayed by the associate producer and the pre-editing department, it goes to the executive producer for final appraisal, with the production staff ready to shoot.

In the meantime, all other costs have been computed, sequence by sequence. Footage being known, each scene having been clocked, the time span of personal services of actor and actress easily is arrived at for action by the casting department.

Budgets are set up for sets outdoor and in; negative film allowance stipulated usually runs to 60,000 feet for a 7,500-foot feature. The casting budget, depending on drawing power of personalities, is decided by the production staff exclusively.

Each Day's Rushes Checked

As filming progresses, each day's rushes are checked against the plant chart for footage length, box-office values and tempo. When danger lines appear, chart markings notify all concerned.

The procedure also calls for editing the production in step with shooting.

Since pre-editing has been in operation, most productions have come in under the wire about 500 feet above or below chart. One particularly successful picture was only 100 feet over the charted footage, a record.

Pre-editing was applied in the "Planned Productions" of "King Kong," "Little Women," "Double Harness" and "Flying Down to Rio," and their negative costs were surprisingly low.

Creative workers at one time marshalled opposition against the plan. One producer, after saying the "Plan Idea" stifled his artistry and imagination, resigned from the studio and sold his services to another studio, using the "Planned Production" concept as his persuader. He got the job.

Another director, at first vehement against the charts after making two pictures, now says he wouldn't make a picture without pre-editing as his friendly guide.

The studio points out that since the "Blue Print Plan" has been in vogue, savings of between $25,000 and $35,000 have been effected on each production released and, according to executives, without sacrifice of quality. On the basis of forty pictures a year, Radio has saved about a million dollars in the twelve months by "Planned Production."

The creator of the idea is a former industrial engineer from New York, Merian Abbott. Known to few of the Hollywood colony, except perhaps as myth or legend, Mr. Abbott, a man in his forties and looking like an ex-football star, shuns the spotlight.

For one year before he put pen to paper, in conceiving his plan, built on engineering principles, Mr. Abbott went from stage to stage, gathering facts from grips, props, juicers, cameraman, directors, assistants, producers, writers, and others.

Mexico Prefers Motion Pictures

By JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Of the 21,167,245 tickets sold last year for a total of 8,803,525.88 pesos (approximately $2,500,000, U. S.) by public diversions in the federal district, which includes Mexico City and has a population of about 1,300,000, 18,123,748 were vended by the cinemas at an aggregate intake of 5,623,-416.93 pesos, reports the department of national statistics.

Local picture houses gave 20,061 performances in 1933, and 48 cinemas functioned here in 1933. Runner up in public amusement favor last year were the 11 legitimate theatres which gave 4,025 performances for which 1,866,250 tickets were sold for 1,471,-560.21 pesos. Only 393,215 tickets were sold for 817,739.41 pesos for 97 functions at the three bullfight arenas in 1933.

Mexico wants films and more of them. That is proved by the fact that the Iris theatre, one of the largest local playhouses, is being wired for sound and will soon be inaugurated as a first run cinema. The first talking pictures exhibited in Mexico were shown at this theatre in 1929. After that, it returned to stage shows, but with indifferent results. The Iris going cinema gives Mexico City 49 film houses. It is reported that the Politeama theatre, a burlesque bulwark, is soon to be wired for screen performances exclusively.

A general movement by governmental agencies to prevent further alleged defamation of Mexico, its people and customs, has been launched in Mexico City, according to dispatches to the New York Herald-Tribune on Wednesday. In the past American motion pictures were said to have been the principle offenders along these lines. The New York newspaper's correspondent reported a bill is now being prepared by the Ministry of Interior designed to control "rigorously the production and distribution of motion pictures which might in any way give offense to the Mexican people."

Midwest SMPE Hears Talk on Education Films

The Midwest Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was to hold an open meeting at the University of Chicago this week, on "The Use of Sound Motion Pictures in Educational Work." Professor Harvey B. Lemon was to discuss the subject. Two new reels selected from the physics lectures of the university were to be projected. They are "Sound Waves and Their Sources," and "Fundamentals of Acoustics."

Eastman Stock on $4 Basis

Eastman Kodak common stock went on a $4 annual basis last week with the announcement of a quarterly dividend of $1 per share.

PATMAN IN ERROR ON 23 COUNTS, SAYS PETTIJOHN

Counsel for M.P.P.D.A. in Brief Says Proposed Censor Bills Would Destroy Initiative and Self Restraint in the Industry

The film industry last week massed opposition to the Patman censorship measures, recently introduced in the House at Washington by the Texas Representative, with a voluminous brief filed by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., setting forth 23 specific reasons why the Patman bill should not become law.

Emphasized was the protest that the Patman bill would destroy initiative and self-restraint within the industry and demolish the machinery already built up for concurrent development of higher standards of taste and production, and at the same time would forestall further growth of a sense of responsibility of the public.

Other objections set forth in the brief hold that the Patman bill:

1. Repudiates the NRA and creates a conflict of authority. Ninety-five per cent of the motion picture industry has already signed the NRA code.

2. Does not, as is claimed, "prevent the necessity of State censorship," nor does it eliminate "forty-eight standards for motion pictures." It abolishes none of the six existing State censor boards nor can it prevent the creation of 42 additional boards should the remaining states see fit to establish them.

3. Trebles censorship by adding Federal supervision, both before and after production, to existing state and municipal censorship.

4. Establishes a national censorship identical in principle with European political controls which prescribe in advance what news may be printed and what films produced.

5. It is confiscatory. No limits are placed on the expenditures of the Commission. The fees stipulated in the present bill would amount to more than $8,000,000 annually. The cost of the Commission must be borne by the industry in addition to the cost of the existing Motion Picture Code Authority, and the state and municipal censor boards.

6. It is discriminatory. By far the greater part of the motion pictures shown in this country are produced in California. Some are produced in New York State. All films produced in those states could be shown there without reference to the Commission.

7. It is unenforceable. It would require constant federal supervision of 15,000 theatres.

8. It invites evasion by placing a premium on indecent and salacious films. Passage would result in the appearance of bootleg product which neither the Commission nor the industry could control.

9. It is impracticable. It would be a physical impossibility, for example, to control all advertising used in connection with motion pictures.

10. It is a paternalistic measure whereby the Federal Government assumes entire responsibility for the nation's screen morals.

11. It automatically imposes class standards upon a mass audience. The futility of attempting to legislate morality has been abundantly demonstrated. Good taste in motion picture entertainment is a matter of education.

12. It gives the Commission authority over news reels that is tantamount to the censorship of a pictorial press seen by some 60,000,000 persons weekly.

13. It is unconstitutional in depriving citizens of their property without due process of law.

14. It violates the fundamental principle of American jurisprudence which assumes innocence until guilt has been established. Federal legislation already exists penalizing interstate commerce in obscene motion pictures.

15. It is an old bill in new disguise. Congress and public opinion have already rejected the proposal.

16. It puts politics into the motion picture industry and the industry into politics.

17. It creates confusion and disorder within the industry, and opens the way to extensive and unnecessary litigation.

18. It requires the proposed commission to find something to eliminate from scenario or film to justify its official existence.

19. It is wholly negative. It destroys but it does not create. It contributes nothing toward the content of motion pictures or the development of the cinema art.

20. It is wasteful. Detailed supervision and cataloguing of a great majority of motion picture films serves no useful purpose.

21. It rests upon a false conception of the effect of human and especially juvenile behavior. The data upon which it is based are not accepted by qualified and disinterested social scientists.

22. It does not have sanction of the majority, the theatre-going public.

"The measure proposes to set up a non-professional and semi-political oligarchy to regiment not only the output of the motion picture industry, but the cinema tastes of its patrons as well," said the brief. "It aims, in a word, to supplant self-discipline within the industry by autocratic control from without and to establish a moral dictatorship over the sixty million attending theatre patrons at the behest of an abstaining minority."

Section 10 of the bill provides for maintenance of the Commission and fixes a fee of $10 for each 1,000 feet, or fraction thereof, of film, and $5 each for each additional copy inspected by the Commission.

Fees Would Exceed $8,000,000

In 1933, 520 feature pictures were released. These averaged eight 1,000-foot reels each. Between 150 and 250 prints—positive copies for theatre use—were used for each feature in the United States, an average of 200. Under this bill, at $5 per reel, the cost to the industry would be $40 per print, or, for the necessary 200, $8,000 per feature for prints alone. Cost for the original studio negative at $10 per reel would equal $80, or, altogether, $8,080 per picture. Thus, on the basis of 520 features multiplied by $8,080, the Commission's fee for censoring pictures would amount to $4,201,600.

The number of reels of short subjects, including newsreels, travelogues, comedies, cartoons, etc. manufactured each year exceeds the number of reels used in feature pictures, but figuring them at the same amount would indicate a grand annual total for censoring under this bill of $8,403,200—plus.

The five newsreels—Pathe, Paramount, Fox, Hearst-Metro, and Universal—issue each week a total in excess of 2,500 reels. On this basis, the minimum contribution of each newsreel company toward the maintenance of the Commission would be at least $130,000 annually, according to the brief.

"A toll in excess of $8,000,000 a year, reflected in production costs, would directly affect every theatre and every theatre patron in the United States," the brief declared.

For the benefit of the nation's legislators the brief then goes into a resume of the work of the MPPDA during the 12 years since its organization in 1922. Outstanding is the explanation of the production codes of 1927 and 1930 as adopted by the major producing companies for the purpose of "self-discipline within the mold of good taste."

According to the brief, the following table of operations since 1930, under the Production Code of Ethics, illustrates the thoroughness and fidelity with which the product of the screen is being exposed to the social illumination of the code:

1931	Features	Short Subjects	Total
Scripts, books and synopses read	527	260	787
Conferences on scripts, books, etc.	959	522	1481
Pictures reviewed	363	370	733
Written opinions sent	446	381	827

1932	Features	Short Subjects	Total
Scripts, books and synopses read	654	272	926
Conferences on scripts, books, etc.	703	386	1089
Pictures reviewed	401	294	695
Written opinions sent	1107	395	1502

1933	Features	Short Subjects	Total
Scripts, books and synopses read	564	293	857
Conferences on scripts, books, etc.	629	490	1119
Pictures reviewed	380	168	548
Written opinions sent	1073	478	1551

Approximately 160 story proposals were rejected by the producers in 1933 on the advice of the studio relations committee, and nearly 100 more on the advice of the Title Registration Bureau in New York, it was pointed out. These figures indicate only those instances in which rejection resulted from formal conference with the association's staff members.

Says There'd Be No Protection

Touching on proposed censorship of newsreels under the Patman bill, the brief charges that H. R. 6097 proposes to vest autocratic control of the newsreels in a politically appointed Commission, with but one safeguard provided against abuse of this power being contained in the bill's provision which states that "the Commission shall formulate rules and regulations for the prompt showing without inspection of current events or newsreels by persons duly bonded not to violate any of the provisions of this Act."

"It is obvious," the brief asserted, "that this clause provides no protection whatever. The formation of rules and regulations is left entirely in the Commission's hands."

The brief also contained editorials from some 40 daily newspapers favorable to the industry in regard to the aspects of the Patman bill. Testimonials from leading sociologists were also included.

Sweet dreams, Leo! The Anniversary is over but the memory lingers on. Bright years studded with achievement! From "Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur" you set the pace for others to follow. You've had your "Trader Horns" "Broadway Melodies" "Tugboat Annies" all through the years . . . we could mention a hundred of them. And right now while the folks are cheering you and the Missus, the trade paper headlines are shrieking "Riptide" "Men in White" "Viva Villa!" "Tarzan and his Mate." Then you top them off with "Sadie McKee" "The Thin Man" and a flock more! Okay, kid, march on with your starry banners flowing! There's ten thousand exhibitors marching with you into happy years ahead!

SOMETHING NEW FROM HAROLD LLOYD
SINGLE BILL PLEDGES ARE CIRCULATED
TEN FILMS COMPLETED, EIGHT STARTING

GANGSTER pictures being taboo in Hollywood, murder mystery melodramas now hold the center of the stage.

Listed herewith are the current and coming crime pictures, which imposing array brings to mind the newspaper truism that mass interest centers around the four front-page "C's", including Coin, Corruption and Crime.

Judged by numbers alone, the most popular of these "C's" is "Crime," according to the following tabulation of productions from all studios:

"Doomed to Die" (Universal).
"Double Door" (Paramount).
"Murder in the Studio" (Columbia).
"Dark Tower" (Warner).
"Murder in Trinidad" (Fox).
"Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back" (20th Century).
"Murder on the Blackboard" (Radio).
"Murder at the Vanities" (Paramount).
"Murder on the Campus" (Chesterfield).
"Railroad Detective" (Columbia).
"British Agent" (Warner).

Any Harold Lloyd Production is an event of importance to showmen.

His forthcoming picture, "The Cats Paw," first since "Movie Crazy," released two years ago, will be a complete departure from anything the comedian has done heretofore.

This time, Lloyd's film is adapted from a published story. All vehicles prior have been originals. "The Cats Paw," by Clarence Buddington Kelland, received first run printing in a national magazine and is now in novel form.

Radical also is the treatment of the picture. Instead of using gag comedy, "The Cats Paw" emerges a comedy drama, characterization playing a big part. Lloyd no longer plays the shy youngster, typical of "Grandma's Boy." In this, he is grown-up, a schorlarly youth of twenty-seven. The story is of an American lad, born and reared in China, who returns to America, and not understanding American manners and psychology, applies Chinese philosophy to a political squabble of which he is the storm center. He speaks Chinese in the picture; Mandarin for foreign prints; Cantonese in the American version. He also sings with a Chinese quartet.

In "Cats Paw" Lloyd does not carry the comedy burden alone. He has surrounded himself with name comedians, among whom are Una Merkel, Grace Bradley, Nat Pendletin, George Barbier, Alan Dinehart, Grant Mitchell, J. Farrell MacDonald, Frank Sheridan, Vince Barnett, Fuzzy Knight, James Donlan and Edwin Maxwell.

Sam Taylor, responsible for some of Lloyd's biggest successes, also directed his newest.

If the comedian is able to overcome the "time-outs" imposed by illness, which held up production, he hopes to have his film ready for showing at the Fox convention in June. After that, it will be launched in typical Lloyd manner with original exploitation campaigns in key spots.

News Flashes

Major John Zanft has joined in partnership with Sol Lesser for the production of six George O'Brien features to be released through Fox. Mr. Lesser's present program calls for eight pictures, but may be raised to twelve if he can negotiate a release for the additional pictures through Fox or some other major distributor. In this event he will acquire the lease of Sennett studios.

Warner is now working on a Russian story based on an idea obtained by Paul Muni on his recent trip to that country. Muni will be starred.

Edward G. Robinson's new contract with Warner permits him to make one outside picture yearly. The first outsider will be "Four Walls" for MGM.

* * *

The committee appointed to work out a plan for abolishing double featuring in Los Angeles is now circulating pledges among the independent exhibitors, which cards will be placed in the lap of Charles Skouras on his return here. It is believed that if ninety per cent of the independents pledge to run single bills, Fox West Coast will join the parade and make it unanimous.

IRVIN COBB FINDS JOKE'S ON HIMSELF

Making his debut as a Hollywood screen actor, Irvin Cobb, famed humorist and writer, decided that he should have a business manager. So he went to his boss, Hal Roach, the producer.

E. F. Hutton, multimillionaire broker and close friend of Mr. Roach, was visiting at the studio and Roach, somewhat of a ribber himself, decided to have some fun. Rehearsing the financier in the part, Roach introduced Hutton to Cobb as an experienced bookkeeper looking for a job.

The noted humorist lost no time in questioning the hopeful applicant, with Roach sitting on the sidelines. The interview continued for at least five minutes before both Hutton and Roach burst out laughing as Cobb inquired of the applicant if he needed a few dollars to tide him over until his first payday.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of twelve key cities during the Lenten period from February 24 to March 31, 1934, with the receipts for the same cities during the period from April 7 to May 5. The black bar indicates the average weekly gross during the more recent period. The shaded bar indicates the average weekly business during the period of Lent.

CENSORSHIP FORCED UPON ARGENTINIANS

Exhibitors Have No Voice in New Board and Producers and Distributors Have Only One Member of the Eight

By N. BRUSSI

Buenos Aires Correspondent

As if the critical situation through which the show business in this country is actually passing were not enough, official action, far from collaborating in the solution of its numerous problems, is only placing more obstacles in the path of its development and increasing the difficulties of the distributors and exhibitors.

After quite a number of years in which we did not have film censorship—only a sort of honorary commission whose activities never caused anxiety to the showmen, as they always maintained themselves within a frame of moderation and circumspection in their duty—the Deliberative Council of the Municipality, yielding to the constant pressure of false moralists, has finally created an entity under the pompous name of "Assessoring Commission of Cinematographic Control," not taking into consideration the fundamental principles of the Argentine Constitution, whose liberal and democratic spirit is in direct opposition to these proceedings, should they be against the freedom of word, press or any other manifestation of thought.

The decree, which carries the number 5439, reads as follows:

Article 1. Create an Honorary Commission of Cinematographic Control, destined to cooperate with the General Inspection of Spectacles in the approval of the films to be exhibited in public theatres.

Article 2. Said commission shall be presided over by a member elected by a simple majority of votes and will be composed by

(a) The General Inspector of Spectacles, who will be his secretary.
(b) One representative of the National Department of Hygiene.
(c) A representative of the Board of Health.
(d) Two representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Public Instruction.
(e) Two representatives of the National Board of Education.
(f) One representative of the producers or distributors of films.

Article 3. This commission will classify the films in the follow way:

(1) Familiar shows, specially destined for children.
(2) Shows for elders, to which minors under 16 years shall not be admitted.
(3) Films of scientific character for students, professionals and elders.
(4) Films not fit to be exhibited.

As may be observed, this commission will have only one representative of producers or distributors, whose vote, as easily can be understood, will have practically no value, as his interest will almost always be at outs with those of the rest of the commission.

As far as the exhibitors are concerned, they have been entirely excluded, though they are the link that joins the public with the whole business.

Ten Completed in Week

Ten pictures were completed in the past week with no letdown evident in production activity, as eight new pictures went before the cameras. Three were finished at Warner, two each at Universal and Radio. Columbia, Fox and Paramount were responsible for one apiece.

Of the new ones, Paramount has two, the others coming from Warner, Universal, Columbia, Small Productions, Monogram and MGM.

The three new Warners include "Housewife," a domestic drama, with Bette Davis, George Brent and Ann Dvorak; "Hey, Sailor," a comedy featuring James Cagney, Pat O'Brien and Gloria Stuart; and "Madame Du Barry," a historical romance with Dolores Del Rio, Reginald Owen, Veree Teasdale and many others.

Universal's new two are "Let Talk It Over," a comedy with Chester Morris and Mae Clarke, and "I Give My Love," romantic drama, featuring Wynne Gibson and Paul Lukas.

Radio's "Down to Their Last Yacht," musical comedy, girl glamour spectacle, teams Mary Boland and Polly Moran and features Sidney Blackmer, Sydney Fox, Ned Sparks and Sterling Holloway. "Vergie Winters" offers Ann Harding and John Boles in leads.

Columbia's new picture is "Special Agent," starring Tim McCoy and Shirley Grey in an action romance drama. Fox completed "Grand Canary" with John Boles, Marjorie Rambeau and Zita Johann as its headliners. Paramount's "Shoot the Works," a comedy with Jack Oakie, Dorothy Dell and Roscoe Karns, winds up the list of completed pictures.

Paramount Starts Two

Paramount leads the new starting list with two. They are "You Belong to Me," with Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple and Guy Standing; and "The Notorious Sophie Lang," which stars Alison Skipworth.

Warner's new number is "Kansas City Princess," featuring Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell and Hugh Herbert. Universal started "One More River," with Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton and Colin Clive. Columbia's new picture, "The Defense Rests," features Jack Holt and Jean Arthur.

At MGM "The Rear Car," a comedy mystery, started with Una Merkel, Charles Butterworth and Mary Carlisle heading the cast. Monogram began a western, "The Lone Packer," and Edward Small Productions started its United Artists release, "The Count of Monte Cristo," from the Dumas novel, in which Robert Donat and Elissa Landi head a large cast.

ASKS STRONG NAMES

DEMANDS REAL BOX OFFICE NAMES

To the Editor of the Herald:

The new buying season is at hand. There have been few real box office attractions this year and the ballyhoo that went with some of the stupendous productions fell flat and left every exhibitor who was oversold gasping for breath. It is with a very uncertain feeling that we approach the new season.

I offer a suggestion for governing future picture making. We human beings cannot stand too much prosperity, unless we actually earn that prosperity. It seems that a great many players of the films have fallen heir to a great deal of unearned prosperity. In the rapid development of pictures the past year the industry has acquired too many names. These names are set out in the announcements as stars and the word "star" is just like water on a duck's back. The names just do not mean a thing, and this condition is getting worse every day.

The wise ones of production thought they discovered a quick way to stardom and in the rush they have created more than the industry will assimilate. The big shots of the production end must make arrangements to go back to the old star system and create stars that are stars and not the nonentities that we are now putting out in front for no good reason other than forced publicity created stars. It is possible right now to select 100 star names, names that are going up in the big lights, that have positively no talent, and they think they are getting by, and possibly they are getting by with murder, but they are not building any future for themselves, and one by one they are falling by the wayside and more nonentity names are gaining places in the sun.

Prospective patrons are looking for someing in the pictures to sell them the urge to attend the movie theatre, and in the old days, you or most of you will remember, this was accomplished through star names, Doug Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, actual stars that meant big business with a satisfied following. We have glided away from this and have exhausted every title book and play, and there is nothing else left but to start over and actually develop real box office names. In order to do this the producers must first of all clean house of a million leeches that this industry has carried as excess baggage. They will have to drop the surnames of super this and super that, and get right down to brass tacks. It makes you dizzy to try to select a picture for Sunday opening in the small town. There are a million pictures available and not one that you are sold on. Let's make fewer pictures and what we do make, be sure that they will command the business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind.

CALLS ASSESSMENT FOR CODE UNFAIR

To the Editor of the Herald:

The Code Authority's allocation of assessments to theatres is, in my opinion, the first step taken to aid the theatres in the large situations. That is all very well, but just who is going to have to pay for all of this key situation assistance? Why, naturally, the very small theatres. In as few words as possible, I am going to try to point out how very unfair this is.

These large theatres are open to potential customers, approximately 12 hours a day, where my theatre, for example, is really open for business one hour per day. At the same time, the boys operating the very largest situation covered by the code pay only eight times as much as I do for the Code upkeep. Their drawing possibility is hundreds of times greater than mine, and they have the opportunity of using the Code one hundred times to my once.

There is one theatre, for example, that averages $70,000 to $100,000 per week; at the same time, I consider myself very fortunate to do $75 to $100 per week, and yet, this pays $48 for the Code upkeep, just eight times as much as I do.

Naturally, my ratings puts me in the very lowest class allocation, A-2. That $6.00 means as much to me as $600.00 would mean to some of the large affiliated theatres in the key cities. Unless there are some drastic measures taken, I will no doubt have to continue to pay the $12 per year, and like it.

There are many sides of this, so I would like to hear from some of the other smaller exhibitors, and larger one as well, in regard to their feelings toward the Code Authorities, after their putting something over on us like this.

If I am wrong, I will cheerfully admit same, and sit back quietly, and pay my dues, like a good little boy.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.

Crawford, Durante Contracts Extended

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has exercised its options on Joan Crawford and Jimmie Durante, renewing their contracts for another year. Warner Files St. Louis Suits

The filing of three suits for a total of $105,864, plus interest, in the United States district court in St. Louis, by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and Warner Brothers Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary, against the St. Louis Amusement Company, operators of a local chain of neighborhood and suburban houses, is pointed out as further indication of the struggle that is under way by various interests to dominate the local situation.

Warner in the fall of 1928 acquired control of about 93 per cent of the outstanding stock of the St. Louis Amusement Company when they bought Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., from Spyros, Charles and George Skouras, and through purchases of its stock, but when Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., was thrown into bankruptcy some weeks ago Warner became minority stockholder in the neighborhood circuit organization, as the control of 51 per cent of the St. Louis Amusement Company stock was tied up in the bankruptcy proceedings.

In one suit it is alleged that Warner paid bills and payrolls for the amusement company totaling $9,264 between November 15 and November 28, 1931, and that $8,945 of this amount is still due. In another action the charge is made that Warner advanced $47,499 to the local circuit between August 16, 1930, and March 31, 1934, and that $46,919 of this amount is still due.

The third suit brought on a note of April 9, 1930, for $30,000, and a second note for $20,000 dated April 28, 1930, seeks interest at six per cent. The same rate of interest is asked on the $8,945 action, while in the suit for $46,919 interest amounting to $6,055 is asked. The suit for $8,945 was brought in the name of Warner Brothers Theatres, Inc., and the others by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.

Franklin, Selwyn Join Cochran in Stage Plan

MGM-Cosmopolitan

This is a story of love and adventure told against the spectacular military and political background of the Civil War. The original historical drama was written by Robert W. Chambers, appearing in Cosmopolitan Magazine and many newspapers. The screen play is by Harvey Thew, whose work on "Silver Dollar" is indicative of his ability with historical material; Zelda Sears, scenarist of many important MGM productions, and Eve Greene, who has often collaborated with Miss Sears. Richard Boleslavsky, who recently completed "Men In White," is the director.

Marion Davies and Gary Cooper are teamed in the leads. The supporting cast is composed entirely of known screen personalities, such as Jean Parker, recently in "Lazy River" and "Little Women"; Katherine Alexander, who appeared in "Should Ladies Behave" and "Death Takes A Holiday"; Ted Healy, Russell Hardie, Douglas Dumbrille, Willard Robertson, Fuzzy Knight, Sidney Toler, Robert McWade, Marjorie Gateson, Wate Boteler and Walter Lang, and the Four Mills Brothers featured.

In the story Miss Davies is a Northern spy, who loses her heart to Cooper, a Southern officer. As the thrill of war is presented by symbol, marching armies and roaring guns, skirmishes endow the picture with action thrill that accentuates the girl's danger as she endeavors to serve her country and both deceive and protect the man she loves. Produced on a spectacular scale, with a technique that accurately mirrors the hatred and loves of its occasion, it appears to be both an unusual showmanship and entertainment feature. In authorship credits as well as cast, story and production values, it presages an attraction which will give aggressive showmen many opportunities for "big" campaigns.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD

Radio

Murder mystery, peppered with dashes of vivid comedy, is the showmanship essence of this story. Based on a novel by Stuart Palmer, it was adapted by Willis Goldbeck, who did "Penguin Pool Murder." Direction is by George Archainbaud, who also handled that picture as well as many other mystery thrillers.

The cast features the pair who solved the "Penguin Pool Murder," and Edna May Oliver in similar roles. In the support are Bruce Cabot, now in "Finishing School," Gertrude Michael, currently appearing in "Murder at the Vanities"; Regis Toomey, Edgar Kennedy, Tully Marshall, Jackie Searle, Frederick Vogedin, Barbara Fritchie and Gustav von Seyffertitz.

The murder takes place in a school room. Musical notes on a scale written on the blackboard (an adaptable exploitation gag) give Miss Oliver a clue. Gleason and his dumb aide, Kennedy, are called in to ferret out the crime. Four are suspects—Gertrude Michael, Cabot, Vogedin, the janitor, and Marshall. As comedy situations interlude, the hunt goes on with feverish intensity, baffling the actual and would-be sleuths. The climax, absolutely impossible to anticipate, is a surprise that is the outstanding selling feature of the story.

The production itself, supported of course by the cast names, and references to "Penguin Pool Murder" to identify the comedy character, suggests the type of showmanship.

OUR DAILY BREAD

Viking-King Vidor-United Artists

In producing this story, King Vidor, maker of "The Big Parade," "The Crowd," "Hallelujah" and many other notable pictures, is attempting an unusual entertainment picture. Besides acting entirely on his own from a financial standpoint, Vidor both wrote the original story and is directing it.

The story is a topical dramatization of modern times, life and conditions. In a direct way, it dramatically and romantically picturizes the philosophy of the New Deal. Basically it treats of the agricultural situation as it is today, given a topical atmosphere that capitalizes on the drama of current headlines and reflects the influence of government, politics, unemployment, communism and the human aspirations of the great masses of people who are struggling to rehabilitate themselves, their fortunes and destiny by making the earth produce.

The thread of the story is carried by five principals: Karen Morley, Tom Keene, John T. Qualen, Barbara Pepper and Addision Richards. In addition, a supporting cast of nearly two score character artists aid in interpreting the story.

As dramatic realism colors the story, and it is a farm story, it is not a "rural" within the general understanding of that term. It concerns city folk, factory workers, while collar people, etc., who, victims of economic conditions, band together under the leadership of Miss Morley and Keene to effect a "back to the farm" experiment in a manner that has been suggested by sociologists, government officials and other leaders for years.

As a combination of entertainment, education and topical propaganda, it undoubtedly will prove a subject of considerable news interest—a quality making its exhibition a matter of specialized local and neighborhood showmanship.

TREASURE ISLAND

MGM

This is Robert Louis Stevenson's classic which for half a century has fired the imagination of the millions of persons who have read the more than 2,000,000 printed copies of the thrilling adventure of pirates, the Spanish Main, buried treasure, sailing ships, fighting men and the open sea. Anyone who has read the book knows that it's romantic adventure, teeming with thrills, brimming over with the pathos of human interest and sparkling with comedy. It was adapted to screen entertainment by John L. Mahin, whose accomplishments with "Bombshell," "Prizefighter And Lady," "Eskimo" and "Hell Below" attest his ability. Victor Fleming, who made "Red Dust," "The White Sister" and "Bombshell," is the director.

The fact that Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper are teamed in the leads is all that is necessary to indicate the showmanship possibilities of the cast. And to those names are added Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Lewis Stone, Nigel Bruce, Chic Sale, Richard Bennett, Douglas Dumbrille, Dorothy Peterson, Little Cora Sue Collins, and a host of other familiar personalities.

Familiarity of the original story makes unnecessary any outline. That it is an approved literary classic indicates that from a juvenile angle it should have the endorsed cooperation of schools, libraries, and most important of all, the parents. For the adults, it's an invitation to live again the exciting days of imaginative youth. In every way, from the creation of unique exploitation gags to the preparation of personal advertising copy, it's a story affording endless possibilities for ingenious, spectacular showmanship opportunities, which because of lack of incentive have long been dormant.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT

Radio - Lou Brock

Here are comedy and music; novel, colorful eye-spectacle; girls, dancing, glamor; real story value, elaborate production sets—all characteristic of previous Lou Brock pictures, 'So This Is Harris" and "Flying Down to Rio"; but all presented in a radically different and a far more spectacular atmosphere.

Seconding those assets are the cast names. Mary Boland and Polly Moran, her first picture in months, are teamed in the leads. Sidney Blackmer, star of "This Man Is Mine," has the romantic lead. Sidney Fox, long absent from the screen, is back. Ned Sparks and Sterling Hollaway have important parts. Such names as Marjorie Gateson, Irene Franklin, GiGi Parrish, Tom Kennedy, Maurice Black and Harry Semels appear in supporting roles. All this affords plenty of material for those who must have names to sell.

FUNNY THING CALLED LOVE

Universal-B. F. Zeidman

This story offers the showmanship elements of the comedy of sailors on the loose, poor boy-rich girl romance and character drama. The yarn is an original by Dore Schary, author of "He Couldn't Take It," and Lewis Foster, collaborating scenarist on "Eight Girls in a Boat." The screen play is the initial effort of John Meehan, Jr., son of the MGM writer. Direction is by Kurt Neumann, who handled Chester Morris in his last picture, "King For A Night," and also did "The Big Cage," "Secrets Of The Blue Room" and the recently completed "Half A Sinner."

While familiar names predominate in the cast, several new personalities are introduced. Chester Morris and Mae Clarke, recently in "Nana," have the leads. Morris' gob pals are the squeaky voiced Andy Devine and the stage recruit, Russ Brown, who previously appeared in "Moulin Rouge." Frank Craven, noted stage star, author of "First Year" and "Melody In Spring," has an important role and others who will be seen are: John Warburton, lately in "Charlie Chan's Greatest Case" and "Secrets Of The French Police"; Goodee Montgomery, daughter of the famous Dave Montgomery of Montgomery and Stone; Irene Ware, who appeared in "Loves Of Cellini" and "Orient Express," and several Universal girl juveniles.

Beginning as a riotous comedy, the story veers to romance and is climaxed with light drama, in which the original comedy atmosphere never is lost sight of. Modern, colorful, localed in Newport and New York, production values being influential in reflecting the appeal of the yarn, the idea implied in the title, backed up by the cast name values, suggests light, frothy showmanship directed at the masses.

"UNDERWORLD"

BEN HECHT and CHARLES MacARTHUR

writers and producers

Hecht and MacArthur are two of the day's most gifted and successful writers of stage and screen plays. Ben Hecht has authored such hits as "Viva Villa", "Underworld", "Scarface", "Topaze", "Design for Living". Charles MacArthur has written such film successes as "Get - Rich - Quick Wallingford", "Paid", "Sin of Madelon Claudet", "Rasputin". Together they have written such stage and screen smashes as "Front Page" and "Twentieth Century".

Merry Wives of Reno

(Warner)

Comedy

Comedy is the showmanship element of this show. For any purpose, in any theatre, it's just a load of laughs. There's not much rhyme or reason to the story. It simply combines hokum and slapstick, with gags, situations and specialties yanked in by the tail to create an entertainment atmosphere that is directly in line with the title tone.

It moves fast. Clocking the laughs is a man-sized job for anyone. When one hilarious situation is milked to the limit, it merely moves on to another, and while a certain semblance of continuity is preserved, quick advantage is taken of odd twists to create more fun.

Three married couples are concerned. Madge and Frank are a pair of blissful newlyweds; the others are pairs of old stagers who have been through the mill, and none of them has any illusions about the others. Through a mix-up in overcoats, the fires of domestic jealousy are kindled and the whole kit and kaboodle embark for Reno. What has been fun thus far becomes riotous farce in the hotel as husbands try to explain; Captain Fitch drags in his pet sheep; the old Trapper makes his appearance, and the hotel is turned into bedlam, scenes to which bell-boy Al contributes gayly. In the end the suspicious wives have the tables turned on them, but a gift of fur coats ends everything happily for everyone.

This is a show that can be labeled an all-laugh attraction. With the title serving as an identifying tipoff, use Margaret Lindsay and Donald Woods for romantic appeal, and promise Kibbee, Glenda Farrell, Herbert, McHugh, Ates, Ruth Donnelly and Cavanaugh, all well-known as comedians, in a carnival of fun.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner. Story and screen play by Robert Lord. Additional dialogue by Joe Traub. Director, H. Bruce Humberstone. Supervisor, Sam Bischoff. Art director, Jack Okey. Photography by Ernest Haller. Film editor, Thos. Pratt. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Running time 64 minutes as seen on Coast. Release date, May 12, 1934.

The Party's Over

(Columbia)

Domestic Comedy

Dealing with a familiar situation, this domestic comedy stacks up as pleasing entertainment which probably will find its best success in the neighborhood and smaller theatres. Keyed to a human interest pitch, smile-laugh provocation is its objective. Continually clean, the light drama and natural romance included serve to accentuate the comedy basis. It moves speedily and laughs crop out in dialogue, action and situations. Basically, it's a good little picture, the kind that can be recommended as entire family amusement. The picture suggests many unique interest-creating showmanship possibilities.

In understandable words it's simply the story of a nutty family that made a sucker of its only worthwhile member. The mother, presuming on filial devotion, carries on her social ambitions in a harum-scarum style. A tippling father continues his sly philandering and extravagant habits, firm in the knowledge that the breadwinning son never will permit scandal to cross the domestic threshold. A love-mad sister marries a would-be super-egotistic crooner who won't work for less than $1,000 a week. A collegiate brother gets in a jam with a waitress. With all the mouths to feed and keep out of trouble, only his secretary has an inspiring grain of sense. It's she who loves him but has to leave him, before he realizes that he has a life and an art of his own to live. It's she who provokes the situation that forces the harassed boy to put the whole works on its own that he may be free to do the things and live the life he wants for himself.

The show is well acted, as realism is tempered with theatric license. While the cast boasts names that are commercially valuable, the real adaptable showmanship is in the story itself. If not every family, at least every neighborhood has a boy or girl who is Stuart Erwin's character counterpart. The way in which the Blakely family gets by is common, ordinary, over the back fence gossip. The picture is simple in its appeal in that it merely mirrors affairs which almost every American family has experienced or knows about. It should be backed up by a smart advance, which does not hesitate to be a bit satirically provocative.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Circus Clown

(First National)

Romance, Comedy, Drama

The circus comes to town for the kids and those grownups who enjoy hokum amusement in this latest Joe E. Brown picture. It's a canned three-ring circus; the whole melange—big tents, clowns, freaks, acrobats, barkers, roustabouts, animals and parades—all serving as the atmospheric background and providing the excitement for its basic romance-drama tinged human interest character comedy. Those qualities naturally suggest the colorful, flamboyant exploitation that should precede its public presentation.

The story is of little consequence, merely serving as the medium to carry Brown through his various disappointing, triumphant and exciting experiences. The circus background is the prime salable asset through which popular interest can be created. It presents Brown in a dual role. Chuckles is the father gone sour on the business, who strives to keep Happy, the son, away from the big tops. But the blood of the game is in the boy's veins. There's drama in his experiences. Ambitious to be a star performer, he is made a roustabout. There's a little romantic tingle in his association with the girl on the flying trapeze. But the real entertainment is in the comedy situations. There's Chuckles shaming the lion with his roaring powers; the sequence in which he falls in love with the alluring bareback rider only to discover that the "her" is a "him," with consequent disaster to the her-him; a fun thrill when Chuckles mistakes the wild lion for his pet cat, saving himself only by a super-special Joe E. Brown wide mouthed roar; Chuckles substituting for Alice's drunken brother in the flying trapeze final.

The young folk are the patrons to go after for this show. Next to them follow the grown-up circus fans. Sell it to both with all the color and excitement utilized by the circus advance men, circus music, clowns, special fronts, specially decorated fronts and even a trick kid pet parade.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back

(United Artists - 20th Century)

Melodrama

Comedy mystery melodrama is the entertainment and showmanship center of this picture. It's a series of surprises. Each prepares the audience to expect a blood-freezing thrill; but instead of provoking screams, shudders, gasps and stopped hearts, it delivers, every time, a healthy thump on the funny bone. With value in performance and presentation continually moving with punch and speed with an unusual brand of suspense utilized, it's both class and mass entertainment.

The show is based on a tried and proved mystery entertainment idea and every fun-creating possibility of that premise is cleverly worked to the limit. At the same time a novel comedy twist is applied and the fun starts all over again. It deals with the adventures of an amateur detective. There's the girl in the case for romance; the menacing wily Oriental and his henchmen for thrill and mystery; the harassed Scotland Yard Inspector who would rather put the amateur detective in jail than his suspects; cryptic coded radiograms, disappearing corpses, sliding doors, dungeons, all kinds of ruses, traps and deliverances to color the basic plot with a realistic hokum. And to keep the whole thing going, and give it its deft comedy verve, there's a bridegroom who must accompany the amateur detective on his hectic adventures rather than be with his bride on their wedding night.

While being catchy entertainment in its own right, "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back" points a satirical finger of fun at all the thrill and horror pictures. Wild Boy

(Gaumont-British)

Sporting Melodrama

Greyhound racing provides the background and offers the main appeal in this Gainsborough production, which is reminiscent in plot of many horse track melodramas in which attempts to dope the favorite are defeated by a last minute victory. The originality and realism of the dog-racing scenes staged at the London White City track compensate for the familiarity of the story material, which is popular enough in any case.

The dog, the real hero of the film, is played by Mick, the Miller, a British racing greyhound which enjoys wide popularity in its native country. Mick is known in America. Other good exploitation possibilities are offered by the last scenes in which the dog, stolen, escapes to make his way through the streets of London to the White City and a thrilling victory in the Dog Derby. Shots of a coursing meeting, good pictures of greyhound training methods, and effective crowd scenes are other points in favor of the picture.

The story is this: Wild Boy, a greyhound puppy, is the main asset left to an orphaned girl, Marjorie Warren. Billy Grosvenor saves the pup from drowning while chasing a hare, falls in love with the grateful Marjorie, and buys the pup at a forced sale of the Warren kennel. Another pup of the same litter, Black Prince, is bought by one Redfern. Both dogs develop into champions and Redfern, a crook, failing to bribe Billy to withdraw his dog from the Derby, tries to steal Wild Boy on the eve of the final heat, but Wild Boy turns up unaided at the last moment.

Sonnie Hale, Gwyneth Lloyd, Lyn Harding, Leonora Corbett and the Flanagan-Allen team, as comedy auctioneers and bookmakers, are the humans, but the film stands on its sporting appeal plus what star value Mick the Miller possesses for American greyhound racing fans. —Allan, London.

Once to Every Bachelor

(Liberty)

Dramatic Romance

This modern dramatic romance is entertainment and affords several unique interest-creating showmanship angles. Well acted and so directed that the primary subject of the story is always dominant, it tinges its different romantic premise with some natural relevant comedy, introduces some nicely gauged menacing drama, and with suspense cleverly used in the anticlimax, produces a surprise punch that the preview audience liked.

The story deals with a familiar, easily understood situation. Because of his gay playboy method of living, Stewart faces the possibility of having his income shut off. Unwittingly sheltering Natalie, fleeing from the police, he decides, even though he is the much appreciated flame of Mrs. Bryant, on a strictly business marriage with the girl. As the locale shifts to Paris, Aunt Henrietta, controller of the money bags, is glad to know that her wastrel nephew has settled down. The jealous Julie seeks to upset the apple-cart, but Henrietta quickly puts her in her place. However, as Stewart grows romantic, Natalie still sticks to the marriage for business proposition.

Back in New York, Uncle John, previously presented as a straight comedy relief, discovers that the cards to be used at Stewart's poker party that night are marked. In the meantime, Racketeer Rocco has thought it a good idea to blackmail Natalie. Sending his agent, Schuyler, also a poker-playing and winning confere of Stewart, to the party, Natalie sits in, and due to her ability to read the marked cards, hands Mr. Schuyler a neat trimming, getting back an incriminating cigaret case. Then, of course, the marriage for business idea succumbs to real love.

The marketable value of the title should not be overlooked in any campaign. It is one that can readily be adapted to a wide variety of commercial contracts. Likewise the quality of the cast should be stressed.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Thin Man

(MGM-Cosmopolitan)

Mystery Melodrama

Seldom do pictures so effectively combine so many different forms of entertainment normally appealing to so many different classes of patrons as does "The Thin Man." Equally rare are those possessing as much ready-made and commercially valuable showmanship in cast, story and production assets.

Basically it's straightaway hokum, full of the color that enthuses the masses. Paradoxically, it's a smart, sophisticated production for the class crowd. Here's mystery melodrama, with all the thrill and suspense of the hallowed penny dreadfuls; comedy in which there is a laugh in almost every line of dialogue, action and situation; romantic love-interest that's sweet and sympathy stimulating in one phase, rowdy-dowdy in another; the drama of three baffling murders, an enigma to the police (played straight but with an unique comedy twist for a change) as the guilty finger points at four or five suspects. The mystery is solved by a retired detective, who'd rather drink and play around with his wealthy wife and dog than be bothered by any detecting.

As this is entertainment that entertains, it's also a showmanship medium affording those who will play it a grand opportunity to demonstrate their business building talents. The yarn from which it's adapted was a "Book of the Month" story, later serialized in the Hearst papers and consequently familiar to many readers. It offers William Powell in the type of role in which he has enjoyed his best success—the detective. Similarly, Myrna Loy has a semi-exotic character. All the way down the line, the other players, each of whom in turn is a principal, turn in fine performances. The manner in which this story has been brought to the screen is worthy of more than a little attention.

As for exploitation possibilities accruing to the who's-the-killer-and-why idea and the baffling mystery surrounding it, interest quickening showmanship will be limited only by the extent to which ingenuity and purse are stretched. For most practical purposes, billing the show as 100 per cent amusing, thrilling entertainment, with a real surprise in almost every sequence, looks to be the best way of starting it off, and after that there's the word-of-mouth advertising.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Tomorrow's Children

(Bryan Foy Productions)

Topical Drama

How this picture will stack up as general entertainment in view of the subject treated is difficult to estimate. Basically, it's a topical study in eugenics, a matter currently being widely discussed. It is a frank presentation, from both a pro and anti standpoint, of human sterilization and its possibilities of improving or harming the human race.

Naturally it's dramatic. In that phase it has values of convincing presentation. It gives both proponents and opponents an opportunity to claim the picture as a conclusive argument of their respective positions. Yet as the picture is more controversial than straightaway formula entertainment, its successful presentation is a matter entirely in the hands of those who book it.

Here's the setup: Living in one of the 27 states where sterilization laws are on the statute books, the Mason family is a group of physical and mental misfits. Only the daughter Alice is normally healthy. As her love for Jeff and their marriage plans create dramatic and romantic interest, welfare workers, after first obtaining the parents' consent for sterilization, obtain a court order to operate on Alice. Suspense is built as Dr. Brooks, taking an interest in the girl and being an opponent of sterilization, seeks to convince the hospital heads that the girl should not be touched. In the meantime, Father O'Brien is trying to prevail upon Mrs. Mason to sign an order preventing the operation. Tension is maintained as two misfits, a criminal and a lunatic, are sterilized. In the climax, Mrs. Mason confesses that Alice is not her own daughter. With this information, Father O'Brien and Dr. Brooks obtain a court injunction and arrive at the hospital just in the nick of time to save Alice for Jeff and the babies they hope to have.
